Mr. Hattersley: No. I have made it clear that I do not propose to give way.

Mr. Nicholls rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Gentleman is saying that he is not giving way.

Mr. Hattersley: I have no doubt that weak-minded Government Back Benchers will argue that the medium-term financial strategy has achieved its crucial objective of lower inflation. Some, in an excess of loyalty, may even assert——

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) to refer to Conservative Back Benchers as weak-minded?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Various exchanges take place and I am sure that "weak-minded" is not an unparliamentary term.

Mr. Hattersley: Those who believe that the medium-term financial strategy is still in place and alive and well should consider some of the passages in the Select Committee's report which the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not deal with when addressing the House. I am sure that he omitted to do so only because he was hurried. I repeat that the Select Committee came to a unanimous judgment with a Tory majority under a Tory Chairman. Explicitly on the Government's inflation record, it stated:

"since its first term in office, the rate of inflation has remained broadly unchanged, and has declined in 1986 mainly because of the steep fall in oil and other commodity prices. Domestic symptoms of inflation have been not greatly affected."

I remind the Chancellor of the Exchequer of the figures on which that assertion its based. In June 1983, the retail prices index was 3·7 per cent. This month it is 3·5 per cent. It is forecast on the Government figures that it will rise to 3·75 per cent. by the end of this Parliament.

Mr. Alan Howarth rose——

Mr. Hattersley: No. I shall not give way. More objective predictions suggest——

Mr. Howarth rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should know that the right hon. Gentleman has said he is not giving way.

Mr. Hattersley: I do not want the House to miss the figures, so, because of interruptions, I shall repeat them. In 1983 the retail prices index was 3·7 per cent.——

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The right hon. Gentleman has referred to a Select Committee, and you will recall that a recent Select Committee on Procedure suggested that one of the problems about our debates was that right hon. and hon. Members did not indulge in the old-fashioned practice of giving way, thus ensuring that there was not proper debate. Will you remind the right hon. Gentleman of the findings in that Select Committee's recent report?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the hon. Gentleman knows, that is not a point of order for me.

Mr. Hattersley: I shall try a third time. In 1983 the RPI was 3·7 per cent. It is 3·5 per cent. this month and rising, and it will be 3·75 per cent. by the end of the year, on the Treasury's own estimates. On a more honest and objective analysis, it will be over 4 per cent.

Sir William Clark (Croydon, South): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: No.

In the debate on the economy on 6 November the Chancellor was absolutely explicit about how the Government should be judged. He said that the Government must be judged by what has happened since 1983. Does the right hon. Gentleman accept that criterion, which is his own, for the inflation rate? If so, the Government have not only failed to hold down inflation during this Parliament's lifetime, but will have presided over a period during which inflation has risen.

I suspect that the Chancellor will shift his ground, as he usually does, and will say that the inflation rate has to be measured from 1980; that being the time when the Government, having inherited an inflation rate just below 10 per cent. and having pushed it up to more than 21 per cent., began to bring it down again. As the Chancellor is arguing with me about the base date, I shall ask him—and I have said that I shall give way to him—to tell us the date from which he believes that the Government's economic record should be judged.

In a single speech, in one and a half columns of Hansard, the Prime Minister chose five different base years as the basis for her phoney statistics: 1979 for manufacturing productivity; 1981 for economic growth: 1982 for public spending; 1983 for manufacturing output; and 1985 for manufacturing investment. The Prime Minister talks as though the Government came to power bit by bit, when really they are disintegrating bit by bit. The country will want to judge the Government on all their seven years in office. Let me remind the Chancellor of what they involve. Two million full-time jobs have been lost, unemployment has increased by 2 million, manufacturing output is down by 7·5 per cent. and manufacturing investment is down by 17 per cent. Moreover, our manufacturing balance of trade has been turned from a £4 billion surplus into a £4 billion deficit.

One could go on and on listing the failures of the past seven years. The point is that the failures of the past have all been justified on the promise that as long as we stick to the medium-term financial strategy, everything will come out right in the end. But we now conclude that the medium-term financial strategy has lost its purpose, its heart and its central core. In the words of the Select Committee, the Government "lacks a coherent strategy for the setting of fiscal strategy".

The Select Committee went on to say, in another point that the Chancellor did not deal with, that it

"notes the disappearance of the Treasury's former claim that the MTFS would damp down inflationary expectations."

If the Chancellor wants to argue with that, I shall certainly give way to him. Even the promises on public expenditure, the commitments that so excited those new, hard-faced Conservatives who have done well out of privatisation, have been broken. Whether or not the Chancellor likes it, the Select Committee is explicit and precise in describing his change of stance and position.

The Chancellor's first intention was a reduction in public expenditure. His second intention was to hold it constant in real terms. Now, the best that he promises, or the worst in terms of public services, is that it should be held steady as a percentage of gross domestic product. The truth is that he has constantly failed to hit his targets on spending and on money supply, and now he has left that whole policy to disintegrate.

The medium-term financial strategy has disintegrated partly because of the Government's hope that they can now suddenly pretend to be enthusiasts for public expenditure, and enthusiastic about the public services that that expenditure provides. But the real reason for the collapse of the medium-term financial strategy is its own internal contradictions.

In the real world, the medium-term financial strategy could never have worked. It is now dead, and it is being kept from putrefaction by the one firm item of economic policy that the Government possess and the one firm item of economic policy that the Select Committee identified: the commitment to historically high interest rates, which are very much higher than those found in our competitor countries and in our more successful industrial neighbours. The Select Committee quoted the Chancellor's extraordinary words, when he said:

"the guiding principle of policy is to maintain . . . a level of short term interest rates that will deliver the monetary conditions needed to reduce inflation."

The Chancellor made some references to Shakespearean scholars. As he seems to be in a textual and semantic mood, I shall ask him when short term turns into long term. After all, we have had historically high short term interest rates for longer than ever before. He has maintained interest rates at such a high level that manufacturing industry has been unable to afford the new investment that would enable it to expand output and exports, and to drag our balance of payments back into surplus. It is, of course, the Chancellor's interest rate policy that has increased the RPI this month. It was his interest rate policy that pushed mortgage rates to record heights.

Our real interest rate now stands at 8 per cent., and that uniquely high interest rate is the crutch on which the ailing pound now leans. But it is the policy of high interest rates that has put the pound under pressure, and that has done the damage to sterling from which we now suffer. We all know why there has been pressure on the pound and when it will reappear. International opinion has judged that we cannot pay our way in the world and that without oil we shall become a debtor nation. Those countries have seen oil income fall and they know that it is running out. They have also witnessed the Chancellor's complacency in the face of that. Three months ago he told us that we had lost half of our oil income in 25 weeks and had survived.

[Mr. Hattersley]

We have survived but at the price of a balance of payments that has moved from surplus into deficit, and at the price of interest rates that penalise home owners and incapacitate industry. That is why, in the long term, high interest rates are putting such pressure on sterling. They have undermined our capacity to export, because they have prevented manufacturing industry from expanding, held back investment, and made it impossible for manufacturing industry to fill the gap left in our balance of payments by the reduction in oil revenues.

We have survived, as the Chancellor said, at the cost of creating a vicious spiral. The monthly announcement of balance of payments deficits undermines sterling. Interest rates are then increased to prop up sterling. The interest rate increases themselves debilitate industry, making it impossible for it to export, and further undermining our balance of payments. The idea that the Chancellor should think that high interest rates are an unequivocal boon when they are destroying manufacturing industry, destroying our export potential, undermining our balance of payments and therefore bringing fundamental pressure on the pound, answers many of the questions about which international opinion now ponders and wonders.

Because of industry's inability to invest, to produce and export, last month we had the brief and crude statistical deception to obscure the balance of payments record during the three months in early autumn. That record was a disaster in August, a catastrophe in September and just plain bad in October. It is against that background that the Chancellor says in his more expansive moods, hoping that he can win a few tawdry votes, that public expenditure is increasing.

As is clear after an analysis of the autumn statement, the real increases in public expenditure that it entails have been very much exaggerated. When the increase is genuine, it is more often than not the result of mistakes rather than intentions. The increase in the social services budget is largely the product of unemployment and therefore higher unemployment benefits. I give the Government credit for that not being their intention when last year's plans were set. On present economic policies, the current level of public expenditure cannot be sustained, for it is being financed by a combination of short-term expediency and long-term profligacy. It is being financed by the sale of public sector capital assets——

Mr. Nicholls: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: When I talk about profligacy, I talk about the sale of valuable national assets, badly underpriced so that the Tory party's friends in the City can get them at bargain prices. If that is not profligacy, I do not know what is. Current public expenditure is being financed by tax income, which has come from the boom in credit and consumption.

Mr. Couchman: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: That boom is sucking in imports and making certain that our balance of payments is in deficit. That extra tax income——

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: That extra tax income — what the Chancellor coyly calls buoyant tax receipts — is the direct result of earnings outstripping the inflation rate — levels of wage settlements which he used to condemn — so I ask the Chancellor again, for I am more than willing to give way to him — [HON. MEMBERS: "Come on."] I ask the Chancellor again, for I am more than willing to give way to him, does he still condemn wage settlements that are moving forward faster than the rate of inflation, and if he does not condemn them—[Interruption.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The right hon. Gentleman must not persist in asking the Chancellor of the Exchequer to intervene——

Mr. Budgen: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is not the attitude of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) an insult to the House? He is not here to have a private conversation with the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He is here to address the whole House. It is no less than an insult to all of us if he gives way only to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Fortunately, it is not my job to determine the attitudes of right hon. or hon. Members. It is my duty to uphold the rules of the House. That was not a point of order.

Mr. Gow: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not your duty to ensure that Members of the House can follow what is being said from the Opposition Front Bench? It is extremely difficult to follow what the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) is saying. His speech is so full of inconsistencies——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. [Interruption.] Order. It is, indeed, difficult to follow the right hon. Gentleman because of the noise from the House. We believe in hearing every point of view, and the House would get on much better if there were not so many interruptions from a sedentary position.

Mr. Nicholls: Further to that point of order Mr. Deputy Speaker. May I ask for clarification of the ruling that you have just made? As I understand it, you said that because the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersely) has refused to give way, on any new points that arise, he cannot be asked to give way on them. Why is the right hon. Gentleman under your personal protection, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and why can we not ask—[HON. MEMBERS: "Withdraw."]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I did not hear what the hon. Gentleman said. It is in order for any hon. Member to try to intervene. It is not in order for him to persist when it is obvious that the Member who has the Floor does not intend to give way.

Mr. Hattersley: I shall ask the Chancellor my question again. For some years he has condemned wage increases running ahead of the inflation rate. For some years he has attempted to exhort British industry to hold down those increases. It is that disparity between inflation and earnings that has produced the buoyant economy on which he now relies to meet his tax bills.

Mr. Lawson: Nonsense.

Mr. Hattersely: If the right hon. Gentleman is saying "Nonsense" while sitting down, will he get up and tell us where the new buoyancy is coming from?. Which of the taxes, VAT or otherwise, is providing the extra revenue? Is it the result of the disparity between earnings and prices? Answer came there none. What the Chancellor knows, and why he is wise not to speculate on those matters, is that the expedient on which he relies for paying his temporary bills cannot last for ever. Sooner or later there will be no more national assets to sell off. I describe that policy as profligacy again. Sooner or later the export — import imbalance will be so great that the right hon. Gentleman will not be able to continue in his present vein. The election tactic that the Government now operate is to pray that they can win the race between a general election and a sterling crisis, and in the meantime spend now in the hope that they will be able to make the country pay later.

Sir William Clark: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hattersley: No.

The tax cuts that I confidently predict will come in the next Budget, generally financed out of asset sales, cannot be sustained. Were the Tories to win the election, their victory would be followed by a massive increase in taxation——

Mrs. Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Like the last time.

Mr. Hattersley: The hon. Lady is absolutely right. They did it last time. They did it in 1979. I was about to make the point, and I am grateful to her for making it for me, but I shall repeat it. An election victory would be followed by a massive increase in taxation, as it was in 1979. More essential services would be jeopardised by privatisation. There would be more public expenditure cuts. Lord Young's manipulation of Government statistics would be abandoned and even the official unemployment total would begin to rise again.

That leads me to my one criticism of the Select Committee. It seemed surprised as well as offended that the Chancellor chose to make his policy speeches outside the House to carefully selected audiences of bankers and stockbrokers. They like his policy. His policy has pampered them at the expense of manufacturing industry. They like his policy because it has made them rich while it has increased poverty and unemployment. Outside the charmed circle of his own choosing, the Chancellor relies on bogus statistics and fraudulent forecasts. He may care to comment on this, or tell the Minister of State to do so. He is, after all, the Chancellor who dare not publish his own Department's report on the economic effect of income tax cuts. The truth is that the Chancellor has been rumbled. What made him in such a savage temper today is the fact that he was rumbled by a Select Committee with a Tory majority. That Committee proved — and the country knows it — that the Chancellor lives on arrogance, faked figures and borrowed time. That is why we will vote against his autumn statement tonight.

6.40 pm

Mr. Terence Higgins (Worthing): I greatly welcome the positive response of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee. Its task is to monitor the operation of his Department and to report to the House on the basis of the evidence that it has received. I believe that it has carried out that duty and provided a better foundation for debate than would otherwise have been the case.

Before I consider some of the technical matters to which reference has already been made, I should comment on one or two of the remarks made by my right hon. Friend. If I recall correctly, he sought to say that he did not blame the Committee for its report. I am sure that I speak on behalf of every member of the Committee when I state that we accept full responsibility for what was said in the report and that we reported on a unanimous basis. Of course, we take advice from those who have kindly agreed to give us advice, but the analysis and the report are entirely the responsibility of Committee members who have thought out matters for themselves. The report is based on a Chairman's draft, which I prepared. Indeed, I have done little else for the past three weeks or so except prepare drafts for one Committee or another.

It is wrong of my right hon. Friend to suggest that the report is not the responsibility of the Committee or, as he preferred to put it, that he did not blame the Committee for what was said in the report. Those from outside who advise Committees do so for a pittance compared with what they usually earn. They provide us with expect advice across a wide range of opinion. They are not taken from one or other part of the political spectrum.

There is a more fundamental point. It is a recognised practice in the House that one does not attack the Government's advisers. The reason for that is sound— they are unable to defend themselves. It is unfortunate, therefore, that my right hon. Friend has sought to ascribe blame——

Mr. Lawson: They can defend themselves.

Mr. Higgins: Perhaps they can, but not in the House. However, with respect to the Chancellor, it is not a question of their advice being the Committee's report. That is totally and utterly wrong. The report is that of the Committee. My colleagues on the Committee have developed considerable expertise in the light of the numerous inquiries that have been made.

I should also mention that the Committee has a wide spectrum of members ranging from the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen). That is a wide spectrum, and there is much opinion in between.

Mr. Budgen rose——

Mr. Higgins: With respect, I should like to finish.

As economic policy changes, so, of course, the Committee's angle of attack when taking evidence from the Chancellor is also inclined to change. None the less, the report was the unanimous report of the Committee.

Mr. Budgen: My right hon. Friend seems somewhat offended by the Chancellor's attack upon the Committee. We made a vigorous attack upon some parts of the Government's economic policy. It would have been rude and patronising if the Chancellor had not dealt with such criticism as vigorously as we attacked the Government's policy. There need be no collective sense of irritation because the Chancellor has taken the opportunity to criticise our report with the same vigour as we criticised his policies.

Mr. Higgins: I cannot agree more. I began my remarks by saying that I greatly welcomed the Chancellor's positive response. On one side of the fence is the business of the Select Committee and on the other side is the Chancellor. It is our task to monitor his actions.

I want to quote from the report because that is the nub of the Chancellor's concern. Paragraph 4 states:

"In previous reports we have drawn attention to the fact that, although the Government has been successful in achieving a number of its economic ends, the manner in which these have been achieved has differed from that originally propounded in successive versions of the Medium Term Financial Strategy. It is important that economic policy should be flexible, and able to deal with circumstances not originally foreseen, but we think it would be more appropriate, when policy has obviously changed, for the Chancellor to admit it. Otherwise it is more difficult for us to learn lessons from past experience or indeed to ascertain what present policy really is."

We drew attention to a number of changes that have taken place. In reply, the Chancellor has stressed that the objectives of economic policy have remained the same. We do not dispute that. Indeed, we emphasise that that is so. However, it is absolutely clear that once we have the objectives—which may be common on both sides of the House—the policy that is adopted to implement those objectives may vary greatly. I do not think that it can be seriously argued, in the light of the clear quotations that we made from previous Budget and autumn statements, that the policy has not changed. We have explained in great detail how it has changed, and I do not understand why the Chancellor objects to admitting that it has changed. No one will complain if the Government show flexibility in these matters.

It is right that we should acknowledge the Government's achievements, not least in controlling inflation. That is very important if we are ever to combat the basic problem of unemployment. We should also recognise the extent to which employment has been increasing and the rate of economic growth.

It would be extraordinary if any Select Committee came out with the view that everything that the Government were doing was marvellous. That is not our function. Inevitably, the Chancellor must recognise that Committees tend to be critical, and to a large extent that is their proper function.

I want to spend a moment or two detailing some of the changes, the most obvious of which has occurred in connection with public expenditure. The Government started off by saying that they were going to cut public expenditure in real terms. Then they gradually moved to a different position and said that it would be held roughly constant in real terms and would decline as a percentage of GNP. That is a radical change in policy, and for many Conservative Members it is a considerable disappointment. The Chancellor must recognise that change. I do not see how it can sensibly be argued that that is not the case.

The report details the change in the use of monetary indicators. We complain not that the Chancellor has been flexible, but that he insists that he has not been flexible. A similiar observation was made about the exchange rate.

I want to consider a technical point made by the Chancellor. We say in the report that the public sector financial deficit is a better guide than the public sector borrowing requirement to what is really happening. That is entirely consistent with a point that the Committee has stressed—that the PSBR is not a good guide when the receipts from privatisation are treated as a reduction in public expenditure. We have consistently argued that that is an absurd way of looking at it. We make the constructive suggestion that the public sector financial deficit is a better guide.

In his speech, the Chancellor objected to the figures that were quoted. He said that some were out by as much as £1 billion. However, if one were to look higher up the page, one would see that the PSBR is subject to a margin of error of something like £2·5 billion. That may be so. We are perfectly happy for the Chancellor to correct the figures if we have got them wrong. After all, he has more advisers than we have and I would not criticise those advisers whatever they came up with. We are perfectly happy to accept the figures that the Chancellor puts forward, but we believe that the concept that we have advanced in what we hope is a practical suggestion is a better guide than that previously advanced. We appreciate that there is a certain convenience about the public sector borrowing requirement—everyone is used to it and to the problems that go with it—but to argue that it is an ideal measure is, in our view, a mistake.

Mr. Lawson: I have listened carefully to what my right hon. Friend has said. If he wishes—I quite understand this and I have made this point on many, many occasions—if he wishes to look at what the PSBR would be if privatisation proceeds were added back in, in other words, if they were not counted as negative expenditure, it is a perfectly reasonable thing to do. But that is no case for looking at the public sector financial deficit, which is a different aggregate, done on an accruals basis with an accruals adjustment in it, on an estimated basis, and fluctuates in a very unpredictable way and which has no relation whatsoever to underlying conditions. What he has not explained is why, if his problem is privatisation proceeds, he does not simply look at the PSBR with privatisation proceeds added on top and why he goes to the PSFD. That is what I do not understand.

Mr. Higgins: I fear that I do not have time to deliver the Chancellor a lecture on the subject, but there are substantial arguments — quite apart from the point about privatisation proceeds — in favour of the public sector financial deficit. Indeed, I have argued consistently that the whole thing should be examined in a balance sheet context as well, because that is very important. The Chancellor says that the public sector financial deficit is subject to random fluctuation, but he knows perfectly well that the public sector borrowing requirement does not distinguish between intended changes in borrowing and changes resulting from subsequent external events, so the same argument applies equally to the PSBR. I hope that we can have a debate about this. One of our recommendations — indeed, our only recommendation, as the Chancellor rightly pointed out — is that these matters should be debated on the Floor of the House, not outside. I therefore welcome his intervention and hope that we shall be able to pursue this matter.

I am anxious not to take up too much time because much has already been wasted, but I should like to deal with two further points. With regard to exchange rates and interest rates, I commend paragraph 19 of our report to the House. In that paragraph we state our belief that at present monetary policy is uncertain because the Government wish to prevent interest rates from rising and the exchange rate from falling. As this relates to changes in policy, I feel bound to point out in parentheses that, although there has been a reduction in the PSBR which I welcome, there has not been the corresponding fall in interest rates that was envisaged when the policy was originally put forward. As we point out in our report, that is because the exchange rate has been given greater emphasis than before and essentially we now have an interest/exchange rate policy.

The Opposition will be less happy about my next point. I have no doubt at all that if there is any possibility—I do not myself recognise it—of a hung Parliament or a Labour Government there will inevitably be downward pressure on the exchange rate as the election approaches due to fears aroused by Opposition policy. If the Chancellor does not want the exchange rate any lower, as he has stated, there will be upward pressure on interest rates—but he does not want that either. Therefore, as our report points out, there is a real dilemma that the Chancellor has not spelt out in detail and that he did not deal with today.

Having said all that, I think that in many ways the Chancellor is not over-optimistic. I do not share the concern expressed by some about the balance of payments. I think we are very fortunate that exchange rates have moved as they have, with no great change in relation to the dollar but a substantial reduction in relation to the deutschmark. To the extent that we buy in dollars and sell in deutschmarks, that is a good thing. Given the so-called J-curve effect, we may reasonably hope that the balance of payments will remain secure. Therefore, I do not share the concern expressed by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley).

Finally, one of the functions of the Select Committee is to warn of impending problems. We regard that as an important function and we have expressed concern about what the Governor of the Bank of England, in evidence to us last year, described as the overhanging glacier of liquidity. It is a matter for conjecture to what extent comparison of the present situation with the period 1972 to 1974 produces a sense of déjà vu. The Chancellor made a point about MO in his speech today. Nevertheless, the Committee is concerned about the increase in liquidity. It is, indeed, an overhanging glacier, but it is largely frozen at the moment due to a combination of interest rates and expectations about inflation. Like my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, I believe that inflation will remain at a very low level—a better level, as he rightly points out, than we have known for 20 years or more. Nevertheless, there is a difficult situation and we should expect the Chancellor, in the light of our recommendation, to analyse it in the House, not just outside. If an important statement is to be made on monetary policy, it is right that it should be made in this House.

I have spoken for longer than I expected because my speech was not precisely as I expected. We have pointed out the disappearance of rational expectations from the Government's economic policy, and no one in this place should have rational expectations about what is going to happen next. Having said that, I believe that ours is a constructive report and that our comments are fair. The report is part of a continuing debate, and it is a function of the House of Commons to debate these matters in a serious way. Only if we do that can we fulfil the obligation placed upon us by the electorate to ensure that the economy is managed as effectively as we can arrange. I believe that the Select Committee, having produced a unanimous report on this matter, has made a contribution to the debate—no more, no less. We may be shown to be right or we may be shown to be wrong, but the level of debate and the extent to which policy is examined is far greater than it was before the Select Committee system was set up. I believe that that is an advantage to democracy.

6.57 pm

Mr. David Penhaligon (Truro): I beg to move, to leave out from "House" to the end of the Question, and to add instead thereof,

"rejects the Autumn Statement presented by Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer on 6th November, noting that after seven and a half years of the Conservative Government both long-term unemployment and real interest rates are at record levels; further notes that inflation is once again on a rising trend, that earnings are being allowed to increase far ahead of productivity, and that the current account of the balance of payments is moving into rapidly worsening deficit; and therefore calls on Her Majesty's Government to strengthen investment in manufacturing industry, the infrastructure, and training, to negotiate entry into the exchange rate mechanism of the European Monetary System at a competitive rate and to introduce an incomes strategy to reduce the increase in unit labour costs to the level of the United Kingdom's major competitors.".

I congratulate the right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) on opening the debate, as there was very little debate before. The Chancellor's pressing engagement was apparently less pressing than he made out. [HON. MEMBERS: "He has just gone."] I did not expect his patience to stretch so far as to listen to what the alliance had to say. He has never listened before, but he will discover what we have to say when the election comes. [HON. MEMBERS: "Where are your friends?"] There is a higher proportion of alliance Members here than of any other arty. [HON. MEMBERS: "An alliance of one."]

The Select Committee report makes the obvious point that what were thought to be the all-important guides have been dropped. I tried to intervene to ask the Chancellor exactly what were the distortions of M3 to which he referred. I suspect that there is some truth in his claim that M3 does not accurately record for the nation's interest all that it was thought to record. Some of us never thought that it did. Nevertheless, I should have liked to ask the Chancellor exactly what had allowed M3 to reach 20 per cent. in real terms but 23 per cent. in absolute monetary terms. Unfortunately, he did not want to reply.

It is clear from the Select Committee report and from the comments of the Opposition spokesman that there is general recognition that interest rates are the Chancellor's chief weapon today. High interest rates have become endemic in the economy. Few hon. Members are prepared to argue through the reason why the Chancellor is pursuing high interest rates and to outline an alternative.

The Chancellor has admitted once or twice why he is pursuing high interest rates. I believe that he is pursuing high interest rates because he knows that, with such conditions, the pound is likely to sustain a higher value. Not many would argue with that. It is a deliberate ploy to make exports dearer and imports cheaper. Manufacturing industry therefore has difficulty selling abroad and at home. The Chancellor pursues that policy because he wants to put maximum pressure on what he believes to be the engine of pay settlements that are above what he considers a tolerable level.

I am willing to continue the argument through, whereas the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr.

[Mr. David Penhaligon]

Hattersley) is not. I believe that pay settlements during the past several years have been higher than is in the nation's interests. If we want to restore our manufacturing strength and to give some of our young people a real chance in productive employment, we have to do something about pay settlements. As the amendment says, I and my party believe that the method lies with an income strategy which, if announced and discussed during a general election campaign, would command much support, bearing in mind the fact that the alternative is how the Government are running the economy now. High interest rates are destructive. I understand the reason for the Chancellor keeping them high, but there is a less destructive way in which to tackle the problem.

I am not surprised that the debate has drifted somewhat wide of the autumn statement—we have to discuss the general trend and what policies are being pursued. I am deeply disturbed by several things. It is said with increasing optimism by Conservative Members that we might be entering a period in which the number of registered unemployed people declines. That may well be true, but it is worth remembering why. There are four principal reasons. First, we have had 18 recalculations of the number of unemployed. Secondly, we have the restart interview. My constituency was one of the trial areas, so I have some knowledge of restart, and I am not impressed. Thirdly, there has been a credit boom which is generating employment in shops. Fourthly, the Government have an enormous special measures programme.

The jobs involved, which are real for the people who have them, fall a long way short of the self-sustaining real employment that we heard so much about in 1979. I do not believe that even that which we have is sustainable for long. We now have 1·2 million people who have been unemployed for more than one year, a manufacturing surplus of £5·5 billion has fallen to a deficit of more than £3 billion and interest rates are the highest in the western industrial world. They are probably 8·5 per cent. in Britain, which is three or four points higher than elsewhere.

The irony of the autumn statement is that the Chancellor has presented figures which, within his limited ambitions, balance the books, but he has managed to balance the books only because his policies are failing. The Government are near to balancing the books and might be able to make tax cuts, but it is not because their policies have been a success. Consumer credit has increased from 45 per cent. of average annual disposable income in 1979 to 70 per cent. today. We have overtaken the United States in consumer credit during the past 18 months. Pay rises are too high.

Mr. Alan Howarth: If the hon. Gentleman is concerned about the increase in consumer credit, does he believe that the remedy is higher interest rates?

Mr. Penhaligon: I did not accuse the Chancellor—[HON. MEMBERS: "Answer."] I do not claim to know the answer to everything but, unlike other hon. Members, I am stupid enough to have a try.

I did not argue that the Chancellor pursues high interest rates to reduce consumer credit. Consumer credit is out of hand because of its availability and we will have to develop some method of controlling it. We will have to revert to artificial controls such as we had several years ago. I remember, when I was first interested in politics, that Budgets were dominated by charts which said that we could borrow 25 per cent. as opposed to 30 per cent. of the price of a television. If the House applied its mind to the consumer credit boom, it might make progress. I am not arguing that interest rates are the solution — the Chancellor has demonstrated that they are not.

The Chancellor's programme might be able to deliver tax cuts, but only because of the failure of his policies. He gets a tax break on the consumer credit boom in the shape of VAT and corporation tax. Most of the money seems to be going on consumer goods, and the Chancellor gets a 15 per cent. cut. The vendor gets a profit—at least, I hope he does—and the Chancellor gets a break on that as well.

As the Chancellor has said, he has had an unexpected tax break from the consumer boom. He also gets a break from the pay rises which he and I believe are too high. He has also gained from public asset sales.

I shall not argue the economic merits of that, but the fact remains that all those forms of income cannot be sustained. The credit boom cannot continue for ever and we cannot continue to sell public assets. I hope that high pay rises will end too, because they are a self-destruct mechanism. The three pillars of the Chancellor's fortunate position are unsustainable or self-destruct mechanisms. His position can be sustained for one quarter of one third of a Parliament at best, but no long-term recovery for Britain is built in.

The only alternative that has been proposed today is the alliance amendment. We are drawing near to a general election. We do not know when it will be, but we will be nearer to it tomorrow than we were yesterday. It is amazing that, in a major economic debate, there is no official Opposition amendment saying what they would do.

We make it clear what our fears are and what we believe is an alternative. We must start to invest in manufacturing industry, infrastructure and training. We must negotiate entry into the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system at a competitive rate and introduce an incomes strategy to reduce the increase in unit labour costs to the level of our major competitors.

Some hon. Members, when trying to be elected to Parliament, are afraid to say, "Elect us to power and we shall keep your wages down." They are right that that does not sound like a ringing phrase which, when delivered to the nation, will cause it to vote for them. At the general election this Bench will explain to the British people why, without an incomes strategy, there is no alternative to the way in which the country is at present run, no hope for young people and no re-establishment of our manufacturing base. Without that ingredient, at best we carry on as we are and at worst have a Government who not only have no incomes policy but who spend money as if it grows on trees. Therefore, we shall vote for our amendment, believing that it makes a useful contribution to the debate.

7.10 pm

Mrs. Marion Roe (Broxbourne): I welcome the autumn statement and its reaffirmation of the Government's determination to achieve the conditions in which this country can flourish. In particular, the statement emphasised two key points: first, that rigorous control of public expenditure will always be vital to the economy, and, secondly, that that has been the base of economic growth which has allowed for increased resources for priority programmes.

I shall concentrate on the provision for local government and taxation policy. Local government receives the largest increase in the changes that have been outlined. It continues to have a significant effect on public expenditure, and the increase for 1987-88 alone is some £4 billion. In a single year, taxpayers will contribute through aggregate Exchequer grant an additional £1·5 billion.

In theory, that should keep rate rises low—at worst, in line with inflation. Yet we are already hearing rumours of large rate rises planned in some authorities, particularly in the London boroughs. At the same time the Audit Commission has reported that the financial behaviour of some authorities is heaping up trouble for the future. Some authorities have entered into financial arrangements with city institutions, apparently in the belief that they will be bailed out in future. That is alarming.

According to the Audit Commission, in London some £600 million has been borrowed and in Sheffield the figure is £110 million. When repayments start, the citizens of Sheffield and taxpayers will be repaying at a rate of £25 million a year for seven years. That is about 10 per cent. of Sheffield's total budget.

What implications will that have for future public expenditure control? Are these sums included within PSBR figures? There is nothing illegal about these arrangements; either future rates will have to take them into account, or some solution will have to be found by the Exchequer.

We have already heard that Opposition Front-Bench Members have decided to bury their heads in the sand about the activities of those Labour councils. A responsible Government cannot do that. Within the next three years, the problem will have to be solved. It remains to be seen whether the sensible introduction of the community charge will be enough to bring proper accountability to Labour councils. Let us all hope so. With local authority current spending up 9 per cent. this year, the thought of these irresponsibly financed borrowings adding to that is greatly disturbing. We need to hear louder condemnation from the Opposition. Otherwise, ratepayers will begin to realise that they are as unfitted for government as some of their councillors are for local office.

On the tax side, the statement was encouraging. The buoyancy of non-oil revenues would appear to indicate a strong level of underlying economic activity. I congratulate the Government on their achievement of a PSBR unchanged from the Budget forecast, despite the huge drop in oil revenues.

That raises an interesting point. We have heard that the Opposition plan to include in their manifesto for the next election a pledge to raise £3·5 billion by excess taxation of people whom they describe as very rich. Once again, their thinking seems to be set in old, failed policy.

A recent conference organised by the Adam Smith Institute concluded that there was increasing evidence to suggest that reductions in income tax would lead to a greater overall revenue for the Treasury. The consequences of that should be examined, particularly in relation to the boost it would provide to economic activity and entrepreneurial flair. At a time when our major economic competitors, regardless of political persuasion, are cutting tax, we need to examine as carefully as possible the feasibility of extensive reductions in rates.

Finally, I should like to congratulate the Government on their resolve to pursue the reform of personal taxation, in particular through the mechanism of transferable allowances.

7.16 pm

Mr. Robert Sheldon (Ashton-under-Lyne): We heard a distinguished contribution from the right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins). He stated the case, not only for the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, distinguished and important though it is, but for all Select Committees when he pointed out that the Government rubbished his Committee's report. That is utterly wrong.

Select Committee members are chosen by the House. Their task is to report to the House and inform us of the views of several individuals, acting together largely, but not always, in a non-partisan way. The Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee has met the finest standards that we have known in that regard. When we look at its work and advisers, it is clear that to diminish them is wrong.

Some years ago, when I was a member of that Committee, I was pleased and surprised that we could pick the best advisers that we could name. We chose them ourselves. In those days we had a rule that, if more than one hon. Member wanted a specialist adviser, that specialist adviser could be selected to help the Committee. We had five specialist advisers and they were the best advisers that we could think of. They all agreed immediately, despite the pittance that they were paid. To abuse them after they have given their distinguished services is utterly wrong, and the Treasury Bench should be aware of that.

Over time, the expertise of the Committee has increased. It does not act over the whole range of responsibilities of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It does not have to attend Cabinet Committees and perform the many other tasks which the Chancellor must do. Therefore, in the areas for which the Committee has responsibility and in which it has an interest, it becomes extremely expert. Together with its expert advisers, it can question policy in a way that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, however able and well-served he is, cannot question it.

The Committee sees people who are at a much lower level than the people whom the Chancellor would normally see. The members of the Committee see the people who initiated a policy, not those who consider its consequences. They question their assistant secretaries and under-secretaries and find out how the policy came to be adopted in the first place. Then, rightly—continuing the practice that was introduced when I was a member of that Committee — they see the permanent secretary or perhaps the special adviser to the Chancellor and then continue the investigation, bearing in mind the knowledge that they have gained from the people who formulated the policy. They see how the policy was adapted.

Finally, the Committee meets the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I have known Committee members who knew more about a matter than the Chancellor. They used to smile indulgently and the Chancellor looked a bit sheepish. Everyone knew that the Chancellor had got it wrong and that the Committee had got it right. They did not make much of that. It is normal for that to happen when a Select Committee with good advisers and good members decides to investigate a matter in which it has an interest. I am delighted to see that tradition exemplified by the character, demeanour, behaviour, interest and concern of the right hon. Member for Worthing, who shows his value not only in that Committee but in the Liaison Committee of which I have the privilege to be a member.

[Mr. Robert Sheldon]

I say to the members of the Committee, "Carry on your work." It is clearly wrong for Ministers to show disdain for such a distinguished Committee. Ministers are servants of the House, as indeed is the Select Committee, which also acts on our behalf.

I agree with the comments of the right hon. Member for Worthing and the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon) on the autumn statement. The amount of money in the economy is a worry to us all. I see from the latest figures that, in October, £2·8 billion of new credit was advanced by finance houses, other specialist creditor guarantors, retailers and bank credit cards. The sums involved are substantial, because house prices have increased enormously.

The hon. Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) asked the hon. Member for Truro whether he wished interest rates to rise. We must go further back than that. We must understand why house prices rose so enormously. A person with a £40,000 house probably bought it some years ago for £20,000. He may have a mortgage of £10,000 on it and he has £30,000 of collateral. When he walks into a finance house or a bank he is welcomed with open arms. Millions of such people are welcomed with open arms in a way they would never have been years ago. They have collateral that only a few people used to have.

We must ask why house prices have risen. One reason was mortgage interest relief. It makes economic sense, not for the nation—heaven forbid—but for the individual to overhouse himself. As soon as he has managed to reach some equilibrium in the purchase of a house, he sensibly looks to the purchase of a larger and more expensive house to make use of some of his available money. In the rush for these bigger and better houses, prices go up. As the prices rise, the collateral goes up, and as the collateral goes up so, too, does the credit advance. That is one of our major problems.

The north-south divide is causing me increasing anxiety. I am an ex-officio director of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Many of my friends have been associated with it for 20 or 30 years. A claim that I make on their behalf is that they tell things as they are. I always tell them, "I know that you are not all Socialists, but for heaven's sake when you see Ministers please do not get involved in questions of money supply and the public sector borrowing requirement. There are clever people in Government who know all about that sort of thing, but you know what they do not know. You know something about orders, expansion and exports. You go there and you feel that they are cleverer than you. You are wrong. In your area, no one knows more than you." So it was with great pleasure and great delight that, on Thursday of last week, I heard the president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and Industry telling it as it is.

We need a wider understanding of his comments, made in the presence of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister changed her speech either because she knew what he was going to say or as a consequence of what he said.

The president repeated the claims made by the chairman of the Conservative party:

"The north of England has only itself to blame for its problems. He said we suffer from self inflicted wounds which were listed as appalling industrial relations, failure to adopt new technology, left wing councils, and doom merchants. He said that the people in the north are complaining that they are not getting a fair share of the nation's resources."

The president discussed those points one by one at a splendid dinner in the heart of Manchester. He said:

"It seems as though we have been giving out some unclear messages. After Tebbit's blast for the North, here is Morris's retort from the regions. Let me take Mr. Tebbit's points one by one. First, industrial relations in Manchester have been traditionally excellent. This is fitting in the city which gave birth to the Trades Union Congress."

I cannot remember a strike taking place in my constituency. The firms are small, largely engineering; they are owned by the person who is there on the shop floor and problems are settled immediately. The trouble is that not as many of those firms exist as existed seven years ago. Just over a third of them are left. They are the small firms that are supposed to have been given encouragement. They are small, medium-tech, highly skilled engineering firms. They should always have a place in any country, whether it is Japan, the United States, France, Germany or wherever. Traditionally, our industrial relations have been excellent.

The president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and Industry mentioned the Tory party chairman's second criticism of the north—its failure to adopt new technology—and said:

"What an inappropriate criticism for the cradle of the world's first programmable computer, headquarters of the National Computing Centre, ICL and Ferranti, and home of Europe's biggest university campus which is heavily biased towards technical innovation."

The president then mentioned his third attack, on Left-wing councils. I remind the House that that chamber of commerce is not a Socialist grouping. He said:

"They are not peculiar to the north west. But frankly we in the business community are making a far better job of partnership with local government than Westminister seems able to do."

The president also said that certain campaigns were a notable example of local business and local authorities working together.

We do not give local government sufficient credit. It is much more efficient than central Government. The advantage of local government is that councillors and employees and anyone connected with it pass by the problems every day on their way to work or on their way home. What do the people in Whitehall see of these problems? They read about them, if they are lucky. No one doubts that there are some silly councils, but there are also some silly civil servants. We must not forget that, nor the fact that there are some useless Ministers, too. We must not assume that the solutions lie in Whitehall, remote from where the problems exist.

We see how the criticisms of the chairman of the Tory party were counterblasted by the president of Manchester chamber of commerce. He said enough to demonstrate his positive belief in and practical commitment to the economic potential of the region. He stated:

"We do have a problem and we do believe a change in central Government policy is needed to help us put it right. It is a problem which, if allowed to get worse, will not just prevent the north west from exploiting its potential but will strangle our national growth. This problem is known . . . as the north/south divide but it is actually much more specific than that. It is the escalating concentration of the nation's wealth and resources in the south east. To illustrate the problem consider the wealth of the average English person. It is made up of income and capital. Let us take income first, or to use the jargon of official statistics 'personal disposable income per head'. Income in every single region other than the south east is less than the national average."

That is the predominant statistic.

The president continued:

"What about the Englishman's capital? The most valuable item most people ever possess is their house . . . In every other region house values were below the national average."

In the south-east, they are well above the national average. He continued:

"We all know that the south east is the richest region. But how many realise that the excess wealth in the south east is now sufficient to balance the deficit in wealth of all the other regions put together?"

That is the price we pay for a policy that is geared and motivated towards the City of London, which produces enormous advantages to those who deal with finance and enormous disadvantages to those who deal with the production of manufactured goods.

The problem was analysed 60 years ago by Winston Churchill when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer. Everyone knows about the problems. The trouble is that the City of London appears daily on the Chancellor's doorstep, whereas the remote regions are visited by the Prime Minister and by other Ministers only now and again.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Does the right hon. Gentleman recall that, during the Labour Government of which he was a distinguished member, when regional policy was in its heyday, the northern regions prospered relative to the south and south-east?

Mr. Sheldon: All that I know is that, during the past seven years, my constituency has lost 35 per cent. of its manufacturing companies. All that I know is that, seven years ago, pay was higher than the national average, whereas it is now lower. Our unemployment was lower than the national average, and now it is higher. That has happened because of the changes in regional policy.

The president of the chamber of commerce went on to mention the implications of the serious gap between north and south. The House is largely divided between north and south, more's the pity. We used to have the enormous advantage of being a united country. Things that happened in one part of the country tended to happen in another, and people's views in one part of the country tended to be similar to views in other areas. The president said:

"The implications of this widening gap for the national economy are serious. We now have severe skill shortages and labour shortages in the south east with high unemployment everywhere else . . . Now we have a growing inability by executives and technical staff to move between the south east and the regions."

The problem is the price of houses.

The president pointed out to the Prime Minister that, in Manchester,

"we search in vain for some indication that Government is adapting its policies to take account of the problem."

There was a time when we addressed ourselves to problems and said that there was nothing insuperable in a problem as important as unemployment. We said, "We cannot be considered as an effective Government unless we can solve those problems." The Government are not dealing with the problem. They are dealing with the unemployment figures, but not with the problems of unemployment, and their failure in that regard is one of the most severe accusations that can be made against them.

The president mentioned the Government's failure to decentralise the Civil Service and commented on the massive public investment in infrastructure to serve the Channel tunnel and to complete the M25. There is some anger about the fact that all the giant projects tend to be in the south of England. He also mentioned the expansion of London's three airports and said that those projects

"will fuel the south east furnace for a generation."

The president went on to say to the Prime Minister:

"The reason you and your colleagues hear so many complaints outside London . . . is because frankly we do not see a willingness to address this problem."

Finally, he quoted from

"an illuminating letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry . . . stating the Government's view that London offers the best professional and legal expertise, communications, living and leisure facilities. With that kind of bias, there is no wonder Government is ignoring the vastly superior investment potential of the regions."

It is useless to talk about a population movement given the housing market. When I was a young man and I went to a new town to get a job, I could walk down the street and get lodgings easily. One cannot do that today. There was much more mobility of labour in those days than there is now. There will be an increasing division in the country. Not just its economic implications but its political implications alarm me. Of course, we will get a few more Labour seats in the north, but that is not the most important thing—[Interruption.] Please do not smile at this. This is one of the most serious problems facing us. When I get out of the train in Manchester, I can sense the deprivation there. When I get out of the train in London, I can sense the affluence here. I may be wrong. Millions of people in the north may be wrong. But the Government must take note of the strength of feeling that exists and must do something about it.

7.36 pm

Mr. Michael Fallon (Darlington): One aspect of the Select Committee's report that cannot be faulted is its analysis of public expenditure. I only wish that the Select Committee had been as ruthless in its examination of the reality of public spending as it was in its examination of the rhetoric used by the Government to explain it.

If the autumn statement was the U-turn that it has been painted, I would have welcomed it. On the contrary, all that it seemed to signal was what we already know: that public spending is increasing and, to confirm what we already fear, that public spending will continue to increase. Between 1979 and 1989, the average annual increase in public spending will be about 1·3 per cent. Under the Labour Government, the average annual increase in public spending was only 1 per cent. Indeed, if we exclude receipts from privatisation and the sales of houses and of land, under this Government average annual public spending has grown by about 1·6 per cent. a year as against a reduction in public spending of just under 1 per cent. during the five years of the Labour Government. The continuing growth in public spending leads me to doubt the Government's new objective of reducing the proportion of gross domestic product consumed by public spending.

[Mr. Michael Fallon]

I enter three caveats on the Government's objective. First, we have not yet reduced the proportion in relation to the figure that we inherited. When we came into office in 1979, it was 43·3 per cent. of GDP; today it is 44·5 per cent. Secondly, the target expressed in the autumn statement is the fairly minimal one of 42·75 per cent. by March 1989, or a reduction of only 0·55 per cent. over 10 years of Conservative government. Thirdly, it is only a relative target. If GDP growth has been averaging 3 per cent. a year since the end of the recession in 1981, the Treasury might ask itself why we cannot expect public expenditure to fall in absolute terms from the total that we inherited in 1979.

There are several reasons for this. First, public expenditure continues to be dominated by public sector pay. We all know that pay and pensions in the public service take a huge slice of public expenditure. What is fascinating, looking back over the past seven years, is that despite all the privatisation that we have achieved, despite the cuts in Civil Service staff, pay restraints across the public sector and the freeze on town hall recruiting, wages and salaries in central and local government consume roughly 27·8 per cent. of central and local government spending — almost the same proportion as when we came into office in 1979. In some individual programmes, the percentage is very much higher: 70 per cent. of the law and order programme, 60 per cent. of the education budget and half of the cost of the National Health Service. We have not yet succeeded in reducing the proportion of public spending consumed by public sector pay.

It should be obvious to all of us that either we impose more central control over the pay arrangements of public service workers, teachers, police, and so on, or we delegate that function to responsible local bodies that can truly reflect the realities of regional labour markets. The middle way — such as we have seen recently with teachers' remuneration and other public sector groups — simply leaves public spending as a whole at the mercy of indirect pressures that Ministers cannot control.

The second reason why we have not succeeded in controlling public expenditure is that so much of it is constructed on the basis of political entitlement rather than continuing need. There are sectional interests, to which reference has already been made. One is the demand for mortgage interest relief on second, third, fourth and fifth mortgages taken out by families. Another is the payment of three quarters of the amount spent on child benefit to people in receipt of no other payment, and thus the payment of a fairly meagre sum to those who need it. The addition of both those sectional interests and their removal could allow a reduction of income tax to 20 per cent.—far beyond my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's target of 25 per cent.

As well as the sectional interests, there are important geographical interests. Most dramatically, there is the consistent and continuing over-provision in Scottish spending. The territorial analysis of the outturn for the year 1985-86 shows that spending per head in Scotland is now £2,362 compared with £1,838 in England. That is a discrepancy between England and Scotland of over 20 per cent., and in some programme areas the difference is very much wider. There is 80 per cent. higher spending on industrial support in Scotland than in the regions of the north-east and north-west directly across the border. There is 94 per cent. higher spending per capita on housing in Scotland than in England.

As well as over-provision of public spending in Scotland — the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) should particularly note this point — there is also a continuing subsidy not to the poorest regions in England but to the wealthiest region. I refer to the subsidies to London and south-east commuters through the £300 million a year subsidy to British Rail and its south-east services and the £275 million a year subsidy to London Regional Transport. It is nonsense that the most prosperous area of the United Kingdom should be in that part of the railway network that is most heavily subsidised.

Thirdly, public spending is still dominated by the demand-led pressures that have been all too familiar from the early years of the Government — agriculture and social security. The containing of such pressures cannot be left to departmental Ministers alone and cannot be dealt with in the annual Public Expenditure Survey Committee round. We need a more concerted attack, combining more than one Department, if we are to get to grips with pressures in both of those sectors.

If I have emphasised the need for continuing restraints on public spending, it is because I wish to seek much further scope for reductions in the burden of direct taxation. I say that because, by my calculations, 7 million people earn less than £7,000 a year. From next year, they will pay a higher rate of income tax than top earners in the United States. We cannot substantially increase their standard of living in any other way than by reducing the tax burden upon them. If they are in the public sector, given low inflation and continuing pressure on public spending, we cannot expect pay awards to be high. If they are in the private sector, given the surplus of labour and the need to keep down our unit labour costs and improve our competitiveness against our European partners, we cannot expect substantial pay awards. The only way in which we can raise the living standards of low-paid people is by deep cuts in personal taxation.

I am certain that only this Government can provide the necessary cuts in taxation to improve the living standards of the low-paid. The Opposition parties cannot help. They can only suggest nominally increasing their wages by printing more money or borrowing it and leaving them to the mercy of higher inflation. Only this Government, by substantially reducing the burden of direct taxation, can improve the living standards of low-paid people. It is a profound disappointment to me that I am not as sure now that we are on the road to meeting that target as I was before the autumn statement.

7.47 pm

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): I hope that the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) will forgive me if I do not follow his argument, because it is one that both time and the Government have passed by. It was an interesting argument, and probably relevant in 1979 and to Government policy in 1980, but now it is best relegated to the deep freeze of history. The hon. Gentleman should carry his own glass case around with him if he continues to put such an argument to a Government like this.

I shall not even deal, as I was going to in my immediate anger, with the Chancellor's vicious and rather silly attack on the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee, because the right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) has well and effectively put the Chancellor in his place. It is best to treat these things dismissively. It was an unnecessary, cheap, petty, vicious and silly attack, and it was entirely in character. All that we can do is to be dismissive of it. I am afraid that this is the way that the Chancellor is beginning to behave before the Committee, and he treated it with contempt in his personal appearances. That is a measure of the man—the fun Chancellor, lightweight in everything but physical shape. If he wishes to act in that fashion, we shall have to judge him on that basis.

A major change has taken place in Government policy. For example, in 1980 we were told that the exchange rate was a mere residual. Clearly, the exchange rate is now central to Government policy and a central technique of management. In many respects, in managing the economy through interest rates being high and exchange rates being kept as high as possible, the Government have reverted to the norms of previous Governments since the late 1950s, even Labour Governments, except that, unlike previous Governments, they do not have the incomes policy that most previous Governments had to deal with the situation.

The Government have reverted to the depressing norm of British economic policy. However, there has been a major change. If the Chancellor were to look at the Labour party's economic policy in 1983, he would find that he has implemented most of our major recommendations. We urged a 30 per cent. devaluation. There has been a 30 per cent. devaluation since the change in the exchange rate at the end of 1982, and it has not been accompanied by the inflationary consequences that the Chancellor predicted. We urged that public spending should be increased and referred to a public sector borrowing requirement—it should have been called a public sector financial deficit because of the Government's privatisation programme—of about £15 billion. Next year we shall have that, too.

We referred to getting rid of monetary targets like M3. The Chancellor is getting rid of them. It is no wonder that he is getting rid of monetary targets like M3, because he has been unable to control them, as the Government said they would control them when they came into office in 1979. Up to the end of September, M3 had been increasing at an annual rate of 18·2 per cent. Because of the increase in M3, inflation should increase substantially on their terms. Since 1979, M3 has increased by 165 per cent., yet prices have increased by only 65 per cent.

What, then, about the connection that the Government told us would be central to their policy of proper control of the money supply leading to control of inflation? The Government have not controlled money supply, but inflation has not increased as it ought to have done, according to their theories.

The Labour party's manifesto of 1983 stated that the balance should be shifted. We said that there ought to be, not tax cuts but Government spending to help jobs. The autumn statement does exactly that. We wanted more jobs to be created through public spending. Those jobs are now being phased in, in an attempt to get unemployment, on the Government's cooked figures, below 3 million before the general election.

In 1983 the Government said that all those policies were impossible, but they have now become a central element of the Government's policy. They are too little and too late, but now they are there. In 1983, however, we were told that our plans were irresponsible. I welcome the Government's conversion, but the Chancellor has much further to go on the learning curve upon which he has now embarked.

Either the lady is for turning, or we should redefine the word "turning". These are major turns in the Government's policy. Government policy is now like "Dallas". There was a certain episode in "Dallas" when the curtain was pulled apart, there was Bobby in the shower, and Bobby was alive, after all. We realised that all the preceding episodes were a dream. Likewise, we realise that all the policies that the Government have implemented since 1979 are a dream. Unfortunately, the nightmare consequences of those policies remain. The fact is that 4 million people remain unemployed, manufacturing capacity has been reduced by 30 per cent., and employment in manufacturing industries has been slashed by 28 per cent. The fact also remains that this country is now a net importer of manufactured goods.

Those are the consequences of policies which now, apparently, are a dream and unnecessary. The economics of incompetence have now been replaced by the economics of electioneering. The Government have wasted the oil by investing the revenue from oil in the productive capacity of our overseas competitors so that those revenues will be dribbled back in rentier dividends to keep up the value of the pound and to destroy and weaken manufacturing—just as happened in the Victorian era when the Tory Government paid similar rentier dividends.

The Government have used the oil revenues to bring in imports, thus destroying jobs in this country. They have wasted the growth which we could have had, which would have improved the quality of life for our people. Since 1979 the growth rate has averaged 1·2 per cent. It is pathetic. It is the lowest growth rate in British history since the war. Because of their incompetent and irresponsible management, that is the achievement of this Government. The Government have thrown away the additional growth that this country could have enjoyed.

What is more important, they have wasted the greatest opportunity in British history to expand. Our oil revenues would have allowed us to ride out the balance of payments problems and to invest in manufacturing industry. It was starved of investment. We have wasted that great opportunity. It will never return. The irresponsible economics of this Government have led to the wasting of that great opportunity. They have taken us back to the balance of payments trap in which previous Governments have wallowed. We are sliding back into the balance of payments trap, haplessly and helplessly, but now we are weaker than we were before the interlude of Tory irresponsibility.

There is under-investment in industry, the work force is under-trained and under-skilled and productivity is still too low. It is lower than the productivity of our competitors. All that the Government have done to improve productivity is to take the advice that I give to the Yorkshire county cricket club: to improve its batting average by shooting the last four batsman. The Government have used that technique to fiddle the increase in the productivity figures.

Labour costs are rising far too rapidly and imports are rising far too rapidly. All that is keeping the economy going is a consumer boom. The Government have helped to generate that consumer boom, but it is financed by credit. It will suck in more imports, which will result in a rapid deterioration next year in the balance of payments. The Government make noises and preach sermons about wage increases, but they do not want them to stop. They are helping to sustain the consumer boom upon which they pin their election prospects next year.

[Mr. Austin Mitchell]

I emphasise what was said by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) about the growing gap between the north and the south. The credit boom is widening the gap between the north and the south. Asset speculation is being fuelled by house prices. Our society is based on the continuous creation of collateral. House prices are increasing, the lending institutions are prepared to lend more money on increased house prices, and the increase in lending on the increased house prices increases the house prices even further, thus making them worthy of more credit. This North sea bubble will burst at some point. It threatens the economic health of the country and it creates a wide gulf between the north and the south. Paper millionaires are being created by house prices in the south. My dog kennel or my garage in London is now worth more than my house in Grimsby. The gulf has now widened to the extent that people cannot move from the north to take jobs in the south simply because they cannot afford to bring their families with them.

The balance of payments problems will cause a major threat to sterling next year. The Chancellor's policy, in the face of that crisis as he described it to the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee in his usual dismissive fashion, is one of non-accommodation. He says that he will force industry to keep down its labour costs by keeping interest rates high, thus keeping sterling high. Industry will be punished by cheap imports. Sterling will be kept high by interest rates. The markets, if left to themselves — and the Government believe in market forces more than I do — will bring down sterling. The market will be defied only on this question of the exchange rate. It will be defied by the prop of high interest rates. That is the discipline on industry. That is the logic of the Chancellor's thinking. To punish industry, and to stop it increasing its labour costs, he will keep interest and exchange rates high.

That is the policy of non-accommodation and reveals that the Government do not understand industry. They do not understand its dynamics, its organic nature or the painful effort of investing, building business, winning markets and trying to hold and expand those markets. They do not understand how industry is threatened by the crude tactics of high interest rates, higher than those of any of our competitors, and by an exchange rate which threatens the markets which industry is desperately trying to retain.

The Government may understand money and fiddled figures like MO and M3, but they do not understand industry as an organic being. Indeed, they treat it rather like an exercise horse, pummelling and jumping on it, but they never try to encourage it or help to make its way easier in the same way as our competitors help their industries. There is no logic in punishing industry in this way. It is being asked to do what it cannot do. Industry cannot control most of the increases in wage costs that are now taking place. How can it? What is it to do — interrupt production and lose its markets?

Because of the skill bottlenecks, industry will have to pay to attract the skills that it needs. Is it to deny itself those skills? How will it survive unless it goes along with the trend of escalating wage costs? The engine of inflation is no longer industry. The inflation that we have now is not goods inflation; it is asset inflation, and its engine is the rich and not industry. The engine is the financial sector, the City, the company directors who are paying themselves more. The engine is the escalation of asset prices in the south-east, and industry is being punished because the Government will do nothing about all those things. All they do is preach sermons while their friends feather their own nests and get fatter at the expense of the country. The Government then punish industry for the consequences of their action. What kind of logic is that, and what understanding does it betray of the dynamics of industry?

The front line of the economy is the internationally traded sector. We are asking that sector to run in a fierce competition with a ball and chain on each leg. On one leg it has high interest rates, which penalise investment and stop industry making improvements in productivity and research and design and all the other improvements that it has to make to the quality of its products, and on the other leg industry has an exchange rate which prices its goods at an uncompetitive level. The exchange rate subsidises imports and taxes exports. That is how it works, and the Government use that quite deliberately to make a section of society better off through cheap imports. They do that in the hope of winning the next election.

We must divert resources to the emerging balance of payments problem if we are to survive and pay our way in the world. The only way to divert resources to the balance of payments is by a competitive currency channelling investment into industry. The Government are creating a once-and-for-all increase in the standard of living. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) said, that is being done particularly in the south-east, because it certainly does not have much effect in Grimsby or in any of the huge areas in the north, the heartland areas of Britain.

The Government are creating that once-and-for-all effect through wage inflation and cheap imports, and as a result they are producing all the classic consequences of over-valuation for sterling and consequent harm to industry and its ability to survive in the world. The Government's policy is essentially a holding operation. The Chancellor is trying to bamboozle the electorate with tricks which he cannot repeat and policies which he cannot sustain in order to keep a rickety show on the road until after the election. He is standing in front of the curtain with that marvellous dead-pan Buster Keaton expression at which he is so good and is trying to keep the electorate amused by unsustainable policies in order to distract attention from the disasters behind the curtain. Those disasters are 4 million unemployed, a rising rate of inflation, national decline, an increasingly shabby society and the growing needs of the Health Service and education and all sectors where public spending is important.

The Chancellor's conjuring tricks are a little more public spending and perhaps tax cuts in the Budget, and he will do that until the election comes along. All the auguries are that the election must now be early rather than late, because of the unsustainable nature of the Chancellor's economics. If the Government win the election, the Chancellor plans deflation, still higher interest rates, a further squeeze and eventual tax increases, because he will have to increase taxes. He will do all those things because they fit the logic of his policy. He will have to increase taxes to replace the revenues that privatised industries are no longer bringing to the Government. Those things will not provide a solution; they are not the way out. They are a holding operation, and that is a disgraceful, irresponsible waste of Britain's time, economic effort, industry and employment.

The Government's policies have manifestly failed, and that is why they are changing them and getting out of policies which are discredited, unacceptable or unworkable. When we form the Government, we will expand the economy. Central to that expansion must be the exchange rate. Since 1968, we have lost 4 million jobs in production industries because we have lost markets at home and overseas. The prime reason for losing those markets is a non-competitive exchange rate. We cannot regain those jobs and begin the work of expansion until we have a competitive exchange rate.

We must regain competitiveness, and we cannot do that by squeeze, freeze and deflation, which is what the Government have been doing, because that penalises investment, reduces confidence and creates the downward spiral that we have had for the past seven years. We can do it only by having a competitive currency and by expansion.

At the end of 1976 we pledged ourselves to the IMF to maintain the competitive position of our manufacturing industries at home and abroad. That is one of the pledges the Government would prefer to forget, but compared to that time in terms of relative export prices the pound is still nearly 20 per cent. overvalued against the deutschmark. In terms of the relative export prices in 1976, we would now need an exchange rate of DM 2·40 to the pound in order to be competitive. No wonder we have a £12 billion trade deficit in manufactured goods with the EEC, central to which is our manufactured goods trade deficit with West Germany. Britain is being reduced to an economic colony of West Germany. Our advantage against the dollar, thanks to its overvaluation, has now gone. We are now overvalued even against the dollar. The dollar markets are currently our biggest markets, and because of that change in our relativities our exports will be threatened. That will have disastrous consequences for large sections of our industry.

The pound will come down next year—it may even tumble. It is held up now, not by market forces, a healthy balance of payments, competitive industry, or a naturally dynamic productive economy, but simply by what my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook rightly described as the crutch of high interest rates. That is the only thing keeping the pound at its present level, and industry of being penalised by that.

It is important that we lift our gaze, not to the next election, on which the Chancellor's gaze is obviously fixed, but to the looming disaster beyond the next election, to the problems that lie ahead in the 1990s. We are hardly surviving now. We have squandered the oil. How will our economy survive in the 1990s as the crisis closes in? Industry is not paying our way in the world now and cannot provide jobs for our people or generate the surplus for public spending, even at the present low and tawdry level.

Once the oil contribution which has kept the Government going fades away, how will we survive? That is the question. That is the perspective on which we must focus, beyond the Government, with their irresponsible conjuring tricks, trying to dazzle our eyes and win support for the next election, to the looming problem of the 1990s. We must begin the work of rebuilding British industry, of re-expanding and reconstructing our economy before then. To do that we must get rid of the tawdry, fiddling flogging irresponsible opportunism which has replaced the discredited doctrines of monetarism as the Government's central strategy.

8.10 pm

Mr. Alan Howarth (Stratford-on-Avon): I have been impatient that we should make more rapid progress towards stable prices. I have been impatient that we should make more rapid progress towards the full employment which I believe is achievable but only in the context of stable prices. But I have also been impatient that we should make more rapid progress towards the fulfilment of other aspirations of our society—that we should move more rapidly towards a better education system; that we should have better health care; that we should invest more resources in dealing with the problems of law and order.

The political process always has to be a process of the accommodation of competing claims and interests. My right hon. Friends the Chancellor and the Chief Secretary are two voices in the Cabinet. The Cabinet is a much larger body and the Cabinet has a duty to represent and implement the aspirations of a society of 56 million people with all their multifarious demands, with all the differentiated pressures of public opinion and of the institutions of a plural society. It is the particular virtue of this autumn statement that it recognises that reality more fully than ever before.

The autumn statement has been criticised. It was criticised earlier this afternoon by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). The right hon. Gentleman does at least have the virtue of consistency. In 1975, under the Government of which he was a member, the PSBR was £12 billion. That was 10 per cent. of GDP. In today's money terms, 10 per cent. of GDP would be £35 billion. If one adds to the £7 billion PSBR which is envisaged for this year the £28 billion of additional public expenditure which the Labour party envisages, one would return to a PSBR of £35 billion, unless the right hon. Gentleman proposes to raise taxes massively. The right hon. Gentleman is at least consistent, but against that background I cannot derive much enlightenment from the criticisms that he had to offer of the autumn statement.

I was more surprised by the rather plaintive tone of the criticisms advanced by the Select Committee. The gravamen of its charge was twofold. It complained that the Chancellor was not sufficiently exact in monetary policy where exactitude is, I think most would agree, impossible to achieve. It railed at him somewhat for his refusal to admit that he has changed policy when, in the essentials of policy, he has not changed. The policy has been consistent in its essential purposes — to bear down steadily on inflation; to create a monetary framework which will tend to reduce inflation; to create a wider framework of economic conditions which will encourage efficiency and profitability and the private sector to take a greater share in our economy.

The critical question has not been about techniques of policy, or the objectives of policy, which have been consistent; the critical question has always been about the pace at which we should move towards our constant objectives.

[Mr. Alan Howarth]

There is an economic theory which used to be taught, and possibly still is, in Chicago and Vienna, which says that the process of financial stabilisation could be achieved almost instantly by drastic reductions in public expenditure and by a draconian approach to monetary policy. If the term had not already found a more familiar use elsewhere, I would describe that as the economics of the big bang. I suppose that, in some academic world, the economics of the big bang might produce financial stability, but they would certainly produce political instability. They would produce a kind of economic nuclear winter that not even the most zealous of my hon. Friends have ever desired. My right hon. Friends are politicians and they have recognised, rightly, the need to move gradually.

A number of economic commentators, for whom the holy grail of economic policy is an ever-rising gilts market, have been critical of the autumn statement. They have looked at the various items in public expenditure which have overrun the intended totals. But if one looks at those items of public expenditure which have outrun their originally planned totals, or where the plans have been increased for future years, one sees in every case that the increase in expenditure was effectively inevitable, and, in a great many cases, desirable.

My right hon. Friends have proposed that we should spend an additional £300 million a year on the Health Service. With the availability of new but expensive techniques in health care, with the demands on the Health Service of an aging population, it would be an obsessively narrow view of policy which begrudged such an increase. Indeed, we should all take satisfaction from the fact that there are now 70,000 more doctors and nurses working in the Health Service and 4,500,000 more patients being treated in the Health Service every year than there were in 1979, and that 380 new hospital projects are under way.

My right hon. Friends have been justified in observing that their prudent economic policies have led to the sixth successive year of steady growth and they have been justified in saying that a share of that growth should be allocated to improving the nation's health care. But they have not said that the sky is the limit and they have not shrunk from the arbitrary and difficult necessity of making a judgment, of drawing a line, and saying that we can afford to spend this much more, but there we must set a limit.

There is no use, and there is no decency, in complaining that an extra £1·75 billion is to be spent on the social services. The Government have been right to insist that the British economy must adjust itself to the exigencies of earning our living in the contemporary world. But those necessary transitions carry with them social costs. People have suffered in the process. Again, the only humane and responsible policy is to ensure that we find the resources to take adequate care of people who, through no fault of their own, are hurt in the necessary process of economic restructuring.

Who is to say that the Government have been wrong to commit more resources to law and order? Hardly the Labour party, which in recent months has found it expedient to try to extract political advantage from castigating the Government for not doing enough on law and order. The reality is that in every western urbanised society the rate of recorded crime has been increasing by 5 to 7 per cent. a year over a generation. It is a bedrock duty of Government to provide the resources that are needed to preserve law and order. Therefore, the Government have been entirely right to provide resources for an additional 300 policemen in London and a further 500 in the provinces, to add two extra prisons to the prison building programme, and to find more money for the campaign against drugs and for victim support schemes.

I shall not elaborate the case for investing more resources in our schools and universities, in our housing and on our roads. The case for improvement in all those areas is self-evident.

I congratulate the Government on tackling the areas of overrun in public expenditure where there can have been no reasonable justification. I congratulate the Government on their achievement in negotiating improvements in the common agricultural policy which will provide a greater discipline on the excesses of the CAP than any negotiation that I can recall.

I congratulate them too on their willingness to address at a fundamental level the problems of local authority expenditure. Local government current expenditure has been running at 9 per cent. above the planned total. In that area of policy, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has been a prisoner of an ill-designed system. Every device of bureaucratic ingenuity that can be mustered has been brought to bear to try to restrain local government spending. However, the appetite of local authorities to spend more than we can afford in terms of our national economy remains insatiable and the only remedy is to make local authorities far more extensively and effectively accountable to local electors paying the bills for their expenditure. Therefore, I welcome the Government's commitment to introduce the community charge and to standardise the business rate.

Mr. Penhaligon: The hon. Gentleman is obviously keen on the community charge. One listens to what he says and we can argue the merits of that at some time. However, will he tell the House how he understands the way in which the charge for water and sewerage will be levied in England and Wales when the community charge is introduced?

Mr. Howarth: That would be a diversion from the main theme of my argument. I would rather not be side-tracked into a technical discussion of the alternative methods that might be contemplated for charging for sewerage. The hon. Gentleman offers a sporting diversion but I refuse to rise to the bait.

Mr. Steve Norris (Oxford, East): I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that, if the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon) had taken the trouble to read the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Bill, he would have seen in the preamble specific proposals for how to deal with water rates. They are simple and no doubt as commendable in themselves as the proposals for the community charge.

Mr. Penhaligon: The water authorities in Scotland are financed by the local councils.

Mr. Howarth: Cornwall is a long way from Scotland, but even a Cornishman may be willing to acknowledge that lessons can be learned from John O'Groats.

By what criterion should the autumn statement be judged? It should not be judged by reference to some facile definition of monetary policy or monetary conditions. Any such definition would be arbitrary and all too rapidly obsolescent, given the pace of innovation in financial markets and of institutional change. Adherence to any such definition would run the risk of sacrificing the real economy to a totem. I draw assurance and confidence for the future from my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's demonstrable and courageous willingness to increase interest rates when it becomes apparent that monetary conditions have eased too much. Since he raised the basic rate of interest in October, we have duly seen a stabilisation of sterling and a stabilisation of house prices, which are sensitive indicators of monetary conditions.

Mr. Budgen: Would my hon. Friend indicate to the House, in the way that the Chancellor did not, the various items that he would regard as being good indications of monetary and credit conditions being too lax? Since we do not know what the Chancellor regards as his indicators, but my hon. Friend is obviously a party to the Chancellor's thoughts, perhaps he would be good enough to tell us what he regards as important.

Mr. Howarth: The tolerance of the House might soon become exhausted if I were to regale the House with the sort of disquisition that I would be happy to give to my hon. Friend in the Tea Room a little later.

A number of hon. Members have referred to a boom in credit. I respect the point that was made by the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon). There is a problem and we do not know what the proper answer should be. There are difficulties about the controls that the hon. Gentleman advocated — difficulties which I think he recognised. Clearly, it is not an exaggeration to talk of an explosion in consumer credit. That is one indicator that causes me some anxiety — the depreciation of sterling. The surge in house prices——

Mr. Budgen: It should not be disregarded, then.

Mr. Howarth: Perhaps my hon. Friend was not following the thrust of my argument as closely as I might have hoped. I was commending my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for having responded to the symptoms of relative monetary laxity by raising interest rates in the autumn, and I think that we have seen signs that the economy is responding as he and my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen) would wish.

I draw assurance, as I hope will my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, South-West, from the Chancellor's firm commitment to maintain the PSBR at 1·75 per cent. of GDP in 1987-88. That is a sanction he has given against any collapse into a laxity that would run the risk of a serious deterioration in the inflationary position.

We should not judge the autumn statement by reference to whether old techniques of policy have been retained in altered circumstances, which seems to be a complaint of the Select Committee. Nor do I think it is appropriate to measure performance on the basis of whether or not previously published targets have been precisely met. The targets set out in public expenditure White Papers are not tablets of stone. They are inevitably, to a degree, negotiating positions. They are cautionary signals to the market. They are also, of course, objectives that the Government should genuinely pursue.

However, given the variables and the genuine unpredictability of economic circumstances and activity, it is absurd to complain if all the targets are not exactly met. I believe that the proper criterion for judgment of the autumn statement is whether the whole configuration of policy tends systematically to reduce public expenditure as a proportion of GDP. By that criterion the autumn statement is vindicated.

It is true that departmental expenditure in 1986-87 has been rising at a more rapid rate than in previous years. However, we heard my right hon. Friend the Chancellor say again today that taking the position over a period of years between 1982-83 and 1988-89 we will see a significant reduction in public expenditure as a proportion of GDP. It is true that the pressures in the later years for public expenditure once again to exceed the targets that have been set will be real and formidable; certainly, there is never a respite in the battle to control inflation and discipline public spending.

It is true that, in the later years, when the Government will receive less assistance in their financing from the proceeds of privatisation, and perhaps eventually no assistance at all, a higher level of expenditure than was originally envisaged will have to be financed. But it would have been absurd not to take advantage of the opportunities offered by privatisation. The merits of privatisation are not simply the merits of offering a relatively easy windfall way of financing public expenditure. As my right hon. Friend explained earlier, the real validity of the privatisation programme is to ensure that those national assets are deployed in the context of market discipline in which they can be most effectively used in the interest of the nation. The Select Committee, in a manner somewhat inconsistent with the generally censorious tone of its report, praised my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for taking advantage of privatisation to redeploy resources in other areas of constructive investment such as capital expenditure, which is raised in the autumn statement by £1 billion a year.

It is encouraging to see that tax revenue is as buoyant as it is and it is perfectly reasonable for my right hon. Friend to assume that, as a result of the growth that his policies are generating, the tax base will be sufficiently buoyant later on to finance the level of expenditure that we shall have.

My right hon. Friend the Chancellor observed in his speech that, by the end of the 1980s, the ratio of public expenditure to national output will be back to the level at the beginning of the 1970s. Progress is slow and hard won. We shall certainly need to go further. We shall need to progress towards the sort of ratio we experienced in the early 1960s, before the Conservative Government left office in 1964, when public expenditure was more like one third than two fifths of GDP. We need to move towards a balanced Budget, by a reasonable definition of the term. We need to move towards radically simpler and lower taxes, towards stable money and towards a situtation in which the private sector takes a far larger share of resources and in its expansion moves us back to full employment.

All these desirable objectives can be achieved, but they will all take time. It is no good not recognising that it was over generations that public policy moved away from the objectives which I have described. Too violent and too hasty a reversal would be damaging and would not be politically tolerable. It is always tempting to see my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer as Achilles, but he has not overlooked the fact that it was the tortoise which won the race.

[Mr. Howarth]

8.30 pm

Mr. Ken Weetch (Ipswich): I begin my short contribution to the debate by saying that it is becoming a more common observation among the public that very few things in politics are what they seem. So it is with the Chancellor's autumn statement. At the end of the day the statement was nothing to do with economics. Instead, it was a good deal to do with political adventurism at a critical time.

I shall quote from the Financial Times—a newspaper which I am never sure I should be reading. The editorial in the financial section reads:

"The Chancellor does not do things by halves . . . he has responded to the prospect of an election with some blatant pump priming."

That was the editorial comment on the autumn statement.

A vast edifice of complex "economic" argument has been built on the autumn statement, and much of it is not economic; it is blatantly political. The statement was a strong commitment to the Government's determination to pump money into the economy to create a favourable climate to fight a general election. If we take the statement at face value, something can be said on economic grounds. Again, the financial section of the Financial Times summed up the statement:

"We are back to the bad old days."

What was the position in those days? First, there was a worsening balance of payments — and the balance of payments will be a real constraint on the economy next year. There was a time when the most important criterion in economic debates was the monthly balance of payments figures. It then disappeared from our debates and it has not been a factor for a long time, but it seems that it is re-emerging. It will be a real constraint, however, in 1987.

When the Minister replies, I hope that he will explain to me the serious deficit on manufacturing account that is now prevalent in the balance of payments. In 1983, for the first time, we had a deficit on manufacturing account in the structure of the balance of payments. The European side of the account is the worst part of the deficit. I hope that the Minister will explain the benefit that the Economic Community has brought to British manufacturing industry. I shall be pleased to hear the explanation, and I shall be listening carefully.

We have a consumer boom that is based on plastic money. It is doing nothing to halt the serious decline in manufacturing industry. On the other hand, it is doing a world of good for the import of foreign manufactures. With between 3 million and 4 million unemployed, a greater proportion of the work force will be absorbed into the service sector of the economy. In parts of East Anglia we are thankful to get jobs even in the service sector, but the serious point——

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman: The hon. Gentleman said "even in the service sector." In some places it is regarded as being extremely important and is relied upon as a growth area of employment. That is the position in places such as Morecambe and Lancaster, the latter being a category A tourist centre. I would not have used the word "even".

Mr. Weetch: The hon. Lady interrupted me at the wrong moment. I was about to say that if we earn our living by providing services as opposed to manufacturing, the service sector can be regarded in a favourable light. The trend is moving too far, however, and many people are being locked into service employment that is low-paid and dead-ended.

One of the serious features of our economy has been the decline in some industries of a highly technical nature. That is a serious phenomenon. An interesting ITV programme is the one that reports job losses and gains. It is notable that jobs are being lost in manufacturing, often in highly skilled sectors, while jobs are being gained in warehousing and in all sorts of odds and ends. It is not that we are ungrateful in these days for jobs in any sector in which they can be found, but the present structural development in our economy is not one of which we can be proud.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman has spoken about the new balance which is emerging between manufacturing and non-manufacturing employment. Does he agree that, whatever shade of Government we have and almost regardless of the financial policies that are employed, it is inevitable that the technological advancement of the second industrial revolution means that fewer people will be involved in manufacturing and that more will therefore turn their individual attention to other areas of endeavour instead of spending their days sweating in factories? Does he regard that trend in the long-term as an extremely desirable development?

Mr. Weetch: I would agree with that to the extent that productive manufacturing industry will have to support a greater number of employees in the service sector. When I talk to industrial opinion in East Anglia I am told that the trend has gone too far and that we need the political will to put more backbone into manufacturing industry through interventionist polices.

I shall now address the financial part of the autumn statement, which is said to involve a shift in strategy with tax cuts being superseded by increases in public spending. It is being suggesting in today's financial press that we may have both. It is stated that we may have tax cuts in the Budget to come along with public spending increases. I make no further comment about that because we are talking about futures.

When I read the Select Committee's report, the arithmetic suggested that £4·5 billion to £5 billion would be available if public expenditure targets were met. If that money had been directed to producing tax concessions, it would have been enough to bring the standard rate of income tax down to 25p in the pound. It was suggested, however, that £4 billion would be directed to increased public expenditure in the next financial year, which left about £1 billion for tax relief purposes—a smaller sum than was expected.

It is argued that a wise move was made in that tax increases would augment the consumption of foreign imports to the detriment of the balance of payments. It was an odd financial package. Ever since 1979, the Government, with a great degree of self-righteousness, have been preaching financial rectitude. Suddenly financial rectitude goes out of the window, and we can afford all those things previously said to be beyond the pale of public policy. Suddenly we learn that we can have public expenditure increases of £4·75 billion in 1987-88, and £5·5 billion in 1988-89. That new-found largesse is dismissed or explained by saying that the Government can afford it, and they may even have the money for basic rate tax cuts as well. Given the Government's financial policies since 1979, it is no wonder that people are cynical when they hear, in the autumn statement, that public expenditure increases can be conjured out of nowhere just before the run-up to a general election.

Whenever the Chancellor makes a statement, it must be judged by the contribution that it makes to the long-term soundness of our economy. The Government have not achieved what every Government since the war have aimed at—full employment with a reasonable rate of growth, while at the same time avoiding the evils of inflation. At one point after the war there was relatively full employment but high inflation. We now have low inflation but high unemployment.

We have never been able to achieve the equilibrium of relatively full employment with sound money, an active balance of payments and competitive British industry. We still have not achieved that. The acid test of Government policy will come when the economy is reflated, because we may then once again run into the problem that has arisen so often—inflation. An increase in the rate of inflation is on the horizon now. Hon. Members should make no mistake about it—we shall run into it. There will also be a deficit in our balance of payments. That will take us back to the position decades ago, with no solution in sight.

Despite all the shot and shell and all the suffering that we have been through, we shall have turned full circle and will be back where we started. The Chancellor of the Exchequer plays for high stakes and takes big risks. The City gives the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his antics the benefit of the doubt, because it believes that he will win the next election. If he wins it, the City will be pacified, because the Chancellor will return to the deflation needed to counteract the present attitude of letting things rip.

I am sorry to say that the Chancellor is creating a fast food and ice cream economy that has much froth but no substance. He has encouraged people to run into debt, because our economy is based on plastic money to fuel a spending spree that will create the illusion of prosperity. That economy reminds me of a man with a high temperature whose feverish activity is no guide to his underlying strength.

The Chancellor talks about income restraint. All my life I have supported incomes policies, despite their disadvantages. I know all the arguments against such policies, but in principle it has always been essential somehow to equate the growth in incomes with the real wealth produced by the economy. It is no use the Chancellor preaching restraint to working people while people in the City can earn six-figure salaries for shuffling paper and advising on takeover deals. The Government's economy is one of live now and pay later. The problem is that we shall pay with the continuing decline of the British economy, and that is sad, because we have seen it all before.

8.45 pm

Mr. Steve Norris (Oxford, East): It is always a great pleasure to speak after the hon. Member for Ipswich (Mr. Weetch), whose opinions I generally respect and listen to with interest. However, I shall try to concentrate on some of the basic, underlying economic facts of life from which we cannot escape no matter how much we may talk in high economic terms. The autumn statement and the remarks of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) might lead us into some sort of fantasy land unless we remember some basic assumptions. In the interest of brevity, I shall list just three.

I shall start with an assumption which, if I recall correctly, was originally uttered by Abraham Lincoln. I am not sure in which of his famous speeches it appeared, but I am thinking of the aphorism that the poor are not made richer by making the rich poorer. My second proposition is that one cannot discuss the distribution of wealth in any technical detail unless one first concerns oneself with the concept of wealth creation. Opposition Members, in particular, should remember that.

My third proposition is that money cannot be spent on the basis of desirability, unless one has the resources for that. At budget time, the various political parties on the county council of which I was a member used to debate the options. The opposition's arguments for more expenditure were based almost entirely on the concept of desirability. They argued that we should have, and vote for, more day centres, home helps, care in the community, expenditure on education, and so on. The justification for that was that it was desirable. It always seemed rather misguided of some of my Conservative colleagues to try somehow to deny that desirability. That was a foolish way to proceed. Of course such developments would have been desirable, but they should be considered in the context of the ability of the individual, community or country to pay. That is the third maxim that we must keep steadfastly before us.

My hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) was interesting and spoke to the point when he discussed how my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has been able to expand expenditure in various areas. The points that he made were well taken, at least by Conservative Members. However, the hon. Member for Ipswich described that increase in expenditure as being profligate. He would be right, and my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon would be wrong, were it not for the most salient factor in the equation, which, as my hon. Friend pointed out, is that increased expenditure is as a smaller proportion of GDP. In other words, we are not squandering resources that we do not have. Instead, we are following the most beneficial of all economic rules, which is that public expenditure can follow in its most desirable forms—which is not to deny the virtues of constant attention to value for money and to prudent economic management—as the tax burden that supports it is capable of being reduced. All the economic benefits of that flow through to industry and to consumers alike.

Let us examine the extraordinary proposition that seems to be at the heart of Labour's economic thinking, that one makes the poor richer by making the rich poorer. The other day I heard the most extraordinary point in a debate, when an Opposition spokesman claimed that this country was suffering from an appalling brain drain. I think that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science was at the Dispatch Box at the time. The Opposition spokesman said that that brain drain was due to the appalling record of investment on research, or on higher education facilities—I forget the exact nature of the appalling failure to invest of which the Government were accused, setting aside the logic of the totals, which prove that we are investing more than ever before.

[Mr. Steve Norris]

It seemed to have totally escaped the Opposition Member that the real brain drain is likely to be occasioned when more of those with brains engage them on the assumption that the basic top rate of tax in the United States this year will be 28 per cent. and the basic bottom rate of tax paid by people in this country will be 29 per cent. Top rates on earnings are still at a penal level of 65 per cent. Those with brains, initiative, enterprise and enthusiasm, who are capable of generating real wealth and real jobs, are most likely to say, "This is a ludicrous environment in which to operate. I am a person capable of generating wealth, and the minute I begin to create that wealth, and particularly the minute I begin to benefit from that enterprise, initiative and risk," as anyone in private business knows, "I am faced with a putative Government who say that now that I have made it, now that I have created those jobs, they want to control my company through worker councils and increased powers for trade unions, and they want to take away my incentive to create jobs." It is the economics of the madhouse and, worse than that, the most primitive form of pandering to the politics of envy — something with which no respectable Opposition Member should be associated.

Mr. Bryan Gould (Dagenham): In the light of the point that the hon. Gentleman is making, no doubt he is as interested as I am in the publication of the Treasury report, which tends to argue against the conclusions that he has enunciated. Will he urge his right hon. and hon. Friends to make sure that the report is published so that we can all judge the truth of the matter?

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman has an advantage over me. It would be dishonest of me to claim that I was as familiar with the report to which the hon. Gentleman refers as he is. Suffice it to say that I am reminded of the fact that it is said that when tax rates on incomes were as high as 98 per cent. the tax take was lower than it now is on a lower top rate of tax. Whether or not that is entirely germane to the point that the hon. Gentleman was seeking to elucidate, I work on the primitive basis of the logic of someone who started his own company, largely thanks to the kindness of a major clearing bank, which I had better not name. My heirs and assigns are likely to be eternally grateful to it. At the time, I remember my wife saying to me, "What happens if this all goes wrong?" I said that we had a wonderful Labour council in Oxford, and no doubt it would be able to do something for us.

One of the few incentives to go into business is that when one has created something, it is something that one will own and can keep and, dare I say it—is it so awful? —something that one can enjoy. If the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) or any other hon. Member who has been through the same experience expects me to put in the hours, the effort and the risk in making money to create real jobs for love, I doubt whether my love extends that far. I got hold of two companies, both of which were on the verge of bankruptcy, and they are now thriving businesses employing people.

I should like to refer to the concept of wealth creation and the Opposition's spending plans. I remember the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook getting frightfully agitated when the Chief Secretary to the Treasury produced a Treasury estimate of Opposition spending plans. I do not know whether the current figure is £28 billion or £35 billion or whether it is likely to be over £40 billion by the time of the general election. However, I know that while the right hon. Gentleman has denied the precise calculations and attempted to dismiss the exercise as merely a political gesture, he has never denied the essential truth that Opposition plans will simply burden the taxpayer through direct tax, borrowing and the printing of money. All those three—the only origins of resource to which a Chancellor has access — will damage businesses and individuals alike.

There may be the argument that that massive increase in public spending will reduce unemployment. To believe that is fundamentally wrong and misguided. Analysing it briefly, surely current unemployment is caused by two main factors. One is demography — that is, the large numbers of young people coming on to the job register compared with relatively small numbers of elderly people coming off the register. The second cause is the second industrial revolution, the process to which I referred in an intervention in the speech of the hon. Member for Ipswich. Under Governments of whatever colour, and at whatever time in their development, fewer people will be employed in manufacturing industry as technology inevitably takes over.

It has always appalled me that the Labour party appears to relish the preservation of those appalling hell holes, such as the great factories that developed after the war, through the 1950s, the 1960s and 1970s, where a man went in in darkness and re-emerged in darkness, having worked in Stygian conditions. Surely all that we want to do is to embrace the opportunity that new technology gives us, to take men out of such an appalling environment. We want to give them the opportunity to work in an infinitely more creative and progressive environment. It is one of the most salient achievements of the Government that since 1983 they have created over 1 million net new jobs in British industry, very few of which involve returning people to the conditions of work to which, it seems to me, Opposition Members wish to return them.

It is a fiction that the unemployed can simply be mopped up by public spending plans, which would make them all net taxpayers. The logic does not work, first, because that false employment places a huge burden on those who are creating real jobs by investing in their own businesses; and, secondly, because there is the combination of trade union nationally agreed rates and extra costs attendant upon creating artificial jobs — the costs of providing the materials that go with the labour. The idea is that one can suddenly fuel a wonderfully vibrant economy by using the national taxation resource to put everyone into a job and make everyone a taxpayer, but it would simply increase massively the burden of tax that each taxpayer would be forced to pay. The equation does not balance.

I believe that the only way to keep the economy moving and to create more real jobs is that outlined in the autumn statement—keeping inflation down and spending within the present proportion of GDP, and lowering it from that level, keeping interest rates as low as possible, rather lower than they are at present, and keeping taxation down because of the burden that that represents for the individual and for businesses. In that respect the Government have been, until now, extraordinarily successful. I commend my right hon. Friend on his autumn statement, which I believe is a sign of even greater achievements to come.

8.59 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): In four minutes, I want to ask four questions, to which I hope the Treasury will reply in writing.

First, it is monstrous that the receipts from privatisation should be seen as a reduction in PSBR. What has happened to the shares in the radiochemical laboratory in Amersham? I have been told that they have been mostly dispersed to big institutions and that they have not remained invested on the wide basis that was first intended.

Secondly, the Select Committee and the autumn statement referred to the oil surplus. That has greatly affected those constituencies close to the North sea and there is an expected decline of £500,000. What estimate has the Treasury made of this reduction in oil-related industries on the east coast of Scotland and the north-east?

Thirdly, paragraph 2.09 of the statement contains the defence savings that the Government claim will be made in the Falklands. Politicians should not sit on green Benches and promise reductions when our forces — through the Government's commitment; it is not their fault—are in some jeopardy. We know that Argentina has re-armed. In quantifiable terms, what saving will the Government make?

Fourthly, where in the statement is there provision for money to cover the security services? A record 13·6 per cent. rise has been earmarked for the official budget of Britain's intelligence and security services in the new financial year, according to the figures published by the Treasury Supply Estimates on 19 March. The £11 million increase means that the budgets of the services will rise by £32 million. According to The Times of 20 March 1986,

"this figure may only represent the cost of salaries and other staff expenditure rather than the global figure for Britain's espionage, counter-espionage and security operations.

The increase could mean pay rises with MI5 and MI6 plus extra staff through reorganisation prompted by Security Commission reports on the services. The budget is described as 'for Her Majesty's foreign and other secret services. The Cabinet office will account for this vote' in the estimates."

Where do these figures appear in the Estimates? Do they appear under the budget of £110 million for other Departments, the Home Office, or the Foreign and Commonwealth diplomatic wing? I am referring to pages 28 and 29 of the autumn statement. I would be grateful to learn, by letter, where those figures arise.

Finally, has the Treasury any control over the competence of the security services? I want to refer to pages 235-238 of the "Pencourt File" by Barrie Penrose, which outlines in detail the muck-up in the mid-1970s when the security services confused the name of my right hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Dame J. Hart) with Mrs. Tudor Hart. Tomorrow, the Treasury will receive a letter from me giving the full details of that mix-up. I have reason to believe that there has been massive incompetence in other cases.

I want to know about value for money in the security services. I have kept to my bargain and spoken for four minutes. My speech was necessarily truncated, but the Treasury has some interest in the matter of security.

9.4 pm

Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth (Stockton, South): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) for truncating his remarks. I too will be brief. I want to comment primarily on the two major defects in the Government's economic strategy contained in the autumn statement. However, first I want to say a few words about the Chancellor's speech and conduct.

The right hon. Gentleman revealed a deplorable lack of respect for the House at the beginning of the debate, and not for the first time. That is why there were protests from the alliance Benches. Today was one of a number of occasions when, during major economic debates, the Chancellor has not paid the attention to the debate that many hon. Members believe he should. His attitude to the House was borne out in his snide remarks about the Select Committee and his attack upon its members. That was entirely unjustified and unworthy. A bigger man would not have stooped to those depths. If he wanted to attack the Select Committee, he should have attacked the arguments and not brushed off the report as the product of the advisers to the Committee. That was deplorable, and I hope that the Chancellor will desist from such action in future.

There are two major defects in the autumn statement, both of which relate to the one subject to which the Chancellor paid hardly any attention—unemployment. It is amazing that, in a major debate on economic policy, the Chancellor's opening remarks showed virtually no anxiety about the continuing high level of unemployment. More than 3 million people are now unemployed and it is the job of those of us with high levels of unemployment in our areas constantly to remind the House that there are levels of 40 per cent. and 50 per cent. unemployment in many wards in the constituencies of Members on both sides of the House. The prime target of the economic policies of any Government should be to ensure that the misery and waste of resources represented by those figures is overcome. It is deplorable that the Chancellor paid virtually no attention to that in his speech.

The first major defect in the Government's policy is in the nature of the demand within the economy that they are stimulating. We have a public sector financial deficit of £14·5 billion.

Mr. Lawson: Rubbish.

Mr. Wrigglesworth: It is not rubbish. It is the forecast in the autumn statement and in the Select Committee report, and it is borne out by many other forecasts. Moreover, it is entirely to be expected.

My point relates not so much to the quantity as to the nature of the demand within the economy. What is wrong is that the Chancellor and the Government are stimulating a short-term consumer boom by allowing wages to plough ahead of inflation and having a very lax monetary policy which is stimulating consumer demand without creating the jobs and wealth in the British economy that we all want to see.

More importantly, the Government are undermining the industrial and economic foundations of this country for short-term political ends. By selective extracts from previous medium-term financial strategies, the Chancellor tries to maintain that he has not changed his economic tune, but anyone who examines the statements and records of Ministers since 1979 knows that a dramatic change in attitude has been forced on the Government by political expediency and the approaching general election. The hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-West (Mr. Budgen), who still sticks steadfastly to his monetarist principles, knows that as well as the Opposition and the City do. It is a general election strategy, not a serious economic strategy, and it is undermining the long-term interests of the economy and of British industry.

[Mr. Wrigglesworth]

Mr. Patrick Thompson (Norwich, North): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Wrigglesworth: No, I do not have time; the winding up speeches will have to begin shortly.

The second major defect is in the Government exchange rate policy. As our amendment makes clear, and as we have explained on many occasions, we believe that it would help British industry, the British economy and, indeed, the whole of the Western economy if the Government would only do what all their principal Economics Ministers apparently want to do, and certainly what the Confederation of British Industry and the Governor of the Bank of England want to do—that is, to join the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system. There has been overwhelming support for that from all sections of industry and commerce, but it has apparently been prevented by the Prime Minister. That is amazing. We are told that the Chancellor himself wants to do it, and it is a sad reflection on his position in the Government that such a major item of economic policy that he wishes to pursue should be rejected by the Prime Minister.

We believe that joining the exchange rate mechanism would mean much greater stability in our exchange rate. It would not enable us to overcome all the pressures on exchange rates—clearly, we should sometimes have to defend the rate at which we joined by increasing interest rates — but we are currently paying a premium in interest rates for the present lack of confidence in our economy. One of the reasons why our interest rates are, on average, 4 per cent. above those of our European partners, which is crippling sections of British industry, is that international markets have no confidence in the pound. Confidence would be maintained to a far greater extent if we were full members of the EMS and it is deplorable that the Chancellor has not been able to pursue that course when he apparently wants to.

There is overwhelming evidence that the Government are pursuing a general election strategy rather than an economic strategy. There is a staggering example of that in my constituency. The Government are proposing to set up an urban development corporation to help create jobs and growth in the area, but they then take away the equivalent of 18p on the rates through the rate support grant settlement to provide relief for places such as North Yorkshire, Hambledon and Richmond.

That is entirely a strategy for votes. It has nothing to do with jobs or the economic revival of my area. The same is true for other urban areas. The Government are undermining large sections of British industry because of their short-term general election interests rather than those of the British economy.

9.11 pm

Mr. Bryan Gould (Dagenham): Nobody can approach this debate without feeling a sense of obligation to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee and its Chairman. I say nobody, but I must immediately make an exception for the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The right hon. Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) and his Committee deserve to be congratulated on their report and the dignified yet stinging rebuke that they delivered to the Chancellor for his ill-considered remarks. In a sober and restrained way, the Committee produced a conclusion which we, and, I believe, many Conservative Members, are happy to endorse. It concluded that Government economic policy has changed, that, for their own reasons, the Government have chosen to deny that change and that both the change and the denial leave current and future economic policy in an utterly uncertain state.

The Committee's first point is that the obscurity of the autumn statement makes it extraordinarily difficult to treat it as a satisfactory basis for assessing the Government's economic policy. Changes are made but they are neither acknowledged nor explained. That is not an accident. The right hon. Member for Worthing was characteristically generous to the Government on this. I believe that it is not an accident, but part of a general approach to these matters which is perhaps summed up best, in what has become a time-honoured phrase, as being economical with the truth.

The Chancellor and his ministerial team have undertaken a deliberate attempt to muddy the waters and to cover their tracks because they do not want the full extent of their changed policy to be detected by the British people. So far as one can disentangle the changes from the autumn statement and other evidence, in what respect has the policy changed and why does it matter?

The Select Committee provides an excellent guide to the answer to the first question. It makes it quite clear that what has changed is the whole basis, technique and existence of monetary policy. If, for example, sterling M3 —so long the favourite broad money measure of the Chancellor and his predecessor—were still the basis of economic policy, as it has risen by 18·2 per cent. in the 12 months to September, we should now face an inflation rate of 18 per cent. in the forthcoming year or two. I assume that that is not now the Chancellor's prediction.

That rise in sterling M3 is not being responded to with any rise in interest rates, contrary to the policy options taken earlier by the Chancellor and his predecessor. [Interruption.] We have listened to the speeches. I am simply making the point—the Chancellor cannot dispute this — that in earlier days a rise of 18·2 per cent. in sterling M3—well beyond the target range—would have been met with a rise in interest rates.

The role of interest rates is another respect in which economic policy has changed. The point of trying to control public spending, on which the Chancellor laid such emphasis in his autumn statement, is to keep interest rates down. That was spelt out in the original medium-term financial strategy. As the Committee points out, the original MTFS states:

"It is not the intention to achieve the reduction in monetary growth by excessive reliance on interest rates."

Yet we have had record interest rates without any real impact on the rate of monetary growth. Therefore, the Chancellor can claim consistency neither in his original policy nor in his abandonment of it.

The Committee details a range of other changes, such as changes in levels of public spending, monetary targets, public spending targets, exchange rate policy and even in such arcane matters as rational expectations. It my be perfectly clear why some of those changes took place. There may be good reasons—indeed, I believe there are excellent reasons — for abandoning many of those aspects of the Government's economic policy. But it is a mystery why other aspects have changed.

Why has the Chancellor for the first time announced a planned increase in the real level of public spending? That is what the autumn statement says, but there seems no reason why the previous position should have been changed. The forecast for economic growth is lower than it was earlier in the year. Perhaps, surprisingly, the forecast for prices is also lower. Therefore, a given quantity of public spending should have secured a greater volume of services and inputs. Despite both those factors, the Chancellor has deemed it wise and prudent to increase public spending.

No explanation is offered in the autumn statement of any change that has occurred to justify the change in policy. Therefore, we must be forgiven for providing our own explanation, which is that the Chancellor has simply lost control of events. He has been compelled to accept increases not merely in public spending, against which he had set his face, but in public spending of the least acceptable sort—the very sort castigated repeatedly by him — namely, increases in public spending largely gobbled up by increases in public sector wage settlements. That is what the Chancellor has had to yield to, and now he seeks to make a political virtue of that necessity.

The Chancellor is trying to pretend that what has taken place is not a change of policy and technique, but, miraculously, a change of substance which will change the course of the economy. He implied no change in the Government's policy, but the reverse is true. As the Select Committee report makes clear, the Chancellor and the Government have changed their policy, techniques and instruments of control. What is missing is any real change in substance of the volume and scale required to meet the needs of the economy. [Interruption.] The Chancellor invented and proclaimed his adherence to techniques, instruments, measures and controls. Now they have been abandoned and he is trying to pretend that that abandonment will somehow benefit the economy on a major scale. That is an illusion and the reverse of the truth.

The Chancellor has abandoned his monetarism in the face of political reality. He has no choice. He has abandoned it for reasons not entirely unconnected with the imminence of the general election. We are forced to conclude that, whereas we used to regard the Chancellor as just a simple-minded monetarist, now we must recognise that the monetarist part of that label is no longer appropriate.

Why does all this matter? Why can we not let the Chancellor off the hook and let him say, as perhaps many politicians before him have said, "We all learn from our mistakes. Now we know that we are wrong and we are making an intelligent adjustment to circumstances as we now see them."? But the very essence of the medium-term financial strategy has always been characterised by its apparent certainty and simplicity.

It is worth recalling just how attractively simple the doctrine was. First, one selected an appropriate measure of the money supply. Then one controlled it. There was no problem about that. One controlled the money supply by fixing a rate of growth at whatever level one chose. Since that fed immediately and automatically through into prices, why not choose zero growth? One then obtained zero inflation. With zero inflation, the economy would suddenly miraculously prosper of its own accord.

That was the simple theory. It was not only simple and certain — here is the real nub of the case — it was immutable. Having set the course and laid down the medium-term financial strategy, the Chancellor, unlike all his wicked and weak-willed predecessors, was going to stick to it come what may. He was not going to be rid of it. That is where slogans such as "There is no alternative" and "The lady is not for turning" came from. The right hon. Lady's reputation is at issue here. Her reputation for inflexibility must be defended. That is why the Chancellor is so unwilling to concede that he has fundamentally shifted course as was well detailed by the Treasury and Civil Service Committee.

In the name of this immutability, simplicity and certainty, immense damage was inflicted on the economy. Another Government and another Chancellor would have realised that the course they had set was doing unacceptable damage, but this Government and this Chancellor persevered. They ploughed on. As manufacturing output and investment fell and 1·3 million jobs in manufacturing industry were lost, as the balance of trade deteriorated and as bankruptcies reached record levels, the Chancellor said, "No, we will stick to our chosen course."

Mr. Budgen: The hon. Gentleman is unfair to the Labour party. Conservative Members sometimes falsely claim that we were the original monetarists. The right hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins), who then represented a Birmingham constituency, was the original monetarist when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1968 and in 1976. The first overt monetarist was the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey), the present shadow spokesman on foreign affairs.

Mr. Gould: As my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) said, the Prime Minister, in almost a single column of Hansard, has been known to use five different base dates and starting dates for monetarist policy. It is novel to have yet two more added, going as far back as 1968 and 1976, as I understand the hon. Gentleman's rather convoluted remarks.

For all those reasons, and for the reason that the Chancellor proclaimed—the immutability of his policy—and the fact that, in the name of that immutability, he did, and thought he was worth doing, such damage to the economy, he is now——

Mr. Peter Lilley (St. Albans): Give us quotations.

Mr. Gould: I shall not disappoint the hon. Gentleman. He shall have quotations.

For all those reasons, the Chancellor is unwilling to concede that there has been a change. He knows that if he did, he would have to concede that all the damage has been in vain and the whole basis of his policy has been swept away. It has been replaced by nothing comprehensible or intelligible. It has not yet even been replaced by a new mistake to replace the old ones.

[Mr. Gould]

As the basis of the Chancellor's policy has disappeared, even the one achievement claimed for monetarism must now be suspect. It can no longer be chalked up to the Government's credit. The Government claim that their policies have produced a reduction in inflation, yet the policies that were set to produce that reduction have never been applied and have been abandoned as a mistake, as a forlorn hope and as something that could never be put in place. It is difficult for the Government to argue that their policies produced the fall in inflation. That is borne out by the fact that, since 1979, our record on inflation has been worse than the average of the leading OECD countries. In 1979, our inflation rate was 117 per cent. of the average for the seven OECD countries. Today it is 144 per cent., and rising.

Mr. Lawson: Quote the figures.

Mr. Gould: I am quoting figures. The Chancellor does not like it because they show that the fall in inflation owes everything to the world recession and the slump in commodity prices, as the Select Committee said. It owes almost nothing—I would say absolutely nothing—to the failed policies of the Government in whose name so much damage has been done.

If, in the light of those facts, the Chancellor still denies that there has been a change, let me try to smoke him out. Let me take as a text the locus classicus—or one of them—of monetarist policy: the speech that he delivered in Zurich on 14 January 1981—the hon. Member for St. Albans (Mr. Lilley), the Chancellor's parliamentary private secretary, asked for some quotations—when he was Financial Secretary to the Treasury. Perhaps he wishes to disown or disavow that part of his career, but we shall give him some quotations. He said:

"The heart of our economic policy is the steady deceleration in the rate of monetary growth over a four-year period."

The right hon. Gentleman may not wish to stick to sterling M3, which has increased by 18·2 per cent. during the past 12 months. In that case, on former theories, we would be looking at an inflation rate of 18 per cent. What would he like to do? Does he wish to place emphasis on PSL1, on which he was especially keen at the time, although I have not heard him mention it much recently —I should be interested to hear whether he wishes to take that measure—or would he prefer one of the narrow money measures? Would he prefer MO or M1? The latter was a favourite for a time. How would that square with what he said, which was that broad money is the most useful guide? Do we detect a change there?

Does the Chancellor still believe that this is "a highly complex matter, but that is no reason for getting it wrong, still less for abandoning the task."?

Is that still his position? What is the present basis of his monetary policy? What is the assumed connection between any monetary measure the Chancellor cares to select—I am not fussy about which one he selects—and the assumed or predicted rate of inflation? Unless we know that, we cannot know what has happened to what he said in 1981 was,

"the heart of our economic policy".

The Chancellor said in that speech that the fall in monetary growth was to be achieved by a "steady reduction in the real level of total Government spending."

When was that target abandoned? Why was it abandoned? Why should anyone believe the Government's plans for public spending in the light of the Chancellor's statement in that speech that there was "a steadily declining trend, until by 1982-83 it will be 4 per cent. lower than in 1979-80."?

Was not the whole point of reducing Government spending the hope that interest rates would be kept down and that there would be no crowding out? Why do we have record real interest rates—the highest in our history and among the highest in the advanced world—and why are our real interest rates twice as high as those of West Germany? Why are we lumbering our industry with such a ridiculous burden? Will the Chancellor give us an answer? He must know.

Let us try another quotation about the exchange rate. In 1981, the Chancellor said:

"The Government has no exchange rate policy as such."

Is that still the case, in view of his repeated statement that he would now resist any further fall in exchange rates and what one assumes to be his preference for joining the EMS although, clearly, he cannot carry his Prime Minister with him? If so, when did the change take place? Is that another change? Can the Chancellor be happy with the situation when the pound is now, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook said, at its lowest level in the trade weighted index, can only be held at that level on the basis of a severely deflated economy — the classic definition of a weaker currency—is bolstered by record borrowing from the reserves, part of which has been spent, has nevertheless produced a rapidly deteriorating balance of trade and is now, as the Prime Minister concedes, too weak to be taken into the EMS and is, above all else, supported by record real interest rates? Is that what the Chancellor believes is an acceptable outcome of seven years of a Government dedicated to what is laughingly called sound money? Is that the apotheosis that the Chancellor so ardently desired?

The Chancellor went on to say that as a result of what had then been done in the name of monetarism—those who remember 1981 and have seen the graphs and the Chancellor's unwillingness to look at any period of government before 1981 will find this a rich irony—

"British companies are becoming more efficient, leaner, tauter, fitter, and more productive."

That is a remarkable statement. Much could have been forgiven if it were in any real sense true. How can it be true when manufacturing output is 7 per cent. lower than it was in 1979, when hundreds of thousands of jobs are lost and investment is down?

Let us be fair to the Chancellor. He may want to avoid looking at the economy in the round; he may want to look at companies as individual entities. Will he nominate those of our main industrial rivals against which we have made up ground in terms of productivity, efficiency, unit labour costs and competitiveness? I do not dispute that he may be able to find some, but I wonder whether he would find them among the ranks of our important rivals such as Japan, Germany and the United States. Where would such examples lie?

Let me give the Chancellor a wide choice. Will he choose just one of the various indices of competitiveness that the Treasury sometimes uses and publishes? I do not mind which it is—relative export prices, relative import prices, terms of trade, or relative labour costs. Which of any one of those shows an improvement in our competitiveness since the first quarter of 1979? I challenge him to nominate one. If he cannot—and I know that he cannot—I hope that we shall hear no more of that canard trotted out repeatedly and erroneously by Ministers and other Government spokesmen.

It is significant that we have no answers from the Chancellor or the Chief Secretary. It may be that they are adhering to the policy of being economic with the truth. It may be that they are too busy and that their minds are filled with fantasies and inventions about our spending plans. Those fantasies have been totally discredited by the Institute of Fiscal Studies and Phillips and Drew, which have castigated back-of-the-envelope figures. However, this is a debate about the autumn statement, although I would not be surprised if the Chancellor would dearly like to shift the focus.

The real reason why there is silence on the Government Benches is that they are holding their breath. They know and fear that the simplest gust of wind will bring the whole structure, the whole card house, down. The Chancellor knows that sooner or later it will all collapse because, with his abdication from monetarism, he now runs an economic policy that has no visible means of support.

The Chancellor has one last shot in his locker, if he is to ward off nemesis in the form of a sterling crisis, or a balance of payments crisis, or the blowing up of the consumer boom. That one last, desperate throw is tax cuts. Today the Chancellor affected a pose of fiscal rectitude, but I would lay money on there being some tax cuts in the next Budget, which would go some way towards redeeming the promise that has been made every year for seven years that tax cuts are on their way.

Tax cuts might reverse to some small degree the increased tax burden for the overwhelming majority of families, but they would further stimulate the consumer boom and worsen the balance of payments without doing anything for unemployment, and they would be completely unsustainable for more than a few months. If the Conservatives won the next election, they would have to be reversed as soon as the general election was out of the way. Tax cuts could be made only at the price of further violence to the very policies that the Chancellor has paraded for so long as being at the heart of his economic policy. Tax cuts would be the last desperate throw of a Government who know that the game is up and know, as they go into an election year with more than 3 million people unemployed, that they do not, in the words of the chairman of the Tory party, deserve to be re-elected. They will not be re-elected.

9.36 pm

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. John MacGregor): I congratulate the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on his appointment to his new post and welcome him to our debates. I shall have a word to say later about his speech and about what he has said elsewhere. As this is my first opportunity since the autumn statement to speak about it in the House, I shall concentrate my opening remarks on the area for which I have particular responsibility, public expenditure.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) accused the Government of major turns in Government policy and of increasing public spending. He described it as the economics of electioneering. On the other hand, my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) emphasised the need for continuing restraint and regretted that we had not made more progress. I should like to begin by reassuring my hon. Friend and disabusing the hon. Gentleman of his notions.

In his speech my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that our consistent view has been that the state takes too much of the nation's income and that our consistent objective is that public expenditure, as a percentage of GDP, should be reduced. My right hon. Friend conceded that some of the targets that we have set have, in the event, proved to be too ambitious.

To reverse public spending trends to achieve the objectives that we have set ourselves requires a constant and firm determination to turn back the inexorable pressures of the 1970s towards higher public spending. Some of them are demand-led pressures, as my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington pointed out. He referred to agriculture and social security. My hon. Friend will be aware that in agriculture the real demand-led area is the common agricultural policy, not the domestic agricultural programme. He will know of the strenuous efforts of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food—capped with great success during this week, in very difficult circumstances—to restrain the growth of the CAP. I shall deal later with social security.

I have two points to make about public expenditure as a whole. The trends show that we are succeeding. They also show that the Opposition are a constant reminder that without the disciplines that we have continuously imposed both the total and the proportion of the gross domestic product would very rapidly shoot up again.

The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) never likes to be reminded that when his party formed the Government they increased expenditure, in real terms, by 12 per cent. in one year. With its £28 billion pledge, the Labour party looks as though it will repeat precisely that mistake if ever again it is given the chance to form a Government. With programmes of that sort, it will certainly not form another Government.

If it were the case, as the hon. Member for Great Grimsby contends, that the Government's public expenditure policy has changed this year, one would expect to be able to detect a break in trend—for example, expenditure rising, instead of falling, as a proportion of the gross domestic product or the growth rate accelerating after it had been decelerating. That is not what one finds. As my right hon. Friend explained at the time of the autumn statement, and again today, the rate of increase in public spending, in real terms, as measured by the combined spending of central and local government—including, as the Select Committee on the Treasury and Civil Service would wish, debt interest but excluding the proceeds of privatisation—shows that progressively the rate of increase has been coming down.

It is worth repeating the figures, because the constant hubbub from the Opposition when my right hon. Friend the Chancellor was making his speech probably meant that most of my hon. Friends did not hear all that he said. The figures are quite clear. They went from 3 per cent. in the decade to 1978-79 to 2¼ per cent. in the last Parliament, and to 1¼ per cent. so far in the present Parliament. Far from reversing that trend to slower growth, our plans seek to extend it.

Mr. Fallon: Will my right hon. Friend give way?

Mr. MacGregor: I have a lot to say in response to the debate and a short time in which to say it, so I hope that my hon. Friend will not mind if I do not give way.

If one looks for a break in the trend one can find it, but it was in 1982-83 that the rise in public spending as a proportion of GDP came to an end. I concede that it rose up to that period for a whole variety of reasons which I do not have time to go into now, but in the four years since then the proportion has progressively fallen.

With spending planned to grow significantly more slowly than the economy as a whole, the downward trend will continue, so that by 1989-90 public spending as a proportion of national income will, as my right hon. Friend said, be back to levels last seen in the early 1970s. We have succeeded in making a break with the past and reversing the trend. In the 1970s public spending grew faster than the economy, but now the reverse is true, and this autumn statement accelerates that process.

Some Opposition Members have extended their search for the non-existent U-turn into the detailed programmes. That search will be equally unproductive. Certainly the autumn statement makes additional resources available for priority programmes such as education, health and roads, but these are hardly new priorities.

One advantage of this steady commitment on public spending coupled with a rigorous search for economies is that we have been able to increase spending in the areas to which we attach the greatest priority, while at the same time ensuring that public expenditure has never regained the stranglehold that it once had on our economic life. It is important to look at some of the examples. Looking at our record over the past six years, we see that in education spending per pupil is now at an all-time high and that the proportion of 18 and 19-year-olds entering higher education and the number of graduates are also at record levels.

Spending on the National Health Service has risen by over 24 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79, and capital spending on the NHS has risen over 30 per cent. On law and order programmes, spending has risen by nearly 40 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. Capital spending on housing renovation has risen by nearly 40 per cent., and local authorities and new towns improved and converted nearly 100,000 dwellings last year. Over 600 miles of motorways and trunk roads have been completed since we took office and spending on them has risen by more than 25 per cent.

These are all programmes to which we have given priority in the autumn statement and the figures that I have just given demonstrate that we have been consistent throughout and that public spending as a proportion of national income has been coming down. This autumn statement continues the emphasis on those priorities. We are substantially increasing provision for education and, as the House knows, we have made a generous offer of £¼ billion next year for teachers' pay. That offer was made in order to get value for money and is offered in return for the right terms, conditions of service and a salary structure in the teaching profession. Spending on hospital and community health services will be up by 2¼ per cent. in real terms next year.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby said that this was an election spending spree, but that increase in real terms is exactly the same as the increase that we planned for this year. We will spend over £700 million more on the police in each of the next two years. By 1987-88 the number of uniformed police will have risen by 10,000 since we took office in 1979. This is not a pre-election spending spree. It is consistent with our progress in the past.

One point to which the Select Committee on the Treasury and Civil Service has drawn attention in the past, but to which it did not draw attention this year, is the balance between capital and current spending. Perhaps this year the Committee did not focus so much on that because it noticed that here again we have been consistent and that our contrast with the Labour record is marked. Since we came to office public sector spending has remained broadly level in real terms, despite our deliberate decision to switch the emphasis from the public to the private sector in the provision of new housing.

The autumn statement shows that we are planning to increase capital expenditure by nearly £1 billion over our previous plans in each of the next two years on roads and prisons, and, despite the switch of emphasis in housing provision, we are making an extra £450 million available next year. We have a £3 billion building programme for the NHS, covering more than 380 major schemes, 110 of which should be completed by 1990.

The interesting point is the contrast between our record on that basis, despite all the attacks that we hear from the Opposition from time to time, on capital spending and on the infrastructure, and theirs. Despite the growth of expenditure under the last Administration, they had to cut capital spending in key areas. Within our restrained totals we have almost identically increased capital spending in the key areas by the same percentage.

The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook referred to the increase in social security spending, which is a marked feature of the autumn statement, and described that as a product of unemployment. [Interruption.] It is typical of the right hon. Gentleman to raise a point and then to carry on talking when it is answered. He does not want to hear the answer.

The usual full analysis of expenditure by benefit and type of claimant will be published in the public expenditure White Paper, but it is worth noting that the major factors for the increase that we have announced are an increase in take-up of means test benefits among the long-term sick and disabled and single parents. Average amounts paid in housing benefit to people in and out of work are also increasing, as is spending on family benefits, reflecting among other things a higher birth rate and more children staying on at school after 16.

There is also a continuing increase in the level of take-up of benefits among the existing unemployed. When the right hon. Gentleman puts the burden of the increased expenditure on the unemployed factor, it is worth remembering that most of the social security budget is spent on the elderly, the sick and disabled and on families. Only about one sixth of the social security programme is spent on benefits for unemployed people. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has pointed out clearly, our record on increases in benefits since 1979 is good. We have had to take into account the demographic trends and the fact that many people live longer and need such benefits.

If I had had time, I would have spent a few moments on the speech of the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon). I want to contrast our responsible spending with the programmes of other parties. The hon.

Gentleman was on his own when he rose to speak and he missed a rare opportunity. He could have said what he liked about the alliance's spending plans without fear of contradiction or of being muzzled. He missed that opportunity, but not all his colleagues have done the same.

According to The Independent last month, the Social Democratic and Liberal parties have been costing and revising what I have to describe as a pledge-heavy document, "Partnership for Progress". The right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) has, we are told, been laying down the law. I noticed that even while "Partnership for Progress" is at the printers, some of the hon. Friends of the hon. Member for Truro have been blowing a hole in the Social Democratic party's plans and have added, on its own estimate, £1·5 billion in a pledge to increase pay in the NHS. We shall look forward to seeing continuing disputes between the two parties as they try to grapple with the problem of responsible public spending.

The hon. Gentleman made one fair point. At least the Liberals and Social Democrats have put down an amendment tonight. The hon. Gentleman drew attention to the fact that the official Opposition have not. No wonder. They are terrified of a focus on their policies.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) urged strongly, both in the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's report and in the debate, that the matters relating to monetary policy in particular should be discussed on the Floor of the House. I agree. That is precisely what my right hon. Friend the Chancellor was endeavouring to do this afternoon in giving a detailed response to the Committee's report. It was, of course, a strong rebuttal in places, but my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing is a fair man and I am sure that he will recognise that, as the report criticises the Chancellor, the Chancellor has every right to give his response. His was a detailed response, because he wanted to take the report seriously and argue it point by point.

If my right hon. Friend and the House study the reply, they will find it a fair, reasonable and persuasive response, but they will have to read it, because of the shameful behaviour of the Opposition, led by the Opposition Front Bench. Every observer outside the Chamber must have concluded that theirs was kindergarten behaviour, except that would be unfair to kindergartens. The Opposition did not focus on a single serious issue for one moment during my right hon. Friend's speech. They treated the key economic policy matters as frivolously in this debate as they do in their own internal party discussions on economic matters.

It is fairly clear that the hon. Member for Dagenham wrote his speech before the Chancellor spoke or, alternatively, he could not have heard the Chancellor, because he concentrated on the frivolous aspects of the matter, as did his hon. Friends. He totally failed to see that the Chancellor had responded to his speech in full before he made it—[Interruption.] That is what observers will have seen.

I find the Opposition's attack on these matters extraordinarily hypocritical and schizophrenic. They cannot make up their mind whether the modest increases in spending that we have announced are reckless and a sign of a pre-election spending spree or whether they are totally insufficient. On looking at the Opposition's plans, one must conclude that they would spend a great deal more. They criticise the level of interest rates and inflation. The hon. Member for Dagenham said that we had benefited on inflation this year from oil and falling commodity prices. It is important to look comparatively at the record of inflation over a period of time.

If one compares the record of the last Labour Government and the record since 1979 to the present day, not just in absolute terms, but relative to either the major seven competitors or the rest of the EEC, one finds that under the Labour Government the difference between their inflation level and the average of the major seven was 6·9 per cent., compared with 2·1 per cent. under this Government. Even more strikingly, when compared with our European competitors the average was 4·5 per cent. during the Labour Government compared with 0·1 per cent. now. That is a clear indication of how our policies on interest rates and monetary policy have made a big difference, comparatively, to all that we saw under the Labour Government.

Mr. Gould: I feel justified in intervening, since the inflation rate is the sole achievement that the Government can claim in their economic policy. Does the right hon. Gentleman dispute that our inflation rate today is higher as a proportion of the OECD seven average than it was in 1979 when the Government took office? Does he dispute that, yes or no?

Mr. MacGregor: What matters is the difference that I have just been describing. I utterly reject the hon. Gentleman's statement that inflation, although a key achievement of the Government, is the only one.

The hon. Member for Dagenham wrote a fascinating article in The Times last year. He said:

"To say that the Labour party's decline might be terminal has become a commonplace . . . To lay this bare is not to hasten the decline. A proper understanding of what is happening offers the only chance of doing something to halt a possibly fatal process. Within our geographical and ideological laager a kind of siege mentality prevails. Thus, it is seriously asserted that the obstacle to majority support in the country is that we are not Left-wing enough. It is believed that one day the scales will drop from the eyes of the masses and that a demonstration on the Floor of the Commons will bring the triumph of Socialism closer."

It is not really a question whether the debate in the Labour party needs to be fought out in that increasingly isolationist way. If it were, it would not matter to the rest of the country. However, we are seeing that that laager-type mentality is being operated in practice in Labour-controlled authorities involving a not inconsiderable proportion of total local authority spending. The hon. Member for Dagenham knows perfectly well that he was putting his finger on that sort of approach, because he was aware that it could cause increasing unpopularity for the Labour party in the country, but, much more serious, those are the sorts of policies that would be operated if the Labour party ever got the opportunity to return to government.

Labour authority leaders must be worrying the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook enormously. He knows that his colleagues are locked in private discussions. At least, that is what we are told in the press. He must be aware of the irresponsible approach of Labour councillors to public spending. They are piling up commitments for future ratepayers by their creative accounting. Labour controlled authorities continue to spend in the most frivolous fashion, and the right hon. Gentleman must know that the approach that is being adopted by Labour councillors justifies entirely our attack when we say that in practice a Labour Government would not be able to control public spending.

[Mr. MacGregor]

The figure now in circulation is £28 billion, and it has not been challenged seriously. That is the sum to which a Labour Government would be committed, and other commitments are being added to it. That figure destroys the credibility of any attack by the Opposition on the Government's policies on interest rates and inflation, and all the policies that are set out in the autumn statement.

Mr. Gould: As the Minister has been prepared to range so widely to avoid scrutiny of the Government's policy, perhaps I should have foreseen that he would introduce Labour spending yet again. Has the right hon. Gentleman read the study of our programme by the Institute for Fiscal Studies? Does he know what conclusion the institute reached, and does he accept it? Its conclusion is that he has invented figures, or that they are nothing more than back-of-envelope figures.

Mr. MacGregor: I have read the study in full and that which the hon. Gentleman asserts is not what it states. The study makes it clear that the Government's costing is entirely accurate and is not based on back-of-envelope figures. Secondly, it says that some of Labour's commitments are not absolutely clear. On many occasions I have offered the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook the opportunity to tell us which commitments he will take off the list. Some signs were given in a previous debate that commitments that are dear to the hearts of Labour Back Benchers are now being dropped.

The hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), who is the Opposition's employment spokesman, has said that there are commitments that are not "fully there" of £6·6 billion, which he said should be removed from the overall commitment. That statement was negated by the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), the Opposition's spokesman on social security matters, who added more than an equivalent sum to the figures that do not come within the commitment of £28 billion.

If we consider what is being done by Labour councils, it is no wonder that Opposition Members are so sensitive. The hon. Member for Dagenham stated that inflation was the Government's one achievement for which we could claim credit. Accordingly, I turn to the record for the past five years, which the autumn statement will continue. Since 1981, growth has averaged 3 per cent., manufacturing investment has averaged 4 per cent. and take-home pay for a married man on average earnings has increased by 17 per cent. compared with a drop of nearly 1 per cent. under the previous Labour Government.

As has been said, the Government's record on inflation is a major achievement. The hon. Gentleman talks about interest rates, but he should recognise that there are other factors that are extremely important to companies. The rate of return for all industrial and commercial companies rose to 12 per cent. in 1985, the highest since 1964, and treble the rate in 1975. The rate of return on manufacturing in 1985 was 7 per cent., the highest percentage since 1973. Companies' liquidity and profitability are returning to the levels that we all want to see. These elements can be set against the impact of inflation.

The autumn statement is consistent with what we have done in the past, which has made possible the achievements to which I have referred. It will enable us to secure balanced growth again next year. It is in the most remarkable contrast with the policies of the Opposition, which is why they will never get the opportunity to implement them.

Question put, That the amendment be made:—

The House divided: Ayes 22, Noes 268.

Division No. 44] [9.59 pm

AYES

Ashdown, Paddy
Beith, A. J.
Bruce, Malcolm
Hancock, Michael
Howells, Geraint
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Johnston, Sir Russell
Kennedy, Charles
Kirkwood, Archy
Livsey, Richard
Maclennan, Robert
Mallon, Seamus
Meadowcroft, Michael
Owen, Rt Hon Dr David
Penhaligon, David
Ross, Stephen (Isle of Wight)
Shields, Mrs Elizabeth
Steel, Rt Hon David
Thomas, Dafydd (Merioneth)
Wallace, James
Wigley, Dafydd
Wrigglesworth, Ian

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. David Alton and
Mr. John Cartwright.

NOES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Ancram, Michael
Arnold, Tom
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert (South Ribble)
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Vall'y)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Benyon, William
Best, Keith
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A. (Brighton K'to'n)
Brooke, Hon Peter
Brown, M. (Brigg & Cl'thpes)
Browne, John
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon A.
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nick
Carlisle, Rt Hon M. (W'ton S)
Cash, William
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Churchill, W. S.
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Cockeram, Eric
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Simon
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Cranborne, Viscount
Crouch, David
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord J.
Dunn, Robert
Durant, Tony
Dykes, Hugh
Eyre, Sir Reginald
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Anthony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Fraser, Peter (Angus East)
Freeman, Roger
Gale, Roger
Galley, Roy
Gardiner, George (Reigate)
Gardner, Sir Edward (Fylde)
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodlad, Alastair
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony
Greenway, Harry
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon
Griffiths, Peter (Portsm'th N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Harris, David
Harvey, Robert
Havers, Rt Hon Sir Michael
Hawkins, Sir Paul (N'folk SW)
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heddle, John
Henderson, Barry
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hickmet, Richard
Hicks, Robert
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hind, Kenneth
Hirst, Michael
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A
Howarth, Gerald (Cannock)
Howell, Ralph (Norfolk, N)
Hubbard-Miles, Peter
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Jackson, Robert

Jenkin, Rt Hon Patrick
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert (Herts W)
Joseph, Rt Hon Sir Keith
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom
Knight, Greg (Derby N)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawler, Geoffrey
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lester, Jim
Lewis, Sir Kenneth (Stamf'd)
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Nicholas
McCrindle, Robert
McCurley, Mrs Anna
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
MacKay, Andrew (Berkshire)
Maclean, David John
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (N'bury)
McQuarrie, Albert
Madel, David
Major, John
Malins, Humfrey
Marlow, Antony
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Mates, Michael
Mather, Carol
Maude, Hon Francis
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mayhew, Sir Patrick
Merchant, Piers
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Hal (B'grove)
Mills, Iain (Meriden)
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Morris, M. (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Hon C. (Devizes)
Morrison, Hon P. (Chester)
Moynihan, Hon C.
Needham, Richard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Normanton, Tom
Norris, Steven
Oppenheim, Phillip
Osborn, Sir John
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Sir John (Harrow W)
Page, Richard (Herts SW)
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patten, Christopher (Bath)
Patten, J. (Oxf W & Abgdn)
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Percival, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Pollock, Alexander
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Corby)
Powley, John
Price, Sir David
Prior, Rt Hon James
Proctor, K. Harvey
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Rees, Rt Hon Peter (Dover)
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Rippon, Rt Hon Geoffrey
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Robinson, Mark (N'port W)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Sackville, Hon Thomas
Sainsbury, Hon Timothy
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Nicholas
Shaw, Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Silvester, Fred
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon John
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis (Nuneaton)
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stewart, Ian (Hertf'dshire N)
Sumberg, David
Taylor, John (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Terlezki, Stefan
Thatcher, Rt Hon Mrs M.
Thomas, Rt Hon Peter
Thompson, Donald (Calder V)
Thompson, Patrick (N'ich N)
Thorne, Neil (Ilford S)
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
van Straubenzee, Sir W.
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Viggers, Peter
Waddington, David
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Wall, Sir Patrick
Waller, Gary
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watson, John
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen (Hertford)
Wheeler, John
Whitfield, John
Whitney, Raymond
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Michael
Yeo, Tim
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd and
Mr. Gerald Malone.

Question accordingly negatived.
Main Question put:—
The House divided: Ayes 268, Noes 204.

Division No. 45] [10.13 pm

AYES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Ancram, Michael
Arnold, Tom
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Robert (South Ribble)
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Vall'y)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Batiste, Spencer
Beaumont-Dark, Anthony
Bellingham, Henry
Benyon, William
Best, Keith
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A. (Brighton K'to'n)
Brooke, Hon Peter
Brown, M. (Brigg & Cl'thpes)
Browne, John
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon A.
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nick
Carlisle, Rt Hon M. (W'ton S)
Cash, William
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Churchill, W. S.
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Cockeram, Eric
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Simon
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Cranborne, Viscount
Crouch, David
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord J.
Dunn, Robert
Durant, Tony
Dykes, Hugh
Eyre, Sir Reginald
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Anthony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Fraser, Peter (Angus East)
Freeman, Roger
Gale, Roger
Galley, Roy
Gardiner, George (Reigate)
Gardner, Sir Edward (Fylde)
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodlad, Alastair
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony
Greenway, Harry
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon
Griffiths, Peter (Portsm'th N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Harris, David
Harvey, Robert
Havers, Rt Hon Sir Michael
Hawkins, Sir Paul (N'folk SW)
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heddle, John
Henderson, Barry
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hickmet, Richard
Hicks, Robert
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hind, Kenneth
Hirst, Michael
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Stratf'd-on-A)
Howarth, Gerald (Cannock)
Howell, Ralph (Norfolk, N)
Hubbard-Miles, Peter
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Jackson, Robert
Jenkin, Rt Hon Patrick
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert (Herts W)
Joseph, Rt Hon Sir Keith
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom
Knight, Greg (Derby N)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Knox, David
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawler, Geoffrey
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim
Lewis, Sir Kenneth (Stamf'd)
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Nicholas
McCrindle, Robert
McCurley, Mrs Anna
MacGregor, Rt Hon John

MacKay, Andrew (Berkshire)
Maclean, David John
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (N'bury)
McQuarrie, Albert
Madel, David
Major, John
Malins, Humfrey
Marlow, Antony
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Mates, Michael
Mather, Carol
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mayhew, Sir Patrick
Merchant, Piers
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Hal (B'grove)
Mills, Iain (Meriden)
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Morris, M. (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Hon C. (Devizes)
Morrison, Hon P. (Chester)
Moynihan, Hon C.
Needham, Richard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Normanton, Tom
Norris, Steven
Oppenheim, Phillip
Osborn, Sir John
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Sir John (Harrow W)
Page, Richard (Herts SW)
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patten, Christopher (Bath)
Patten, J. (Oxf W & Abgdn)
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Percival, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Pollock, Alexander
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Corby)
Powley, John
Price, Sir David
Proctor, K. Harvey
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Rees, Rt Hon Peter (Dover)
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Rippon, Rt Hon Geoffrey
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Robinson, Mark (N'port W)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Sackville, Hon Thomas
Sainsbury, Hon Timothy
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Nicholas
Shaw, Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Silvester, Fred
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon John
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis (Nuneaton)
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stewart, Ian (Hertf'dshire N)
Sumberg, David
Taylor, John (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Terlezki, Stefan
Thatcher, Rt Hon Mrs M.
Thomas, Rt Hon Peter
Thompson, Donald (Calder V)
Thompson, Patrick (N'ich N)
Thorne, Neil (Ilford S)
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
van Straubenzee, Sir W.
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Viggers, Peter
Waddington, David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Wall, Sir Patrick
Waller, Gary
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watson, John
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen (Hertford)
Wheeler, John
Whitfield, John
Whitney, Raymond
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Michael
Yeo, Tim
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Francis Maude and
Mr. Gerald Malone.

NOES

Abse, Leo
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Alton, David
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Ashdown, Paddy
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Atkinson, N. (Tottenham)
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Barron, Kevin
Beckett, Mrs Margaret
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. (Dent'n & Red'sh)
Bermingham, Gerald
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Anthony
Boothroyd, Miss Betty
Boyes, Roland
Brown, Gordon (D'f'rmline E)
Brown, N. (N'c'tle-u-Tyne E)
Brown, R. (N'c'tle-u-Tyne N)
Brown, Ron (E'burgh, Leith)
Bruce, Malcolm
Buchan, Norman
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim (Heyw'd & M)
Campbell, Ian
Campbell-Savours, Dale
Canavan, Dennis
Carter-Jones, Lewis
Cartwright, John
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Thomas
Clay, Robert
Clelland, David Gordon
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cocks, Rt Hon M. (Bristol S)
Cohen, Harry
Coleman, Donald
Cook, Frank (Stockton North)
Cook, Robin F. (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cox, Thomas (Tooting)
Craigen, J. M.
Crowther, Stan
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Dr John
Dalyell, Tam
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (L'lli)
Davis, Terry (B'ham, H'ge H'l)
Deakins, Eric
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Donald
Dobson, Frank
Dormand, Jack
Douglas, Dick
Dubs, Alfred
Duffy, A. E. P.
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs G.
Eadie, Alex
Eastham, Ken
Edwards, Bob (W'h'mpt'n SE)
Evans, John (St. Helens N)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, T. (L'pool Broad Gn)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forrester, John
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, J. (Norwood)
Freeson, Rt Hon Reginald
Garrett, W. E.
George, Bruce
Godman, Dr Norman
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gould, Bryan
Gourlay, Harry
Hamilton, James (M'well N)
Hamilton, W. W. (Fife Central)
Hancock, Michael
Harrison, Rt Hon Walter
Hart, Rt Hon Dame Judith
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Heffer, Eric S.
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Holland, Stuart (Vauxhall)
Home Robertson, John
Howarth, George (Knowsley, N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Douglas
Hughes, Dr Mark (Durham)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport East)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Janner, Hon Greville
John, Brynmor
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Kaufman, Rt Hon Gerald
Kennedy, Charles
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Kirkwood, Archy
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ronald
Lewis, Ron (Carlisle)
Lewis, Terence (Worsley)
Litherland, Robert
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Edward
McCartney, Hugh
McDonald, Dr Oonagh
McGuire, Michael
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
McKelvey, William
MacKenzie, Rt Hon Gregor
Maclennan, Robert
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Robert
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Marek, Dr John
Martin, Michael
Mason, Rt Hon Roy
Maxton, John
Maynard, Miss Joan
Meacher, Michael
Meadowcroft, Michael
Michie, William
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Morris, Rt Hon A. (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J. (Aberavon)
Nellist, David
O'Brien, William
O'Neill, Martin
Owen, Rt Hon Dr David
Park, George
Parry, Robert
Patchett, Terry
Pavitt, Laurie
Pendry, Tom
Penhaligon, David
Pike, Peter
Powell, Raymond (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Raynsford, Nick
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon M. (Leeds S)
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Ernest (Hackney N)
Robertson, George
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, J. W.
Ross, Ernest (Dundee W)
Ross, Stephen (Isle of Wight)
Rowlands, Ted
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon R.
Shields, Mrs Elizabeth
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Ms Clare (Ladywood)
Short, Mrs R.(W'hampt'n NE)
Silkin, Rt Hon J.
Skinner, Dennis

Smith, C.(Isl'ton S & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (M'ds E)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Stott, Roger
Straw, Jack
Taylor, Rt Hon John David
Thomas, Dafydd (Merioneth)
Thomas, Dr R. (Carmarthen)
Thompson, J. (Wansbeck)
Thorne, Stan (Preston)
Wallace, James
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert
Weetch, Ken
Welsh, Michael
White, James
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon A.
Wilson, Gordon
Winnick, David
Woodall, Alec
Wrigglesworth, Ian
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Ron Davies and
Mr. Sean Hughes.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House approves the Autumn Statement presented by Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer on 6th November; welcomes the prospect of continuing low inflation and steady growth as the basis for maintaining the trend of rising employment; and congratulates Her Majesty's Government on the continuing reduction in the share of national income pre-empted by public expenditure.

Water Authorities (Return on Assets)

10.26 pm

Mr. Roland Boyes (Houghton and Washington): I beg to move,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Water Authorities (Return on Assets) Order 1986 (S.I., 1986, No. 1952), dated 18th November 1986, a copy of which was laid before this House on 24th November, be annulled.

The purpose of the order is to increase the price of water to its users. We in the Labour party do not accept that it is appropriate to calculate the rate of return on a false valuation of the industry's assets.

My hon. Friends the Members for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 2 February 1985 and for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 17 December 1985 discussed the technicality of using the current cost accounting procedure in their speeches on the orders S.I., 1984, No. 1995 and S.I., 1985, No. 1805. My hon. Friend the Member for South Shields said:

"To adopt the current cost accounting procedure as the valuation is a false and incorrect way to handle the issue." —[Official Report, 17 December 1985; Vol. 89, c. 257.]

My hon. Friend the Member for Perry Barr discussed the issued at some length and I do not wish to take time rehearsing the arguments again. However, I wish to consider the implications of the order, which are serious for the people whom my hon. Friends and I represent. There is a clear connection between the return on assets and the level of charges to customers.

An analysis of the figures reveals a number of facts, two of which I wish to highlight. First, since 1984-85 the target rate of return has increased for all water authorities and, secondly, a comparison of the range of rates of return with the previous two years reveals a widening gap. Last year, for example, the range was 1·5 per cent. to 1.73 per cent., whereas this year it is 1·7 per cent. to 2·1 per cent. Why is that happening, when the Government's initial intention was to move to a common rate of return for all authorities?

I am sure that the Minister will have had sight of a document from the Confederation of British Industry about the order, entitled "CBI: the Industrial View", which states:

"it is reasonable to assume that next year's targets are being set to even out price increases rather than encourage effective management with the authorities."

The price to the average householder is increasing dramatically, as a few figures will illustrate. Between 1978-79 and 1986-87, the increase in prices to all water authorities averaged a staggering 143 per cent., ranging from 123 per cent. for South-West Water to 163 per cent. for Northumbrian Water. The average price increase for the past two years was 11·7 per cent. in 1985-86, when all water authorities except one increased prices by double figures. For 1986-87, the average is 8 per cent.—still more than double the inflation rate.

Those increases resulted in extraordinary profits. Northumbrian Water increased its profits seven times and Thames by £45 million from £105 million to £150 million. Clearly, this is completely unacceptable. However, the same customers must accept further increases in 1987-88, which could be as high as 10 per cent. It is certain that they will be well above inflation, which suggests another question to the Minister. In the White Paper on privatisation, price controls of retail price index minus X were proposed. Why are today's customers facing an increase of RPI times X? Not only householders are affected by price increases. Business customers are, too, and the CBI is rightly worried that, after a series of increases exceeding inflation, businesses will have difficulty in keeping down operational costs and remaining competitive. That will have serious implications for jobs, which concerns my hon. Friends.

The water authorities have no option but to increase prices. The Government are slashing their borrowing powers by £100 million; that means that the only alternative is to cut capital spending which, with the current state of the industry, is not a serious option. Mr. Roy Watts, chairman of the Thames water authority, is so worried that he has written to all London Members. In his letter, he says:

"It seems as if we shall once again be asked to substantially increase our repayment of long term debt in the coming year . . . We shall be entirely debt-free within three years, which amounts to a very poor deal for today's customers."

Mr. Malcolm Anson, chairman of Wessex water authority, wrote in a letter to my right hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, South (Mr. Cocks) on 10 December that the effect of the Government's policies could only be to the "detriment of our present standards of service."

As a result of price increases and of reductions in the external financing limit—the borrowing powers of the water authorities—Richard Evans wrote in an article in the Financial Times on 17 July 1986:

"The authorities have become much more financially attractive since the prospect of privatisation was first raised 18 months ago."

It appears that the Government are still committed to privatising the water authorities. Or are they? From previous announcements, one cannot be sure of the Government's thinking on the industry. On 19 December 1984, the former Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Macfarlane), said:

"We have absolutely no intention of privatising the water industry. The Government have no plans to urge that upon the water authorities. There has been some press speculation about it in the past, but there is no intention to do so." —[Official Report, 19 December 1984; Vol. 70, c. 457.]

Just over a month later, on 31 January 1985, in a written answer, the Prime Minister said:

"The Government would welcome new ideas on privatisation. However, the water authorities are natural monopolies for many of their functions and we need to be particularly careful when considering replacing a public monopoly by a private one."—[Official Report, 31 January 1985; Vol. 72, c. 292.]

On 5 February 1986, all had become clear. The Secretary of State for the Environment, now the Secretary of State for Education and Science, said:

"The Government have now decided to transfer the 10 water authorities in England and Wales to private ownership."—[Official Report, 5 February 1986; Vol. 91, c. 287.]

The position was confirmed by the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction when he moved an amendment to a motion of the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 23 June 1986 which

"welcomes the Government's proposals for the privatisation of the water authorities."—[Official Report, 23 June 1986; Vol. 100, c. 36.]

But that is not the end of the story. On 3 July—just over a week after the Minister had spoken—the Secretary of State for the Environment was forced by my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) to come before the House at 10 pm to make what my hon. Friend described as "a pathetic and inadequate statement."

In that statement, the Secretary of State withdrew the Government's privatisation proposals. However, he said:

"I reaffirm the Government's intention to proceed with water privatisation as soon as practicable." — [Official Report, 3 July 1986; Vol. 100, c. 1261.]

I will not ask the Minister to make a statement today. He must realise that this is a bit of a minefield. However, I have a serious comment to make about his Department's water legislation division. In 1985-86, costs other than staff were £103,000. In the first half of 1986-87, the costs had reached a colossal £1·3 million. On what is that money being spent? Should the Government bring back their proposals to privatise the water authorities, I assure the House that they will be opposed as vigorously as they were before.

My hon. Friends and I condemn any proposal to privatise a basic necessity of life. We believe that the water industry should be kept in the public sector, the integrated river basin management retained, and until a regional tier of government is introduced, regional water authorities should continue. However, there will be changes to democratise the boards, as we cannot allow a small group of people meeting in secret to determine policy. We shall invest in the industry to clean up beaches and improve the quality of drinking water. We shall not ask water authorities to become what Roy Watts described as "covert tax collectors" for the Government. Under a Labour Government, water authorities will be able to use profit to improve both quality of service and water to the consumer.

This week, a report by the Nitrate Co-ordination Group, "Nitrates in Water", describes how nitrate levels in some areas are above EEC limits and there is a danger that heavy nitrate concentrations could cause serious health hazards. The Government are also concerned about the state of beaches in the United Kingdom. It is incredible that only 27 beaches in the United Kingdom are designated as possessing bathing water meeting EEC quality standards.

To satisfy the requirements of both the nitrate and bathing beach problems would cost about £600 million. Some £200 million is estimated as being needed to solve the nitrate problem, and £400 million for the bathing beach problem. Ian Hill, the chairman of South-West Water, in The Independent on 13 December is reported as saying that the Minister's announcement on bathing beaches is "incompatible with financial restrictions currently being imposed by the DOE . . . It is just not good enough to order these costly monitoring and improvement works while ignoring the financial implications."

Will the Minister be producing hard cash for the water authorities to carry out these tasks, particularly the £400 million for the short term and urgent need to clean up the beaches?

The CBI, in the note already cited, states:

"The increases in charges expected next year will add between £80 million to £100 million to business and industry's costs . . . The signs are that where large water users discharge effluent to public sewage works it is becoming increasingly attractive for them to instal their own treatment plants."

The writer of the note correctly points out that this will lead to unused and unusable plant in the hands of the water authorities, and consequently, the opportunity for investment in the productive areas that could create employment.

I should be glad to have the Minister's comments on this matter, along with answers to the other questions that I have raised. This is a shabby, unacceptable order. I urge the Minister not to press ahead with it but to take it away and come back with a more acceptable proposal. Unlike Conservative Members, my hon. Friends and I care about the water industry.

10.38 pm

The Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction (Mr. John Patten): I am afraid that I must disappoint the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) after his excellent speech, which contained some penetrating questions. We shall be pressing ahead with the order, and we have every reason to be proud of our record of investment in the water industry since 1979, as I shall be able to demonstrate.

I remind the House of our policy, which I outlined a year ago when the previous order was debated. This is exactly the same policy as that announced in 1984 by my distinguished predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), who I see here tonight. Two years ago we were seeking convergence as much as possible, in answer to the hon. Gentleman's first question. [Interruption.] I do not know what the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) finds so funny about this. I am trying to answer the questions put to me by the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington.

Dr. John Cunningham (Copeland): It was a compliment.

Mr. Patten: If that is a compliment, I shall give way gladly.

Dr. Cunningham: Not to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Patten: In that case, I shall not. I thought that, as it is Christmas time, I might get a compliment from the hon. Gentleman, but, alas, I shall not.

I agree with the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington that there has been some divergence, but this divergence reflects the financing needs of the authorities. Anglian has the highest target, reflecting its heavy investment requirements and its need to reduce the heavy burden of interest.

We have asked water authorities steadily to improve the rate of return that they earn on their capital assets. The previous figure of approximately 1 per cent. was an inadequate return on the considerable investment in the water industry. In 1984 the target announced for 1987-88 by my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne was an average of 1·9 per cent. The average figure in the order that was laid on 24 November is close to that figure, but at 1·875 per cent. it is not quite so tough.

The hon. Member for Houghton and Washington was a little unfair about the Government's record since 1979. In 1986-87, water authorities' capital expenditure, excluding expenditure on the tricky subject of land drainage, is £925 million, about 40 per cent. of revenue. That is not bad. It represents an increase of 35 per cent., in volume terms, since 1980-81. In some areas the increases, in volume terms, are even higher — 70 per cent. in the South-West, 74 per cent. in the North-West and 110 per cent. in Wessex. I do not see any Members from Wessex constituencies here; clearly they are very satisfied with the volume of investment in their area. It is more than the 70 per cent. increase in the South-West, where the volume of investment is considerably above the national average.

[Mr. Patten]

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): Of course the Wessex Members of Parliament are satisfied. They obtain a great deal of their water from a new reservoir, paid for out of capital, in the South-West water authority's area.

Mr. Patten: The South-West will have its own splendid reservoir when Roadford reservoir is constructed.

In 1974, virtually all the investment by the water authorities was funded by borrowing. Inevitably, that placed a burden on public expenditure. By 1980-81, 40 per cent. of the investment was funded by borrowing. In 1987-88 the industry will pay for virtually all its investment. That has been achieved while the burden on public expenditure has been reduced.

The water authorities deserve praise for their efficiency. They have reduced their total operating costs by 6 per cent., in real terms, since 1980. Efficiency in most water authorities has improved year by year. Unfortunately, it has slipped back in recent years in a few authorities. Operating and management expenditure per head has been reduced for all major services. Standards of service have been maintained or improved, although a few water authorities could do better. On the whole, though water authorities are doing more work for less expenditure. That is an impressive record.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): Does the Minister know of any public sector body from which the Government have required such a large pay back of borrowed money in the last three years?

Mr. Patten: There is nothing wrong with a businesslike rate of return of 1 to 2 per cent. on water industry assets. Any business would expect to earn considerably more. I can tell the official spokesman for the alliance, its representative here today, that water authority debt stands at about £5 billion and interest charges take no less than one quarter of the whole of the revenue from water authority customers. That is too much, hence the policy laid down by my predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne.

Amidst all the understandable concern about bathing beaches and the quality of river water, which the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington did not mention, let us remember that 99 per cent. of Britain's households are connected to mains water and 95 per cent. are connected to sewerage. Those are the highest percentages in Europe.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Thanks to public enterprise.

Mr. Patten: Thanks to public and private enterprise over the best part of 200 years. Every year, service standards to maintain these improvements are monitored through the process of the corporate plans produced by water authorities.

Mr. Spearing: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Patten: Perhaps the hon. Gentleman will forgive me if I do not. This is a short debate and I must make progress. The number of customers experiencing inadequate water pressure has fallen considerably. In every area the quality of drinking water has improved, and I am happy to report to the House that the number of properties affected by sewage flooding is low and has fallen in most authority areas. The reductions in operating costs achieved by most authorities have not been at the cost of a reduction in service standards. That is a tribute to the publicly owned water authorities and, where appropriate, to the excellent record of the privately owned water companies. I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Sir J. Page) in his place.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: They do not dispose of sewage.

Mr. Patten: They do not; I am well aware of that. However, they supply water and have a good record for supplying potable water at a good cost. The underlying gains in efficiency are better than steady and, even after all these service improvements, there has been a 6 per cent. reduction in operating costs.

Despite the evidence of improving levels of service, we still hear frequent complaints about the state of the water industry's assets. That is a bit of a myth, because asset condition is now reported annually in the corporate plans of water authorities, and we discuss those with the authorities, as I have done this year with every water authority in England and as my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Robinson) the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, has done with the chairman of the Welsh water authority.

Thanks to the independent-minded work of the Water Research Centre, the water industry now has manuals describing the best way of conducting and interpreting surveys on the condition of assets. All authorities are making considerable progress with these surveys.

The record shows increased investment and lower operating costs. There have been improvements in service standards, certainly an improved knowledge of asset condition, and a reduction in the burden of public expenditure, which I applaud. The present order continues that policy. It is a great contrast to the policy which led to declining investment for which some right hon. Gentlemen on the Opposition Front Bench were responsible in the Labour Government before 1979.

In 1979 we saw declining investment and seemingly bottomless deficit financing of the water industry. That was the picture that faced the Government when we took power in 1979. It was not a happy picture, and the progress that has been made since 1979 is a remarkable tribute to the efficiency of the water authorities and to the Government for the substantial sums of money invested in the industry.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): How many jobs have been lost?

Mr. Patten: About 20 per cent. Of course, aspirations must go on rising and I share those aspirations, as does my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. As scientific understanding and environmental awareness develop, and as general living standards continue to rise for most of — though not all — our citizens we will have to apply ever-higher standards. We are not trying to measure our achievements in the water industry against one benchmark. The water authorities have been brought to a much stronger financial position from which they can face the problems. Their corporate plans show that they recognise the problems and have the will to tackle them.

The order continues the Government's progress before privatisation, to which the Government remain committed, in discharging their responsibility to ensure that the water authorities operate in an effective and businesslike way.

It is a long time now since the water industry was the poor relation of local government, which it was for too long. The Government can rightly claim that we have created the conditions of sound finance and commercial flair which now, more than ever before, permeate most water authorities and reflect what their customers expect. That is why we intend to press the order home tonight.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. I remind the House that the debate must finish at 11.30 pm and the Front bench spokesmen are hoping to catch my eye at 11.20 pm.

10.51 pm

Mr. William O'Brien (Normanton): The debate has been initiated because of the impact of the Government's financial policy on water authorities' charges next year. Current signs are that the charges for most water authorities will increase by between 8 and 10 per cent., with the majority being at the 10 per cent. mark. That follows an increase in excess of 10 per cent. for the current year. Therefore, there is little comfort in what the Minister has offered tonight to water consumers throughout the length and breadth of Britain.

If there is one Minister in the Government who has his head in the sand, it is the Minister who is responsible for water charges. The Government's policies have meant high prices, well above the rate of inflation, and, in most cases, a reduction in services. If consumers had the choice, would they go for a rise in water charges in order to receive a higher level of services? We often hear that question posed in the water industry.

Mr. John Patten: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. O'Brien: The Minister was the first to say that this was a short debate, yet after two minutes he asks me to give way. I am afraid that I must refuse the Minister on this occasion. The Minister refused to give way to me once in Committee because he wanted an apology. I shall not give way to the Minister.

In Yorkshire, charges have been increased, yet we are still suffering from discoloured water, soil collapse and flooding. If the Minister comes to Yorkshire he will see how higher charges are reflected in the services provided for the people there. He did not mention Yorkshire.

It is politically impossible for the Government to rate-cap local authorities to fight inflation and then to increase charges to water consumers by an average of 10 per cent. It is also an unnecessary burden to increase charges for industry, particularly the big water users, such as the food processing, chemical, pharmaceuticals, textiles, brewing and paper industries. I believe it is an attack on job opportunities in the large water-consuming industries. The object of the 1983 reorganisation was to ensure that the water authorities were run as highly efficient businesses. The way in which the Minister has described the order tonight suggests that they are just turning water authorities into tax collectors because the order is nothing more than a tax increase on water charges.

I should like to raise the question of the water authorities opening their meetings to the public and the press. We are talking about water charge increases which will affect all water consumers, especially in Yorkshire, yet there is no opportunity for members of the public or consumers to try to find out how decisions are reached.

Earlier this month the Yorkshire water authority at a board meeting, revealed:

"the increase would have been nearly 2 per cent. higher if it had not been for two factors: the welcome relaxation by the Government of financial controls which permit more borrowing".

If to "permit more borrowing" is the criterion for reducing charges, why do the Government not allow that to continue? That is the Yorkshire water authority's suggestion to keep charges down.

On behalf of the Yorkshire water authority, I must say that if we are to be reasonable to consumers we should allow more borrowing to take place, as has been described by that authority, in order to keep prices down. I hope that we will reject the order.

10.56 pm

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): There are many defects in the argument that my hon. Friend the Minister put forward. If he had been listening at Question Time, he would have heard his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State say that he regarded borrowings not as debt but in the nature of an overhead. If that is the case, it is nonsense to talk about return on capital. The Minister cannot call it capital for one argument and for another call it overhead. He should make his mind up which it is, instead of trying to ride both horses or they will split him down the middle because they are going in different directions.

The Government are trying, we understand, to control inflation. Therefore, what possible reason can there be to bring in orders the effect of which is to increase the water rates by more than the rate of inflation? Water is the tool of the trade of many industries—for example, the paper industry. It must be remembered that retirement pensions increase only as function of the retail price index and, moreover, they are not subject to abatement, unlike rates. Those are two good reasons for keeping water charges below the rate of inflation and not allowing them to go above it.

The other major point I want to make is that the Department of the Environement is supposed to be a coherent Department of State. There are many reasons for believing that that is a false assumption. It is simply not coherent to have one Minister exhorting water authorities to spend immense sums of money on new sewerage works to process sewage, instead of what is politely known as macerating it and then releasing it into the sea—that may be commendable—and then to have a zero external financing limit imposed on the water authority that has the longest coastline of any per head of population and whose population increased by a tremendous factor in the summer—it has approximately on quarter of the tourist activity in Britain—when water flows are at a minimum.

The use of capital expenditure for the purpose of cleaning up the beaches is not compatible with the order against which the prayer has been laid. I shall be voting for the prayer because the order does not contain a coherent and sensible policy and because it is not compatible with what the autumn statement has to say about inflation.

[Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop]

11 pm

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): This issue of water charges in Wales has been a contentious one for a long time and it has become more contentious in recent years because of the substantial increase in the cost of water under the Government's policies. Welsh water rate payers have to pay £4 million more a year in water rates as a result of a deliberate act of policy by the Government when they did away with the Water Equalisation Act 1977. There has been a historic high level of water charges in Wales, which for the most of the time have been at the top of the league table of charges in England and Wales, and in the past couple of years there have been forced increases in water charges arising from the requirement to have a set return on the capital base.

Water rates in Wales will increase next year between twice and three times the rate of inflation as a result of the order against which we are praying. The charge for water will increase by 6 per cent., 7 per cent. or 8 per cent. compared with the going rate of inflation, which is 3 per cent. That will hit those who can ill afford to pay such charges.

Why are we being forced to increase water charges in Wales in this way? Increased charges are being imposed to finance the capital expenditure programme, which I agree is necessary in Wales. I understand that the capital expenditure programme next year will include about £68 million for the Welsh water authority. A substantial part of the programme will be directed to improving beaches in Wales, and no one would dispute the need to improve their standard. We contend, however, that the cost of undertaking the necessary work should be borne by the taxpayer in general and not only by the ratepayer in Wales. The beaches of Wales are for the benefit of people from all parts of these islands and the cost of improving them should not be incurred only by water rate payers in Wales. The cost of cleaning the beaches of Wales should be met by Treasury grant instead of increasing the return on capital. The order will require a 1·95 per cent. return on capital base, which is higher than the average. I believe that the Minister said that the average is 1·875 per cent. As I have said, charges in Wales are already high.

The proposed increase will realise an additional £7·5 million a year. That is the increased profit that is required to be funded by Welsh water rate payers to finance the Government's back-door taxation. The logic of the Government's position suggests that there is a move towards privatisation. The Welsh water authority has a capital base of £1,600 million and if there were to be a reasonable return in financial terms on that base we would be looking for 10 per cent., which would be £160 million a year. The profit of the authority has been about £24 million a year, and that will increase to about £30 million as a result of the change that the Government propose. That is nothing like the return that will be required if the authority is to be privatised.

If there is to be privatisation, there will have to be a massive increase in the cost of water or the assets of the authority will have to be given away at about a fifth or a quarter of the cost of their construction. That would be a nonsensical public policy. The dogmatic privatisation which the Government insist on pursuing is the reason why Welsh water rate payers are being required to pay 6 per cent., 7 per cent. or 8 per cent. more for their water next year.

As I have said, the extra charge will hit home extremely hard. If the authority is privatised, the increased capital expenditure which is being justified by the Government will not be directed to capital expenditure. It will be given in the form of a dividend to those who have put money in. In other words, it is an excuse to say that we need to fund capital expenditure by increasing the return. The Government want the return to be high enough to be attractive to those who may put money in. There is no way in which privatisation of this basic public service can be justified, as the Government insist, and the poor water rate payer will have to bear the cost.

11.5 pm

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): I rise to congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister on the way in which he has presented the Government's case, and to say that I hope that my hon. Friends will vote against the Opposition's prayer.

I very much welcome my hon. Friend's reaffirmation of the Government's commitment to the privatisation of the water industry. That privatisation is long overdue, and I hope that it will be included in one of the first Bills in the next Parliament. When that privatisation has been accomplished, it will no longer be necessary for us to debate such orders late at night. although reference has been made to the remarks of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, it is emphatically the case that the water industry is capable of responding to a new impetus and to the fresh ideas which will come from private ownership.

My hon. Friend the Minister is continuing with the Government's sensible economic policy in seeking a proper return on the water authorities' assets. There has been a slight modification of the policy. The return on assets sought in the order is slightly less than was envisaged two years ago. Nevertheless, requiring a higher and more appropriate return on assets moves the water authorities in the right direction.

There is one specific point that I wish to put to my hon. Friend the Minister, and I hope that he has had more success than I had when I held his responsibilities. It was my experience that the nine water authorities in England were extremely reluctant to dispose of land that was not required for operational purposes. There was a misunderstanding, or myth, that it was necessary for the water authority requiring a catchment area to own the freehold.

I hope that my hon. Friend will persevere strenuously and urgently with the policy of requiring the water authorities to dispose of land that is not required for operational purposes. Such a disposal of assets would diminish the cost to the customer and would affect the way in which my hon. Friend presents any further orders, if there are any. I urge on my hon. friend the truth of the proposition that it is possible to safeguard the purity of supply from a catchment area without the water authority owning the land involved.

I congratulate my hon. Friend, and I hope that the Opposition's prayer will be soundly defeated.

11.8 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): We will wholeheartedly support the prayer, because the Government have persisted in the same illogical economic policy and ignored the consumer.

It is illogical to say that over a very short period of time the borrowing necessary for the water industry must be paid off by the consumers of last year, this year and next year. That is not the way that public finance should work, and it is not the way that it works anywhere else. One should add to that, as the hon. Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) said, the completely contradictory statement of Government policy that was adumbrated only hours ago by the Chancellor of the Exchequer when asking the House to approve his autumn statement. In chapter 1, "Economic prospects for 1987", the Chancellor makes it clear that the Government still regard the containment of inflation to about 3 per cent. as one of the cornerstones of their economic policy. Yet the Government persist—the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) started the policy when he was Minister with responsibility for the water industry — in telling the industry that it must repay money and make such charges as will inevitably cause the consumers to pay substantially more than the rate of inflation, which they regard as unacceptable. It is not acceptable in terms of economic logic or in terms of who should bear the cost burden of the water industry. Above all, it is not acceptable to the consumer.

The Minister referred to many points, some of which we do not disagree with — for example, the need for investment. There is clearly a substantial need for investment and greater efficiency. However, he did not explain that the policy will substantially increase the price of water for people in Tory-held constituencies in the Thames region and elsewhere. The Government must accept the responsibility for that.

The Minister knows that in October the chairman of the Thames water authority wrote to all hon. Members representing constituencies in the Thames water authority region — all 148 Members, the majority of whom are Conservatives, including the Prime Minister and the Minister responsible for the water industry—stating that if the policy were pursued there would be an increase of about 10 per cent. in the forthcoming year. One high-ranking Government source—who appears unnamed at the relevant time — made it clear that that was an entirely unacceptable way for the chairman of the Thames water authority to behave and that he would not be reappointed.

It is unacceptable for someone who is appointed by the Government to run a quango to be criticised when he tries this year, for the third year running, to say that the authority does not want or need the increase. The authority does not regard the increase as reasonable or appropriate because it is doing perfectly well and should be left to its own devices.

It is unacceptable that, for the third year in a row, we have an order before us requiring a return on assets that has not been asked for by the authorities. The rate of return is higher than ever before. It increased from 1·4 per cent. three years ago to an average of 1·62 per cent. last year, and the average is 1·88 per cent. this year.

The debate will again reflect anger at the Government's failure to comprehend. They have chosen the wrong criteria for calculating the way in which historical and actual costs should be financed. They have neglected the fact that if they did not require the money to be paid back to the Treasury, it could be invested in infrastructure. They have also neglected the enormous environmental demands and requirements that proper investment could allow to proceed.

The Government have become hooked on an economic policy that is nonsense. They want to make the fatted calf ripe for slaughter when they privatise the industry. I do not believe that they will privatise it. If they put privatisation up front in their election shop window, their natural supporters will claim that privatising the water industry and the environment is unacceptable. In the same way this increase in water charges is unacceptable. It will remain unacceptable every time the Government try this con on the country. They could avoid it if they only had the guts to do so.

11.13 pm

Mr. Tony Speller (Devon, North): The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) made an interesting speech. It appears that the Liberal party has made a good economic case for privatisation. That is not the point that I seek to make. The test must be whether the order fulfils the wishes of the consumers—the users of water, the residents of the area. I must say to the Minister that, frankly, the order does not meet their wishes.

The water authorities are inevitably the least popular authorities of all unpopular bodies. That will always be the case as their responsibilities are so vast and their areas so huge. It is no accident that there is a triangle of colleagues in the Chamber representing constituencies in the South-West water authority region. We all suffer from old mains, over-developed rural areas, low pressure and everything that is costly and where improvement is inevitable. Therefore, anything that we allow our authorities to invest in the mains and the infrastructure must be welcome. I do not go as far as the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey because it is also inevitable that we must turn to the idea of privatisation to give the consumer that which he wishes to have.

I do not put that forward as an argument for voting against the order. My fear is, quite simply, that someone in the Department thought of an acceptable figure — 5 per cent. or 7 per cent.—about which people would not complain. I find that an unacceptable and unreasonable way of conducting matters.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) spoke about one area where the sewage is macerated before being put into the estuary of two most beautiful rivers, the Taw and the Torridge. Someone somewhere has to permit water authorities to spend their money on things that we must have, such as clean, pollution-free water.

I am entirely in favour of privatising what might be called a water company, but there is no way in which we can privatise and put on the meter the cost for coastal protection, prevention of urban and rural pollution and the riparian interests. We must think a great deal harder and a great deal further ahead before we bring any water body to the marketplace. I am not against the marketplace. I believe in it, and I was fascinated to hear the argument in favour of a market operation. However, I could never support an operation that meant saying to the business man or the farmer with a meter, "It is your job to pay for every bit of water pollution, recreation and coastal defence." That would be illogical, and we must not follow that road.

[Mr. Tony Speller]

Having said that, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Minister, who has given long and hard consideration, under some very hard pounding——

Mr. John Patten: And long pounding.

Mr. Speller: Indeed, and especially from the west country. That pounding will continue. It will be as the water breaking on the breakwater, until the ministerial breakwater gives way.

11.17 pm

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): The old-age pensioners and the low-paid workers who come to my surgery clutching their water bills from the Welsh water authority despair when those bills arrive in their post because they know that they will not obtain any help towards payment. That means a fall in their already poor standard of living. They live in an area of low income, high unemployment and rotten housing. The incredibly high water bills are yet another injustice perpetuated by this Government.

There is an abundance of water in Wales. Water charges and standards of service have been emotive and keenly debated issues in Wales for a long time. Customers of the water services in Wales have many reasons for feeling that they are at a disadvantage compared with people in many areas of England. The average water rates bill in Wales of £110 is the third highest in the country and £34 higher than in the Severn-Trent area, where much of the water comes from Welsh reservoirs. Indeed, more than 20,000 Welsh ratepayers have withheld payment of their water bills in protest at what they see as discrimination in water charges.

Two years ago, the Welsh Affairs Select Committee put forward important proposals to deal with water rates. The two key proposals—that there should be a system of partial equalisation of water rates and a water rates rebate system to ease the burden on Welsh water ratepayers—were rejected, of course, by this Government. The Secretary of State for Wales derided the idea of an equalisation system, saying that it could be achieved only if a national water authority for the United Kingdom was created with "all the penalties in terms of inefficiency and lack of local sensitivity, which would probably be the price of such a large organisation."—[Official Report, Welsh Grand Committee, 21 March 1984; c. 11.]

What could be more insensitive to local feelings than the imposition of these higher water charges on the people of Wales which the Government are trying to enforce tonight?

The Government are proposing to hit the people of Wales again. They are ignoring the sense of grievance over the water issue. Since 1979 the overall increase in Welsh water rates has been 132 per cent. in cash and 40 per cent. in real terms. That is wholly unacceptable to the people of Wales. I assure the Government that they will make their displeasure known in no uncertain terms.

11.19 pm

Mr. Roy Hughes (Newport, East): The order lays down the return on assets for water authorities in England and Wales. The figures look modest, but with the arcane system of accountancy they constitute a considerable burden, as my hon. Friend the Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) made clear. The figure for Wales has risen from 1·45 per cent. in 1985-86 to 1·7 per cent. in 1986-87 and will rise to 1·95 per cent. in 1987-88.

The Government's policy towards the water industry has been spawned over a number of years. What was essentially a local government service has been taken over. By 1981 our water authorities were committed to current cost accounting, a system most unsuitable for that industry. Reservoirs and sewage installations are built to last a hundred years. Why should people living today bear the whole cost of installations that will serve people not yet born? These are essentially long-term investments and should be financed accordingly.

We know of the Government's obsession with the public sector borrowing requirement, but the fundamental reason for their approach is the pursuit of privatisation. Juicy profits make water installations a rosier prospect for the market place. Water is big business today. The 10 water authorities of England and Wales spend more than £2,000 million per year and employ more than 50,000 people. A great sell-off of those undertakings would certainly enrich the Government's coffers.

Meanwhile, consumers suffer. In Wales we have become accustomed to a standard seasonal announcement. The columns of our newspapers regularly blurt out the message, "Water to cost more next year", but many of the increases are entirely unnecessary. As my hon. Friend the Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) pointed out, there is a contradiction in the Government's policy. Water charges are based on rateable value. The Government are leaning on local authorities to keep rates down, but they are actively striving to drive water charges up. Water is a basic and essential commodity, and in Wales we have an abundant supply, yet further increases of up to 10 per cent. are expected in the new year. That is more than double the rate of inflation. It will increase the average Welsh water bill to £124 and make Welsh water the most expensive in the country. It is no wonder that water in Wales is an emotive subject.

The Government are responsible for that preposterous situation. The price of water is being driven up to absurd levels because of their policies. The Secretary of State for Wales sits in the Cabinet and allows these things to happen. A couple of days ago he announced that he would not be standing at the next general election, so he will be little more than a lame duck until then. His staying on is understandable, given the paucity of talent on the Tory Benches.

Yesterday, that most authoritative journal, the Financial Times, in an article by Peter Riddell, considered who would be the next Welsh Secretary.

Mr. John Patten: My hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones).

Mr. Hughes: The caption to the photograph said that the Secretary of State was "leaving the bridge uncrossed". The headline proclaimed:

"Tories scour Wales in the search for Edwards' successor."

The article ran in the form of an advertisement and said:

"WANTED: A Welsh-born Tory MP with some administrative and political talent and potential to become a Cabinet minister."

The article said that the existing Under-Secretaries of State were inadequate and that

"The other 10 MPs consist mainly of a mixture of those nearing the end of their careers, perpetual undistinguished backbenchers, the unpromotable and the inexperienced."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I hope that we can get back to the prayer.

Mr. Hughes: What a party claiming to represent Wales! All I can say is that there is no problem for the Tory party, because after the next general election the Secretary of State for Wales will be my hon. Friend the Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones).

11.26 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Mark Robinson): It is a great pity that the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) chose the opportunity of what has otherwise been a serious debate to indulge in a personal attack on my right hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Edwards), and to have the discourtesy to do it when my right hon. Friend is not in the chamber to defend himself.

Mr. Roy Hughes: It was not an attack.

Mr. Robinson: My right hon. Friend has done a superb job as Secretary of State for Wales and will continue to do so as long as he is in this House.

Many Opposition Members, while extolling the virtues of increased investment in the water industry, failed to acknowledge that that can be achieved only in the context of authorities being efficient and effective. I entirely agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow) about the benefits that will be derived from water privatisation. I assure my hon. Friend that it remains our policy that water authorities should sell off land that is surplus to their requirements.

Privatisation will give the water industry freedom to operate in the capital markets and render the need for a debate such as this completely unnecessary. We have heard some alarmist and fictional figures for the likely rise in water charges, including charges in Wales. I am assured that Yorkshire Water charges will go up by only about 5·5 per cent., which I am sure is welcome news to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

Mr. Boyes: Does that include inflation?

Mr. Robinson: Yes.

We expect charges to rise in a band of between 4·5 per cent. and 7 per cent. On the basis of my conversation with the chairman of the Welsh water authority, I expect its rise to be within that band rather than the alarmist 10 per cent. which the hon. Member for Newport, East mentioned. I do not know where he got that figure from. He is clearly not living in the real world.

Contrary to what the hon. Member for Newport, East said, we have improved the efficiency with which the water industry is run and provided the basis on which we have been able to improve the infrastructure through which water is provided. We have also set out, through such investment, to improve water quality.

The success of the Government's financial policy for the water authorities is clear. Investment has increased by more than 55 per cent., or about 35 per cent. in volume terms, after taking account of inflation in construction prices. At the same time, the Government have taken a grip on the legacy of water authority borrowing. Water authorities' operating costs have also been substantially reduced. There can be no turning back on this policy. Therefore, I commend the order to the House and urge hon. Members to vote against the prayer.

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 110, Noes 160.

Division No. 46] [11.30 pm

AYES

Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Alton, David
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Ashdown, Paddy
Atkinson, N. (Tottenham)
Banks, Tony (Newham NW)
Beckett, Mrs Margaret
Beith, A. J.
Bell, Stuart
Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Bennett, A. (Dent'n & Red'sh)
Bermingham, Gerald
Blair, Anthony
Boyes, Roland
Brown, Gordon (D'f'mline E)
Callaghan, Jim (Heyw'd & M)
Canavan, Dennis
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clay, Robert
Clelland, David Gordon
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cocks, Rt Hon M. (Bristol S)
Cook, Robin F. (Livingston)
Corbyn, Jeremy
Craigen, J. M.
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Dr John
Dalyell, Tam
Davis, Terry (B'ham, H'ge H'l)
Dixon, Donald
Dobson, Frank
Dormand, Jack
Dubs, Alfred
Duffy, A. E. P.
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs G.
Eadie, Alex
Eastham, Ken
Fatchett, Derek
Fields, T. (L'pool Broad Gn)
Fisher, Mark
Foster, Derek
George, Bruce
Godman, Dr Norman
Hamilton, James (M'well N)
Harrison, Rt Hon Walter
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Home Robertson, John
Howarth, George (Knowsley, N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport East)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
John, Brynmor
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Kirkwood, Archy
Lamond, James
Lewis, Ron (Carlisle)
Lewis, Terence (Worsley)
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Edward
McCartney, Hugh
McDonald, Dr Oonagh
McGuire, Michael
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
MacKenzie, Rt Hon Gregor
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Mallon, Seamus
Marek, Dr John
Martin, Michael
Maxton, John
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Meadowcroft, Michael
Michie, William
Nellist, David
O'Brien, William
Owen, Rt Hon Dr David
Park, George
Patchett, Terry
Pendry, Tom
Penhaligon, David
Pike, Peter
Powell, Raymond (Ogmore)
Raynsford, Nick
Redmond, Martin
Robertson, George
Rooker, J. W.
Rowlands, Ted
Shields, Mrs Elizabeth
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, C.(Isl'ton S & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (M'ds E)
Snape, Peter
Spearing, Nigel
Steel, Rt Hon David
Stott, Roger
Straw, Jack
Thomas, Dafydd (Merioneth)
Thompson, J. (Wansbeck)
Wallace, James
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert
Welsh, Michael
Wigley, Dafydd
Winnick, David
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Ron Davies and
Mr. Sean Hughes.

NOES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Batiste, Spencer
Bellingham, Henry
Benyon, William
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Brooke, Hon Peter
Brown, M. (Brigg & Cl'thpes)
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nick
Cockeram, Eric
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Cope, John
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord J.
Dunn, Robert
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Anthony
Forth, Eric
Fox, Sir Marcus

Franks, Cecil
Fraser, Peter (Angus East)
Freeman, Roger
Galley, Roy
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Goodlad, Alastair
Gow, Ian
Greenway, Harry
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Peter (Portsm'th N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hanley, Jeremy
Harris, David
Harvey, Robert
Havers, Rt Hon Sir Michael
Hawkins, Sir Paul (N'folk SW)
Hayward, Robert
Heddle, John
Hickmet, Richard
Hind, Kenneth
Hirst, Michael
Holt, Richard
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Stratf'd-on-A)
Howarth, Gerald (Cannock)
Hubbard-Miles, Peter
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Jackson, Robert
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert (Herts W)
Key, Robert
Knight, Greg (Derby N)
Knowles, Michael
Lang, Ian
Lawler, Geoffrey
Lawrence, Ivan
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lester, Jim
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Lyell, Nicholas
McCurley, Mrs Anna
MacKay, Andrew (Berkshire)
Maclean, David John
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (N'bury)
Major, John
Malins, Humfrey
Marlow, Antony
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Mather, Carol
Mayhew, Sir Patrick
Merchant, Piers
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Hal (B'grove)
Mills, Iain (Meriden)
Moate, Roger
Morris, M. (N'hampton S)
Morrison, Hon C. (Devizes)
Moynihan, Hon C.
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Nicholls, Patrick
Norris, Steven
Osborn, Sir John
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Sir John (Harrow W)
Page, Richard (Herts SW)
Patten, Christopher (Bath)
Patten, J. (Oxf W & Abgdn)
Pollock, Alexander
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Corby)
Powley, John
Proctor, K. Harvey
Raffan, Keith
Rathbone, Tim
Rhodes James, Robert
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Robinson, Mark (N'port W)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rowe, Andrew
Sackville, Hon Thomas
Sainsbury, Hon Timothy
Sayeed, Jonathan
Scott, Nicholas
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Silvester, Fred
Sims, Roger
Skeet, Sir Trevor
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Stanbrook, Ivor
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis (Nuneaton)
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Temple-Morris, Peter
Terlezki, Stefan
Thatcher, Rt Hon Mrs M.
Thomas, Rt Hon Peter
Thompson, Donald (Calder V)
Thompson, Patrick (N'ich N)
Thorne, Neil (Ilford S)
Thurnham, Peter
Waddington, David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Wall, Sir Patrick
Waller, Gary
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen (Hertford)
Wheeler, John
Whitfield, John
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Michael
Yeo, Tim

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Francis Maude and
Mr. Tony Durant.

Question accordingly negatived.

Private Bill Procedure

Motion made, and Question proposed,

That, in accordance with the resolution of 16th June in the last Session of Parliament, a Select Committee of seven Members be appointed to join with a Committee to be appointed by the Lords to examine the process of enacting Private Legislation and to consider whether:

(a) there are any matters of a kind at present dealt with by Private Bill which could more appropriately be dealt with some other way, taking account of the interests both of Promoters and other affected parties;

(b) any changes are desirable in Private Bill procedure; and

(c) any amendments are desirable to the Private Legislation Procedure (Scotland) Act 1936 and the procedure thereunder; and to consider whether any amendments are desirable to the Statutory Orders (Special Procedure) Act 1945.

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

That three be the Quorum of the Committee.

That Mrs. Ann Clwyd, Mr. Terry Davis, Sir Anthony Grant, Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson, Mr. Albert McQuarrie, Mr. Roger Moate and Sir John Stradling Thomas be members of the Committee.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

Mr. Robin Maxwell-Hyslop (Tiverton): This is debatable, is it not, Mr. Deputy Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): No, it is after 10 o'clock. It is not debatable.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. This is a debatable motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But it has not been exempted.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: No; therefore, I understand that it cannot proceed if hon. Members wish to debate it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is correct.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: I wish to debate it, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is an objection. Further consideration what day? No day named.

SCOTTISH GRAND COMMITTEE

Ordered,

That, in the course of its consideration of the matter of Agriculture and Fishing in Scotland, the Scottish Grand Committee may meet in Edinburgh on Monday, 19th January 1987, at half-past Ten o'clock.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101 (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments &c.),

That the draft Employment Protection (Variation of Limits) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 2nd December, be approved.

That the draft Unfair Dismissal (Increase of Limits of Basic and Special Awards) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 2nd December, be approved.

That the draft Unfair Dismissal (Increase of Compensation Limit) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 2nd December, be approved.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

Question agreed to

PUBLIC SUPPLY CONTRACTS

Ordered,

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 8034/86 on public supply contracts, and the Supplementary Explanatory Memorandum from Her Majesty's Treasury dated 5th December; endorses the view that revisions to the earlier supplies Directives 77/62 and 80/767 are necessary in order to improve public purchasing opportunities throughout the Community; and welcomes the Government's endeavours to amend the proposals so as to reduce the administrative burden on purchasers and suppliers. —[Mr. Boscawen.]

Prisoners (Northern Ireland)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Boscawen.]

11.42 pm

Mr. Seamus Mallon (Newry and Armagh): I very much welcome the opportunity to debate briefly the problem of those, especially young people, who are sentenced under the pleasure of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and those who are serving life sentences. This is an opportune time to consider the matter, because the nature of the problem is emphasised at this time of year. It is also important to discuss the matter because, in many ways, we are reviewing many of the provisions and terms of justice in the north of Ireland.

One cannot properly discuss the problem without considering the position of young people in Northern Ireland. They have lived their young lives against a background of unrest and violence. Indeed, an entire generation of young people in the north of Ireland have never known normality, have never known anything but violence and have been unable to adjust to the unrest. They are caught in the spiral of violence and they have lived through some very emotional periods.

Youngsters from both sections of the community—Nationalist and Unionist—whatever political opinions they have, have all lived through emotional and emotive times. They include the period after bloody Sunday, when 13 people were killed in Derry, when the Stormont Parliament was prorogued, after the deaths on hunger strike in the prisons. It has also happened because of the catharsis in the Unionist community. Young people have become the pawns in this spiral of violence. They have become the victims of the godfathers of violence, the hate-mongers, those who wish to incite people to violence. It is for that reason that I ask for a review of the procedure under which their sentences are reviewed, and that should be done in a spirit of compassion and humanity.

I take this opportunity to thank the Minister for the way in which he has approached the problem. I am not sure of the figures, but I believe that about 50 have been released under the review system since 1983, and 12 have been released this year. I ask him, at this time of the year, to take the opportunity substantially to increase that figure, because it is the key to many problems that we are not solving.

We are dealing with legislation that was framed in 1969, when this period of violence, lasting four times as long as the last war, could not have been foreseen. It is inadequate because it was not intended to cope with the problems with which it has to cope. Section 73(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act simply cannot deal adequately with the problems that face it. The period of conflict was not foreseen, and the Act was not drafted to cope with it. It was drafted to ensure two things. The first was that young people did not receive the same sentences as adults, who were in a position to make concious judgments about their decisions. Secondly, it was framed to try to ensure that young people did not serve life imprisonment.

Unfortunately, it has done the opposite. It has ensured that the young person receives the same sentence as the adult prisoner, and is reviewed under the same procedure, with one minor change. It ensures that young people are serving life sentences. I know that it is difficult to define a life sentence, but the same norm is being applied to young people as is applied to adults in the review of sentences. The same procedure and time scale are used, with one small difference of eight instead of 10 years. They are getting roughly the same lengths of sentence, with the added factor that in the case of a young person's sentence under the Secretary of State's pleasure, the sentence is indeterminate. That in itself creates problems that do not exist for the adult person who has been sentenced to life imprisonment.

[Mr. Seamus Mallon]

I ask the Secretary of State to examine the basis of the legislation and the review procedure. We are reviewing the Emergency Provisions (Northern Ireland) Act, and we shall soon review the police complaints procedure. We shall be reviewing the legislation on public order. Why do we not have a review of this crucial legislation and procedure? I ask the Minister to consider not just adopting a piecemeal approach but repealing the legislation and replacing it with adequate, updated legislation that is capable of dealing humanely and compassionately with the problems as it is now, and not as it was envisaged in 1969. The fact that the term "the death penalty" was used in that legislation shows how outmoded it is.

I ask the Minister to reconsider the indeterminate length of the young offender's sentence. It has a tremendous psychological effect, not just on the prisoner but on his family and the community from which he comes. The Baker report drew attention to this problem. It referred to the "case for compassion and the giving of hope of release at however distant a date."

However distant that date may be, it gives the prisoner, his family and everybody else who is concerned something to hang on to. Indeterminate sentences have a tremendous effect on prisoners. One of the saddest duties is to visit young people in prison who were caught up in violence at a very early age and swept along on an emotional tide, prompted by those who had lost not one minute of their own freedom. They say consistently, "If only I knew when I might be getting out."

There are other consequences. People, especially young people, become institutionalised very quickly. It centres on the despair of not knowing when they may once again experience freedom. They become alienated from the outside world and locked into a very introverted society, where they do not benefit from the good influences that they would experience outside prison. They see no future for themselves. They become disoriented from other influences and displaced in time—like something out of a Kafka novel. That is not a humane way in which to deal with young people who were sentenced before they reached the legal age for sentencing.

I know that the Minister of State is aware of the effect on the family and the community. Parents fear that they may not live to see the release of their son or their daughter. That nagging fear is with them day after day. They become bitter against society and against the process of law. Their bitterness starts to translate itself into what can be a very dangerous factor in the community. They look upon their sons and daughters as the forgotten tools of the manipulators of violence and believe that they are carrying the can for them. Their cases should be considered much more seriously. I do not suggest that the Minister is not considering them seriously. I know that he is, but he ought to be provided with the power to deal properly with them.

I do not think that there is a simple answer to the question, but I ask the Minister to consider two options. The legislation ought to be repealed, and the Government ought to consider replacing it with a maximum sentence for young people. I realise the dangers. There are obvious dangers connected with maximum sentences, but they would mean that young people had a date in mind from the beginning of their sentence. It would have to be accompanied by a review half way through the maximum sentence. Or perhaps there could be new guidelines—perhaps a judicial review, when evidence could be given. The details would have to be teased out, because dangers and problems accompany each of those lines of approach.

At present, the prisoner does not appear at any of the review board hearings, nor can he be represented at those hearings, when a competent person might put forward his case. He is unaware of the information that is presented to the board, he is provided with no details of it, and he is not advised of the reason for the refusal, if and when his case is reviewed. That is serious, because if the prisoner knew why there was a refusal, when the final review came he could re-examine his position with a lot more efficiency and accuracy. These review boards are held in camera and there is no accountability. That is surely wrong in a place where there is a crisis of confidence in the process of law. We must have accountability, and at present there is no accountability to the prisoner or to any body.

Those especially interested in the cases of young people should be given some role on behalf of the prisoner. As it is, the only role open to such people is to make representations. Beyond that they cannot go. As I said yesterday in relation to the judicial system, the greater the number of minds working on a problem, the better the chance of a proper resolution of that problem.

One of the conditions of a review, an obvious renunciation of association with paramilitary organisations or political organisations which are associated with paramilitary organisations, is an almost impossible condition for people in prison. It is a closed society and pressures are very strong. People feel isolated if they cannot cling to the one bulwark that they know. I know of the need to protect society and to ensure that people will not return to violence, but this condition should be re-examined, because the weight of pressure, especially on young people, during a long prison sentence is quite enormous. Indeed, the pressure is enormous for the ordinary life prisoner. We must seek for and find some way around that.

I am also worried about the dependability of the lower ranks of prison officers. Many of them are not properly trained and do not have the experience to make the type of judgment that is expected of them. I do not rule out the possibility of prejudice. In prison where people live closely together, there is almost a hothouse atmosphere and ordinary likes or dislikes start to come into play. A way must be found of getting round the problem of people who do not have basic training or expertise and a way must also be found to assess the attitudes of people employed in the prison system.

I conclude by making a plea to the Minister. As we approach the season of peace, and as the bells start to ring in a new year, I ask him to be generous and humane in his provision for parole and for the release of prisoners, especially young people sentenced at the pleasure of the Secretary of State and people who have spent a long time in prison under a life sentence. I suggest to the Minister that the greatest enemy of peace in Northern Ireland, as elsewhere, is despair. He has an opportunity to foster hope by taking the type of action that I suggest, not as a gesture, but in the sure knowledge that such releases in themselves release a new spirit in the family and in the small community areas. That new spirit will expand and will have a tremendous influence.

I know that the most potent weapon against hatred and violence is compassion and benevolence. I have seen the effect of those things on communities that are regarded as very hardline. I know that substantial releases would be reciprocated 100-fold and would help us to continue with the task of creating peace in Northern Ireland, a peace based on humanity and compassion.

11.59 pm

The Minister of State, Northern Ireland Office (Mr. Nicholas Scott): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) for raising this matter. As I respond to the points that he has made it will become clear that there is not a lot of difference between us. This Christmas, the home leave that we give to prisoners in Northern Ireland will be as generous as possible. We have a scheme that is unique within the United Kingdom, and, in organising that Christmas home leave scheme, we shall seek to be as responsive to the special role of the family, particularly in Northern Ireland, and the need to show that prisoners who fulfil the criteria for home leave are treated as generously as possible.

The hon. Gentleman has analysed the pressures on young people who were caught up in the troubles at the beginning of the 1970s. Many of them, either because they felt their community was under threat or because they were under physical or other threat to respond to the godfathers to perform on behalf of their community, now find themselves in prison while others have gone free and have not been made amenable to the law.

I want to see a prison administration, and an attitude towards those who are in prison for indeterminate sentences in particular, that is as liberal and humane as we can make it, as long as, at the back of our minds, we always have the importance of the safety of the public and, in so far as it is humanly possible, we are sure that those who are released from prison do not embark on a campaign of violence again and threaten the lives or safety of individuals outside.

The hon. Gentleman rightly set this matter against the background of other measures that we are taking, such as those relating to public order, the police complaints reforms and the emergency provisions legislation. I know that in a number of those areas he would have wanted us to go further and faster than the Government have felt able to do, but we are moving on those matters and the way in which we approach life sentence and the Secretary of State's pleasure cases is part of a process of seeking a balance between the safety of the public, on the one hand, and a proper treatment of those who are in prison, on the other.

The hon. Gentleman talked about the effect of indeterminate sentences on young people. He said—and I am sure that it is true in some cases—that some of them become institutionalised and suffer because of that. I must set against that, because it is an area that I take seriously, the considerable opportunities that exist for education in prison. Anybody who listened to the radio programme "Out of the Maze" a couple of weeks ago on the education system in Northern Ireland will remember that one young prisoner said that prison was the best thing that ever happened to him because he had been able to avail himself of the opportunity that it gave him to widen his horizons and educate himself about life in general. I am sure that he will not be involved in any violence when he is released.

I am not diminishing the impact of the indeterminate sentence on young prisoners; I am just saying that some may be institutionalised and some may suffer unduly because of it, but others will seize the opportunity that it offers and come out better able to cope with life outside.

It is worth while reminding ourselves why we have the sentence of detention during the Secretary of State's pleasure. It originates, as the hon. Gentleman said, from a time when capital punishment existed, to which young people were not subject. There are equivalent forms of that sentence in other parts of the United Kingdom and elsewhere. We in Northern Ireland cannot consider it alone, and I doubt whether we could move away from an indeterminate to a determinate sentence for somebody who has taken another person's life or been part of an operation that cost somebody his life.

The decision that has to be taken is not a judicial but an executive one. Could an individual, who has cost an innocent person his life, be freed unless one was sure that he would not embark on the same course again? That could not easily be put to a court, certainly not a court of first instance. I would be reluctant to go down the road, suggested by the hon. Gentleman, of judicial review, with a prisoner being present and legally represented, and with reasons being given for refusal. I take this procedure seriously.

I take the closest possible personal interest and try to be as liberal and humane as I can be without imposing any extra risk on the community. I have read carefully the document produced by the party of the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh and listened carefully to what he said tonight. However, I would take a lot of persuading to believe that we should move back into a judicial or executive area, in this difficult and sensitive territory. I believe that the Government's record is good in this area. I have tried to strike the best balance between the interests of prisoners and those of society outside.

The hon. Member asked about the numbers who have been involved in the procedure. Since the board was set up we have considered 360 cases. Some cases have been considered more than once, and I think that the figures that have appeared as a result of the process show that we have made positive progress. A total of 51 prisoners—22 life sentence prisoners and 29 young persons, Secretary of State's pleasure cases—have been given dates since the process started. As a matter of interest, 23 were Republican, 25 were Loyalist, and three did not fit easily into either category.

The prisoners are usually given a date about a year in advance of their release. I do not take a firm view whether a year should be absolute. In a recent case where a prisoner had an opportunity for employment immediately available to him, we took the view that he could be released in advance of a year. We may consider in future whether a prisoner would need as long as a year to prepare himself for re-entry into the wider world, especially when he has a clear entry into outside life.

[Mr. Nicholas Scott]

In addition to the numbers I have mentioned — 51 with dates, 23 released — following the two most recent meetings of the Life Sentence Review Board — we have to consult the judges about these cases — another 15 prisoners are in the pipeline; that is, we are consulting the judiciary about their situation. Subject to the views of the judiciary, we may be able to give them dates. I believe that the figures show clear evidence of our desire to have a positive approach to the problem.

I know that there are some who say that we should go further and faster. I am particularly aware of the views of Father Faul, who believes that if we went much faster the impact of the releases on the community would be so dramatic that we could swiftly bring to an end the campaign of violence in Northern Ireland. I wish that I could go along with Father Faul, but I have some reservations about going that fast. However, I am aware of the impact that individual releases can have in the community. I have to try to get the balance right between the risk to the community, the benefits that can flow to individual prisoners and the community, and the climate for peace that we can get by a systematic consideration of the cases and by trying to treat them as liberally and sensibly as possible.

We have to be sure that a person who is sentenced to prison serves a period that is sufficient to meet the gravity of the offence that he or she has committed. We have to be sure that the prisoner will not repeat his offence or commit some other crime of violence if he is let out. We do not ask any prisoner to renounce his political beliefs. We have announced dates and released prisoners from inside the compounds and from segregated wings inside the Maze prison. We do not regard that as a total bar to setting a date for release. As I have said, a prisoner does not have to renounce his political views, but, where an indeterminate sentence is being served, we need to be satisfied that he will not repeat his offence outside.

In coming to a conclusion as to whether a prisoner will or will not commit another offence outside, factors that must be taken into account are the organisation to which he or she has some allegiance and the level of violence outside the prison. These factors must be weighed in the balance when considering the likelihood of an offence being committed. If the organisations that are committed to violence in the north of Ireland were to renounce violence as a way of achieving their political ends, that would obviously affect the judgment that I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State have to make about the release of prisoners. If the threat of violence were removed, that would affect our judgment of the likelihood of prisoners being caught up again in a campaign of violence.

Mr. Mallon: I ask the Minister to consider the other side of the coin. I believe that many paramilitary organisations wish certain prisoners to remain in prison and do not want to see them out. They want to use them as a propaganda weapon. They have always used imprisonment as a propaganda weapon. The more that a possible increase in violence is made a factor, the more we play into the hands of those who want to keep prisoners in prison rather than see them released. They are a propaganda weapon when they are in prison — much more so than if they were released into society.

Mr. Scott: I take that point. We have embarked on the process that is under discussion because we want to be fair and responsive to the needs of those who are in prison and the way that they were caught up in the violence. I am not unaware that if we behave sensibly and responsively we could undermine the pressures that the paramilitary organisations put on those outside prison.

We consider especially carefully the cases of young prisoners who were young and vulnerable when they became involved in terrorist-type crimes. We shall always view their cases with considerable sympathy. I assure the House, and especially the hon. Gentleman, that I consider every individual's case, as does the Life Sentence Review Board, as carefully as possible at the appropriate interval in the light of all the information that is available. I know that often shadowy figures — they are called the godfathers — have not been made amenable to the law while many young prisoners have——

The Question have been proposed after Ten o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at twelve minutes past Twelve o'clock.

House of Commons

Thursday 18 December 1986

The House met at half-past Two o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

Royal Assent

Mr. Speaker: I have to notify the House, in accordance with the Royal Assent Act 1967, that the Queen has signified Her Royal Assent to the following Acts:

1. Consolidated Fund (No. 2) Act 1986
2. Advance Petroleum Revenue Tax Act 1986
3. London Docklands Railway (City Extension) Act 1986
4. River Humber (Burcom Outfall) Act 1986
5. Mersey Docks and Harbour Act 1986
6. British Railways (No. 2) Act 1986

PRIVATE BUSINESS

COUNTY OF CLEVELAND BILL [Lords]
Read a Second time, and committed.

CITY OF LONDON (VARIOUS POWERS) (By Order)
Order for Third Reading read.
To be read the Third time upon Thursday 15 January 1987 at Seven o'clock.

YORK CITY COUNCIL BILL [Lords] (By Order)
Order for Second Reading read.
To be read a Second time upon Thursday 15 January 1987.

Oral Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

1. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what was discussed.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): I met the Commissioner yesterday, when we discussed his strategy for next year.

Mr. Smith: Did the Home Secretary take the opportunity to commend the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on his commitment to include the issue of domestic violence—assault against women in their own homes—as one of the principal force goals for 1987? However, at the same time, did he take the opportunity to express his disappointment at the apparent lack of urgency that the Metropolitan police seem to have in following up the recommendations of their own working party on this issue, particularly the pilot project to establish police prosecutions as a third party in an area such as Hounslow? If not, will he do so and stress the urgency and importance of this issue?

Mr. Hurd: We discussed this issue. I welcome what the Commissioner has done to insert this in his strategy. It is a difficult matter for the police, as the hon. Gentleman will recognise. That is why, sometimes in the past, police forces have been hesitant about getting involved in it. We all understand the need for the police to be sensitive and active in dealing with this matter. When we discuss the strategy, and when the hon. Gentleman as a London Member discusses it, he can press home his points.

Mr. Wheeler: Does my right hon. Friend support the Commissioner in his 1987 theme of safety and the citizen? In thinking about that theme, does he congratulate the Commissioner on his determination to reduce racial attacks in London, to improve the prevention and detection of burglary, particularly through the neighbourhood watch schemes, and to concentrate on reducing the number of robberies in certain parts of London, where the problem is of great concern to the citizen?

Mr. Hurd: I agree with my hon. Friend on all those points. I hope that the Metropolitan police will be able successfully to recruit up to the increased establishments that I have given them so that they can meet those tasks. My hon. Friend will have noticed the increased emphasis that the Metropolitan police are giving to dealing with the problem of racial attacks, as I saw for myself in Tower Hamlets last week.

Mr. Tony Banks: Is the Home Secretary aware that the great majority of Londoners want to see the police dealing more effectively with street crime, with the theft of vehicles, with house burglary, with enforcing bus lanes——

Mr. Robert Atkins: Stealing silver.

Mr. Banks: The hon. Gentleman should watch what he is saying. He has a very loose tongue and a wild and silly mind.

Will the Home Secretary realise that such matters as the enforcement of bus lanes and illegal parking on yellow lines are of great concern to Londoners? They would much rather see the police looking after those aspects of law enforcement than being out at Wapping, making sure that scabs get through picket lines and that Murdoch's filthy newspapers get on to the streets of London.

Mr. Hurd: I am not sure about bus lanes, but the hon. Gentleman's point about the futility of tying down so many police at Wapping is right, as I saw for myself last week. I hope that the hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friends will use their influence to ensure that, whatever course this dispute between Mr. Murdoch and his employees takes, it does not continue to force the deployment of so many hundreds of policemen at Wapping.

Mr. Dykes: Will my right hon. Friend during those discussions with the Commissioner talk also about the growing menace of violence in shops?

Mr. Hurd: Yes. That is important. It is one of the themes of our standing conference on crime prevention and one on which I keep in close touch with Baroness Phillips and all those concerned.

Mr. Dubs: Is the Home Secretary aware that the annual crime rate in London is now 200,000 above the 1978 rate when Labour was in office, that that represents an increase of 35 per cent., and that, on average, two London families in five will have among their numbers a victim of crime during the present year? Does the right hon. Gentleman not realise, therefore, that Londoners are contemptuous of the Government's claims that they are doing something about law and order in the capital?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friends make no mileage with that kind of point, and I shall tell them why. They try occasionally to clamber aboard our policies—for example, on crime prevention and victim support—but, on the whole, people in London associate them with those boroughs in London the Labour leaders of which concentrate on undermining and abusing the police.

Sir John Biggs-Davison: Will my right hon. Friend consider with the Commissioner the policing of Waltham Abbey, where regular fights between youthful gangs now aflict that formerly peaceful town? Is it not the case that there are no more police on the streets now than there were in the 1920s? Is my right hon. Friend satisfied with the strength and the establishment of the Metropolitan police?

Mr. Hurd: I am not satisfied with the Metropolitan police strength, because they are 600 below the establishment which I have authorised. One of their main tasks in the coming year is to recruit and keep the officers necessary to reach the increased establishment which I have set. They are going all out to do that. The more the Metropolitan police can do that, the more police officers there will be, particularly in the outer London boroughs, which I readily recognise suffer from the inevitable, and right, concentration which the Commissioner has decided to deal with some other problems in the more acute areas.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

2. Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has anything to add to his Department's earlier statements regarding the formula used for the Griess test carried out by Dr. Frank Skuse in the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

3. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) of 20 November, Official Report, column 288, what information he has regarding evidence dating from 1975 that the strength of the caustic soda solution used by Dr. Frank Skuse to test the men subsequently convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings for nitro-glycerine was 1 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

4. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure is used by his Department's forensic scientists to record details of tests carried out in criminal cases.

6. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what meetings (a) he, and (b) his officials have had with Dr. Frank Skuse since his retirement, to discuss Dr. Skuse's role in the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

11. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions the director of his Department's laboratory at Chorley has had on the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. David Mellor): As part of our review of this case we arranged for a re-appraisal of the Griess test to be undertaken by the Aldermaston forensic science laboratory. It was not clear from the papers what strength of caustic soda solution Dr. Skuse used and whether or not he used ethanol. I understand that the practice is for observations, tests, results and conclusions to be recorded, but that there was no reference to these two points in the notes which Dr. Skuse made in this case.

We have sought written and oral clarification from Dr. Skuse about his method. In two telephone conservations in January 1986, with the controller of the forensic science service and the present director of the Chorley laboratory, Dr. Skuse said that he had used a 0·1 per cent. strength solution of caustic soda and that he thought that he had not used ethanol. The belief that he had used a 0·1 per cent. solution was supported by a guidance note which Dr. Skuse had written, which referred to the use of a solution of this strength, and which he circulated in January or February 1975.

It appeared therefore that the then director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory had been in error in informing Mr. Baldock in May 1985 that Dr. Skuse had used a 1 per cent. solution.

However, Dr. Black, who gave evidence at the trial, has recently said that his recollection is that Dr. Skuse indicated to him in May 1975 that the solution strength was 1 per cent. The then director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory has also said that the information that he gave to Mr. Baldock was based on information given to him by Dr. Skuse.

The Aldermaston re-appraisal of the Griess test made allowance for these uncertainties by conducting tests using differing strengths of caustic soda solution with and without the use of ethanol.

My right hon. Friend is continuing to consider the various representations made to him, including the material submitted by my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) following the "World in Action" programme on 1 December. He intends to reach a decision shortly.

Miss Maynard: Will the Minister confirm that the retirement of Dr. Skuse at the age of 50 was far from voluntary and that he was sacked on the grounds of "limited effectiveness"? Is not this matter being hushed up to avoid a scandal?

Mr. Mellor: No. I utterly reject any suggestion that this matter has been hushed up. Full disclosures have been made of such facts as we are able to make prior to my right hon. Friend reaching his decision. In relation to the position of Dr. Skuse, it is right—and we have always made this clear—that he was retired on grounds of limited efficiency. However, it must be said that that was limited efficiency at the time that he was retired, not limited efficiency in 1975.

Mr. Corbyn: Will the Minister confirm that in May 1985, his office believed that the records at Chorley were accurate, but in September 1986, in a letter to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), the Minister said that there was some doubt about the accuracy of those records? Does he believe that that warrants an inquiry into what is happening in the Chorley laboratory? Does he think that someone in the laboratory is being "economical with the truth" about the evidence of those tests?

Mr. Mellor: The full investigations that have been made at the laboratory have certainly revealed matters that are a cause for concern about the record keeping in this case. The adequacy of those records and the consistency or otherwise of some of the matters set out therein, is a prime point that my right hon. Friend is considering in the context of further action to be taken in this case. Many changes have taken place since 1975 in the forensic science service in the manner in which these tests are carried out and recorded. We are satisfied with the efficiency of the forensic science service in those respects at present.

Ms. Clare Short: While we are pleased that the Minister will review the procedures at Chorley—it is shocking that written records were not kept in such a crucial case—does he accept that the major concern is the six men involved, who received 21 life sentences for an offence which they probably did not commit? Will the Minister give us an assurance today that if there is any doubt he will take the percentage that is most beneficial to those men, particularly given that Dr. Black's records from the time—the one man who had a record—show that it was a 1 per cent. solution?

Mr. Mellor: Of course, I give the hon. Lady the assurance that these matters are being considered seriously. Anything that tends to suggest that there is new evidence or new considerations of substance that were not before the court in 1975, and which cast doubt on the safety of the conviction, would provide a basis for my right hon. Friend to refer the matter back to the Court of Appeal. My right hon. Friend has a difficult decision to make. Information is still coming in and, indeed, earlier this week we received a full statement of an interview that the police had with Mr. Clarke. My right hon. Friend will consider the papers carefully and personally over the next few weeks and he intends and hopes to announce his conclusions early in the new year.

Mr. Madden: Will the Minister confirm that the trial judge placed great emphasis and importance on the forensic evidence and the confessions? Will he further confirm that the forensic evidence and confessions have been found to be fundamentally flawed? In the name of humanity and justice, as those men now face their 12th Christmas and new year in prison, will he take this opportunity to say that the Government have decided to refer the case to the Court of Appeal so that all the matters can be looked at afresh?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman has plainly reached his own conclusions about the matter. It is not for me to join him in a rush to judgment on these issues. It is for us to determine, as I have already said, whether there is new evidence or considerations that entitle others, whose task it is within the criminal justice system, to consider whether matters have proceeded properly and to re-examine those matters. That is what we are doing. I must tell the hon. Gentleman, as I told other hon. Members last month, that is not the least bit reassuring that some hon. Members seem to believe that we in this House, and not the court, should reach conclusions about guilt or innocence. It is a matter for the courts.

Mr. Skinner: The Government's representatives are not much good when they come under cross-examination of one kind or another, are they? Is it not a fact that Dr. Frank Skuse, who represented the Government, was about as convincing as Sir Robert Armstrong was in Australia? Does the Minister recall another forensic scientist, Dr. Clift, whose name was bandied about this building for about three years, until eventually a Tory Minister had to recognise that the campaign against Dr. Clift's forensic evidence would result in some people being released from gaol? Why does the Minister not acknowledge that fact now instead of engaging in a cover-up?

Mr. Mellor: As usual, the hon. Gentleman throws allegations around. I regret that he feels it necessary to turn every issue into a partisan one. In so far as Dr. Skuse was representing any Government when he gave evidence at the trial, it was a Labour Government.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: Why is it that since the resignation of Dr. Skuse the Home Office has not questioned him directly on his methodology? He says that he wants to make available all the information that he has, that the case notes are full, that as recently as January they were in the possession of Chorley and that they would show the methods and detail he used in the application on that night in November 1974.

Mr. Mellor: Repeated attempts have been made to get full explanations from Dr. Skuse, but they have not been successful. I can give my hon. Friend chapter and verse about that.

Mr. Robert Atkins: Whatever the rights and wrongs of the case, does my hon. Friend agree that it would be invidious for all the staff who work at the forensic laboratory at Chorley, where some of my constituents are employed, to be tarred with the brush, as the Opposition seem to be doing, that somehow everything is wrong at Chorley and the staff do not do a remarkably good job on behalf of those who need their advice?

Mr. Mellor: I entirely agree with my hon. Friend. The willingness of some Opposition Members to traduce a whole group of people because of the alleged inadequacies of one is hardly reassuring for their reputation on maintaining law and order.

Mr. Alton: Given the Minister's admission about the lack of co-operation, why has he not taken steps to have the notebooks and case records impounded and made available to the lawyers representing those who are in gaol? How is it possible for a scientist to be almost certain about the formula that he used?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman is labouring under a misapprehension. The notebooks and other articles are available and are forming part of the re-examination that is taking place.

Mr. Alton: Will the Minister make the papers available now?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman should listen to my answer instead of asking further questions from a sedentary position. If my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary decides to refer the matter to the Court of Appeal, any material relevant to the appeal and its proper prosecution will be made available. That is the situation and that is how it has always been.

Crime Prevention

5. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further proposals he has to reduce the incidence of crime.

Mr. Hurd: The latest figure for police strengths in England and Wales is a record of 121,841. Spending on the police in real terms has increased by about 50 per cent. since 1978-79. Further expansion is under way. Crime is best reduced by involving all those who can help in its prevention. At the standing conference on crime prevention last month we gave new impetus to our plans, which include, strengthening crime prevention as an element within the policies of all Government Departments, stimulating further practical local activities, such as the five local projects already in place, encouraging the private sector to join more fully in crime prevention, and developing measures to prevent crime among children and young people.

Mr. Boyes: Is the Home Secretary aware that businesses and householders in my constituency are becoming increasingly insecure because of the ever-growing incidence of theft and robbery? Because of the lack of Government action my constituents are becoming increasingly worried and frightened. If the Home Secretary does not understand that, I invite him to come to my constituency and meet representatives of the many groups who have been to see me over the past few weeks. My constituents think that the Government do not care.

Mr. Hurd: Obviously, there is anxiety about the growing crime figures, as there has been for many years. As people understand the depth and width of our policies and the greatly increased resources that we are providing, whether for crime prevention, victim support, the police or the criminal justice system, they will see that our record compares admirably with anything that has gone before.

Mr. Hind: During the course of his busy day, will my right hon. Friend take the opportunity to consider the reports about the case of Michael Hicks, an official of SOGAT '82, who was convicted at Southwark Crown court last week of an offence of actual bodily harm at the Wapping printing plant? Will my right hon. Friend also note that Mr. Hicks was sentenced to 12 months' imprisonment? Yesterday, however, the national executive of the Labour party voted, unanimously, to call for his release. Will my right hon. Friend give us an undertaking that, during the course of his administration, those who commit offences of violence, whether for political or other reasons, will be treated in exactly the same way?

Mr. Hurd: I was amazed to see the report about the Labour party that my hon. Friend mentions, and I hope that the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) will throw some light on it. Is it that the Labour party has evidence that suggests that this conviction of Mr. Hicks was unsafe, or is it that it believes that, as an office bearer in a trade union, he is entitled to assault police officers and get away with it?

Mr. Kaufman: With regard to the incidence of crime, is the Home Secretary aware——

Mr. Peter Bruinvels: Crime? The hon. Gentleman does not condemn it.

Mr. Kaufman: Yes, crime which Conservative Members do not care about.

Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that, in Britain, in the week between now and Christmas there will be 640 robberies, 2,500 crimes of violence against the person, 2,700 frauds, 12,000 acts of criminal damage, 19,000 burglaries, 42,500 thefts and 80,000 crimes of all kinds. Is it surprising that 83 per cent. [HON. MEMBERS: "Too long."] Yes, the Government's criminal record is too long. Is it surprising that, in the latest opinion polls, 83 per cent. of the electorate say that the Government have broken their promises on law and order?

Mr. Hurd: Every opinion poll on this matter that I have seen gives the public verdict that our policies on this matter are, by a long stretch, more credible than those of the Labour party. This afternoon, we can understand why the right hon. Gentleman produces his familiar litany and why, as a spokesman of a party that claims to be interested in law and order, he has completely failed to comment on or repudiate the point raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind). Until he does so, he loses all credibility.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: Will my right hon. Friend not allow the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) to get away from the point about the NEC's condemnation of a judge and jury when they found guilty a man who had violently assaulted a member of the Metropolitan police? Will my right hon. Friend say how it helps in the fight against crime, which ought to concern all parties, when the Leader of the Opposition lends his name to an attack on a court of law because it has found guilty a man who violently attacked a police officer of the Metropolitan police?

Mr. Hurd: It is not a matter of letting the right hon. Gentleman to get away from the point; he has not got on to it yet, though it is absolutely relevant to his pretensions and to his questions on this matter. As my hon. Friend says, the pursuit and prevention of crime must be a matter for the whole community and all political parties. The Labour party cannot be allowed to pick and choose between offences it condemns and those from which it thinks its friends should be exempt.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

8. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for stimulating the further development of neighbourhood watch schemes.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): There are already some 17,500 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales. This clearly demonstrates the public's willingness to be involved in positive crime prevention activity. The first national neighbourhood watch conference took place on 8 December, which was also the day on which we launched a new quarterly magazine Good Neighbour. Together, these will help to disseminate ideas, good practice and projects to encourage further development of neighbourhood watch.

Mr. Thompson: I thank my hon. Friend for his reply and for the support that his Department is giving to home watch schemes in Norfolk, especially in my constituency, where good progress is being made. This must be one of the good, practical ways in which to deal with crime, especially where elderly people who feel under threat are concerned. Can my hon. Friend find ways in which to increase further liaison between police officers and the community and to publicise these matters further, especially in East Anglia, through the Magpies programme?

Mr. Hogg: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his support. During the past six months, 10 new schemes became operational in his area and five more are setting up. I entirely agree with my hon. Friend about communication. That is why we held the standing conference and why we have the new magazine.

Mr. Janner: Although I welcome neighbourhood watch schemes, does the Minister recognise that they are no substitute whatever for having enough policemen on the beat, and that people in my constituency are afraid to go out at night because of what can happen to them on the street and because they do not want to leave their homes empty? When will the Minister provide enough policemen on the beat and stop refusing the Leicestershire police force the policemen it requires and has asked for so that it can be properly staffed?

Mr. Hogg: That is a singularly unattractive question from a member of the Labour party.

Mr. Janner: It is just that the Minister does not like it.

Mr. Hogg: Since 1979, manpower available to the police service has increased by about 15,000. Since 1979, we have spent more than 38 per cent. more in real terms on the police. I remind the House that when the Labour party was in power the police were grossly underpaid and left the force in droves.

Mr. Watts: Is my hon. Friend aware that the recent increase in the approved establishment of the Thames Valley police is extremely welcome as it provides an opportunity for the further development of community watch schemes and other measures to combat crime? Is my hon. Friend further aware that the antics at Greenham Common, supported by the Labour party to the hilt, are a serious drain on the manpower available to the force and divert its efforts away from the detection of crime and the arrest of criminals?

Mr. Hogg: I welcome what my hon. Friend has said. I am grateful to him and other Conservative colleagues for the way in which they have put the arguments in support of the Thames Valley application for an increase in establishment, which we have been able to meet. My hon. Friend has suggested that the demands of Greenham Common undermine the capacity of the Thames Valley police to respond. Who supports the people who are demonstrating at Greenham Common? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. The Labour party supports Greenham Common demonstrators.

Mr. Soley: I wonder whether the Minister would like to co-operate with me in setting up a neighbourhood watch scheme in the House to find out how many times the Secretary of State for the Environment has broken the law. What will he do, that is effective, about crime prevention, over and above the cheap option of neighbourhood watch? We all know that it is the cuts in caretaker provision and other forms of crime prevention that have pushed the crime rate up and that it is the Government who have done that with the full co-operation of the Secretary of State for the Environment, who has a lot to answer for, besides his breaches of the law.

Mr. Hogg: I shall be very pleased to set up a neighbourhood watch scheme in the House, because we would then begin to identify which Labour Members supported the demonstrations at Grunwick, which Labour Members stand on the Wapping picket lines and which Labour Members persistently encourage those who riot and abuse the police. We should certainly have a neighbourhood watch scheme, and we know who will be found out.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Major Hugh Thornburn of Alderley Edge in my constituency has been in the forefront of the development of neighbourhood watch schemes. Does my hon. Friend, who clearly supports neighbourhood watch schemes, accept that an additional modest resource is necessary if the co-operation of the police with the development of neighbourhood watch is to exploit the maximum co-operation of ordinary lay men and women in society in combating crime?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend makes a valuable point, but I re-emphasise to the House that, since 1979, this Government have increased spending on the police service by more than 38 per cent. in real terms. It is for chief constables to determine how they allocate their expenditure within their budgets.

Crime (Costs)

9. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has ever attempted to estimate the total economic cost of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No, Sir. We know the cost of the criminal justice system and the value of goods stolen in the course of certain types of crimes, but an estimate of the total costs of crime could not readily be made.

Mr. Atkinson: Does the Minister agree that many authorities, and some in the Home Office, subscribe to the view that crime costs about £16 billion to £17 billion a year? That being the case, does the Minister agree that the majority of preventable crime takes place during the hours of darkness? If so, will he agree to the funding of a limited number of experimental control schemes using artificial lighting for the purpose of demonstrating that lighting engineers have part of the remedy for preventable crime during the hours of darkness?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman has made a good point. We are considering ways of tackling crime by trying to prevent it. He knows that a range of initiatives are going forward in different parts of the country, drawing on money under the urban programme, and on manpower from the MSC, which seek to engage many different groups. I shall certainly take the hon. Gentleman's point seriously.

Mr. Corbett: May I invite the Minister to think again about this issue, because, clearly, if some sort of sensible estimate could be made, it would bring home to all the importance of this matter? Will the Minister think about the cost of fear? As my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) mentioned, the fear that keeps people locked in their homes influences jobs and revenue-generating activities. Will the Minister think again about that?

Mr. Mellor: If I may say so again, the points that the hon. Gentleman has made are important and do not need to be used as a prop to argue in favour of getting some sort of inevitable guesstimate. The points made about the fear of crime are particularly significant because, unquestionably, as the British crime survey discovered, the fear of crime is an evil in itself and needs to be tackled. As has been said, many people allow themselves to be locked up in their homes when there is no good reason for that. Part of the reason why we are returning so many police officers to the beat is to try to stimulate confidence in neighbourhoods where that is entirely appropriate.

Justices' Clerks

10. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about his decision not to propose changes in the qualifications provided for by the Justices Clerks (Qualifications of Assistants) Rules 1979.

Mr. Mellor: Representations have been made orally on behalf of the Justices' Clerks Society. No others have been received.

Mr. Maclennan: Why has the Minister set his face against the requirement that all court clerks in the magistrates' courts should have professional qualifications? In view of the increasing complexity of the law, the volume of work in the magistrates' courts and the extension of legal aid, is not the quality of advice offered of very high importance? Is the Minister aware that the Law Society, the Bar Council and the Magistrates Association support this reform? Why is he against it?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman is right. The quality of advice tendered to justices in magistrates' courts is important. Indeed, as the hon. Gentleman would, in all fairness, wish to admit, a number of those who may not be qualified as barristers or solicitors but who hold diplomas in magisterial law have been offering extremely good advice to magistrates' courts up and down the country for many years. Indeed, the magistrates' court system in this country runs with more than two thirds of the clerks so qualified. Only one third are legally qualified. We do not believe that the tremendous efforts and the large resources that would be needed to move to a fully professional justices clerks' profession could be justified at this time against so many competing priorities.

Local Government Reform (Voluntary Groups)

12. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from voluntary groups concerning problems encountered following the abolition of the metropolitan local authorities.

Mr. Mellor: None, but we are keeping in touch with developments as they may affect the funding of voluntary groups in the areas concerned.

Mr. Hughes: Does the Minister realise that there is increasing concern among voluntary bodies in the six former metropolitan counties and in London, which are partly funded by the Department, and which are at risk of having their buildings transferred over their heads in a way that will substantially increase their rents, rates and other running costs? At the end of the day, there is no net advantage to the Exchequer. Will the Minister hold discussions with the relevant residuary bodies in order to protect worthwhile voluntary organisations from the unnecessary and unjustified increases that are believed to be in the pipeline?

Mr. Mellor: The hon. Gentleman has made a cogent case, as I would expect of him, and I shall look carefully at what he has said.

Mr. Favell: Given the furore when the metropolitan counties were abolished, what conclusion does my hon. Friend draw from the fact that he has received no representations whatever from voluntary bodies expressing concern about what has happened since?

Mr. Mellor: I can only speak from a Greater London perspective, but the entirely spurious ratepayer-funded GLC campaign, which tried to instil in Londoners the belief that civilised life in London would come to an end with the GLC's demise, has been shown to have been totally and utterly without merit.

Mr. Ashley: Is the Minister aware that there is abundant evidence that many voluntary organisations will be badly hit unless he takes action very quickly?

Mr. Mellor: Action is being taken. The Government have made substantial sums of money available in order to allow transitional support for such bodies, but it was always anticipated that some voluntary bodies that were funded by organisations such as the GLC on an entirely reckless basis, right at the end of their mandate, and in a way calculated to try to embarrass successor authorities, would not continue to be so funded. That was inevitable and is not necessarily at all undesirable.

Subversion

13. Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to amend the law so as to provide for a statutory definition of subversion.

Mr. Hurd: No, Sir.

Dr. McDonald: If the Home Secretary does not intend to amend the law, will he at least confirm that subversion means unlawful activity that is directed at the overthrow of a parliamentary Government and does not mean views that are unacceptable to a particular Government?

Mr. Hurd: The definition was given for the first time by the Minister of State in the previous Labour Government, Lord Harris, on 26 February 1975. That definition of subversion is

"activities . . . which threaten the safety or wellbeing of the State, and which are intended to undermine or overthrow Parliamentary democracy by political, industrial or violent means." — [Official Report, House of Lords, 26 February 1975; Vol. 357, c. 947.]

Mr. Soames: Does subversion include the undermining of the Crown's case in a court overseas?

Mr. Hurd: I think that I had better rely on the text that I have read out, which has held since 1975.

Mr. Heffer: Has the right hon. Gentleman yet had a chance to read Mr. Hugo Young's comments in The Guardian today, suggesting that people in the Conservative party, including the Prime Minister and just about every member of the Cabinet, believe that members of the Labour party are subversive—[Interruption.]—agents for the Soviet Union and traitors? Why do Conservative Members not cheer, as that is exactly what they think? Is it not about time that they recognised what every organisation in Europe recognises, which is that the Socialist movement in Britain is rooted in the British people and is less subversive than are Conservative Members, because they want to sell our country and our people to the United States of America?

Mr. Hurd: I have read the article, and I thought it was a wild article by a usually reasonable journalist. I am not surprised that it has inflamed the hon. Gentleman.

Dangerous Weapons

14. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to seek to ban or further restrict the sale of dangerous weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Firearms Act 1968 already lays down strict controls on the possession and use of firearms and we have no plans at present to amend it. With regard to other weapons, we announced on 3 December that we intend to issue guidelines to traders urging that crossbows should not be sold to persons under 17. We are in favour of a statutory prohibition of this kind and the Bill which my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) has introduced will seek to do this. We keep the whole subject under active review.

Mr. Canavan: Is it not obscene that some unscrupulous traders sell to children, as Christmas presents, dangerous, illegal weapons such as flick knives, spiked gloves and Chinese death stars? Is it not about time that the Government took firm action to outlaw such a barbaric practice, which is exploiting children and encouraging violence in the streets?

Mr. Hogg: I imagine that the hon. Gentleman will be supporting the Bill on crossbows, and I hope that he will be applauding the guidance that the Government have given about the sale of martial arts equipment and crossbows to young people.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Q1. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 December.

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Mr. Bennett: Will the Prime Minister join me in congratulating Henry Simon Ltd. of Stockport on winning a contract for a new flour mill in China, worth £1·8 million? Is it not distressing that city slickers have now set up a company, Valuedale, to asset-strip the Simon group? Is she not ashamed of the fact that she has created the greed society, and will she apologise to the British people?

The Prime Minister: I am always willing to congratulate firms which have gained export contracts and wish them well. If the hon. Gentleman has any comment about any particular firm, he must make it to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Sir Anthony Meyer: Could my right hon. Friend find a moment today to reflect on the problem of public finance and Opposition parties, and in particular on the fact that the Liberal party, in criticising the way that hon. Members have voted in certain Divisions, appears unable to discover the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Mr. Roberts) is a member of the Government, so it would be normal for him to vote with the Government?

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend made his point well, and grafted it on to a suitable question.

Q2. Mr. Ashley asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Ashley: Is the Prime Minister aware that many hon. Members will welcome the decision by the Secretary of State for Defence to repeal section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act, thus giving the disabled service men of today and tomorrow the right to sue for adequate compensation? Is she further aware that there can be no justification for the Secretary of State's mean-minded attempts to deny the same righs to the disabled service men who served in the atom tests of yesterday? Will the Prime Minister please intervene?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful for what the right hon. Gentleman said in the first part of his question. With regard to the latter part, it is either the subject of a case or under consideration.

Mr. Cormack: Will my right hon. Friend take a little time this afternoon to invite the Leader of the Opposition to her room for a bit of Christmas cheer? Will she then, on Privy Council terms, explain to him that there is no point in spending money on an early warning system unless we are prepared for the warning?

The Prime Minister: Once again, my hon. Friend makes his own point very effectively in his question.

Mr. Merlyn Rees: Despite the humour in the House when my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) asked a question, will the Prime Minister read carefully the article by Hugo Young that appeared today in The Guardian? He states that a former Tory Cabinet Minister told him that he was provided with documents that contained security information about prominent members of the Labour party and that he was told by the same Cabinet Minister that he hoped that "Denis Healey"—my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East, whom I first met on the beaches at Anzio—[Interruption.] That is not a laughing matter. He said he was told that the Minister hoped my right hon. Friend would be found dead on the pavement in the morning, killed by an unauthorised group. Fantastic as it sounds, because of what we have learnt about the man Wright, whom I dislike as much as the Prime Minister—and I hope that he does badly in Australia—when the case is over, Wright ought to be brought to account, with others, so that we can find out whether there is anything in this article, or whether it is pure moonshine. Is it pure moonshine?

The Prime Minister: As the right hon. Gentleman knows, I am not responsible for what is written in press articles. He knows full well that I can make no comment with regard to the conduct of the Wright case.

Mr. Sims: Will my right hon. Friend find time today to congratulate the Post Office on the efficient manner in which, at the busiest time of the year, it handled and delivered 5 million letters of acceptance to British Gas shareholders? Will she also take the opportunity to remind those 5 million shareholders and their relatives of what would happen to their shareholdings if Labour came to power?

The Prime Minister: Yes, I gladly join my hon. Friend in congratulating the Post Office on the efficiency with which it dealt with those 5 million letters. I remind the shareholders, or potential shareholders, that if the Labour party came to power they would never have the opportunity they have now and that they might be deprived of their right to equity shareholding.

Q3. Mr. Rogers asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Rogers: I am sure the Prime Minister is aware that in my constituency and in the constituency of every hon. Member there are memorials to those who have given their lives for this country. I am also sure the right hon. Lady agrees that it is appropriate that at this time we should remember them and their families. Does the right hon. Lady also agree that patriotism and loyalty do not belong to any particular group or class or to any particular party?

The Prime Minister: As far as I am aware, the hon. Gentleman has said nothing with which I disagree.

Mr. Churchill: Will my right hon. Friend explain to the CND fanatics on the Opposition Benches, in particular to the Leader of the Opposition, that in the nuclear age there is no such thing as a secure, non-nuclear defence? Is it not clear that, although they may try to conceal the fact from the British electorate, their only response, in the event of a nuclear threat or nuclear attack, would be the capitulation of this island to the gaolers of the nations of eastern Europe and to the butchers of the Afghans?

The Prime Minister: Yes, I believe that an effective defence needs an effective nuclear deterrent. Without it we could not fight the potential aggressor who had a nuclear deterrent. I note what my hon. Friend said about Afghanistan, which has been occupied for just about seven years—for longer than the whole of the last war.

Q4. Mr. Maclennan asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 18 December.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Maclennan: Has the Prime Minister read the latest criminal statistics, which show that, despite the determined efforts of the police to clear up crime, the number of crimes not being cleared up is increasing at a greater rate than before? Has she noticed that the offence of robbery and serious offences of violence against the person increased last year by more than 10 per cent? Because the Criminal Justice Bill will do nothing to reverse these alarming trends, what proposals has the Prime Minister in mind to halt this inexorable rise in crime?

The Prime Minister: Unfortunately, crime has been rising steadily for a number of years. The hon. Gentleman must be pleased that the Government have put more and more into the police service in personnel and in equipment. He will also be pleased that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has a vigorous campaign for crime prevention. The hon. Gentleman must be aware that we cannot tackle and beat crime without the wholehearted support, not only of hon. Members, but of everybody in society.

Mr. Budgen: In the light of the recent epic and historic reform of the common agricultural policy, will my right hon. Friend confirm that there will now be no need for any additional payments to the EEC?

The Prime Minister: I am glad that my hon. Friend is pleased with the work done by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, who has been quite outstanding in his skilful piloting of the latest Agriculture Council and the Fisheries Council. I hope that what my hon. Friend says is true. I have not looked at all the details of the financial arrangements, but they are clearly designed substantially to reduce the cost of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Kinnock: Does the Prime Minister recall that at the time of her first Christmas in office 3½ million adults were on supplementary benefit and 1 million children were in families dependent on supplementary benefit? This Christmas over 5 million adults are in that position and over 2 million children are in families dependent on supplementary benefit. By any measure that is a huge increase in poverty. Is the Prime Minister not absolutely ashamed of her record?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman is aware that supplementary benefit is meant to provide for those who are in need. Not only does it do so, but it does so on a more generous scale than under previous Governments. As he is aware, when supplementary benefit rises the number of people in poverty goes up—if that is his definition of poverty.

Mr. Kinnock: I wish that the right hon. Lady's reference to the rate of supplementary benefit was true, but unfortunately it is not. There are now more people in deeper poverty in Britain, and the rate of benefit has not kept pace with the cost of living for poor people. As a mother, what would the Prime Minister say to the mother of two who asked in the "Christmas on the Breadline" report:

"How can you explain to a child who thinks that mum and dad can work miracles, that he cannot have something because there aren't enough pennies, or that Father Christmas has run out of toys?"

The right hon. Lady is usually generous with advice. What is her advice to that woman?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Gentleman is wrong about supplementary benefit. Supplementary benefit has gone up—[HON. MEMBERS: "Scrooge".]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

The Prime Minister: Supplementary benefit is up by 6 per cent. over and above the rate of inflation and supplementary benefit scale rates for children under five years old have gone up by 29 per cent. over and above the rate of inflation. May I also remind—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

The Prime Minister: May I also remind the right hon. Gentleman that 10 years ago this Christmas under Labour the old-age pensioners did not have a Christmas bonus?

Mr. Kinnock: The Prime Minister has run away from giving advice to that poor family, but she has misled the House in her references. The facts are that the retail prices index has risen by 62·9 per cent., the cost of living for pensioners has risen five percentage points—3 per cent. in real terms—more than that, and for poor families, nine percentage points—5 per cent. in real terms—more than that. Will the right hon. Lady apologise not only to the poor but to the House as well?

The Prime Minister: No, Mr. Speaker. Supplementary benefit is up about 6 per cent. in real terms at the July uprating and the rates for children under five and aged 11 to 12 increased by about 29 per cent. in real terms. Whatever the right hon. Gentleman says, we have done infinitely better than his Government in looking after those on supplementary benefit and infinitely better in letting all old-age pensioners have a Christmas bonus.

Airborne Early Warning Aircraft

3.30 pm

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. George Younger): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement on airborne early warning aircraft for the Royal Air Force. I apologise in advance for its length.

The House will recall that in March 1977 the then Government announced their decision to proceed with the Nimrod system to replace the Shackleton in the airborne early warning role. Contracts were placed with what is now British Aerospace plc for the necessary work on the Nimrod airframe, and with GEC Avionics Ltd for the development and production of its mission system avionics. At that time, it was envisaged that the aircraft would be available to the RAF in a training role in May 1982 and for operational service in April 1984.

British Aerospace has delivered the airframes in accordance with its contract. But, as the House knows, serious difficulties have arisen in the development of the avionics system for the aircraft, and these have led to very serious time and cost overruns.

On 26 February last, my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed the House that the Government had decided to consider all of the available options, both from this country and from overseas, for meeting the RAF's needs before taking a final decision on the way forward. He also announced that for Nimrod itself we had negotiated with GEC revised contractual arrangements involving a sharing of financial risk with the company and giving them adequate incentives for completion.

The intention was that, by the end of an interim period of six months, GEC would provide us with a firm price proposal against a technical specification aimed at fulfilling the needs of the RAF, and would also demonstrate to us the progress it had achieved on the development of the project. Meanwhile, we would explore alternative solutions. On 25 September my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement announced that best and final offers were being invited from GEC Avionics for the Nimrod and from the Boeing Aerospace Company for the E3A aircraft. Those offers have now been received and assessed.

GEC's offer for Nimrod has been judged against a cardinal point specification based on the air staff requirement endorsed in 1977, with the addition only of an air-to-air refuelling capability. Since 1977 the air threat against the United Kingdom has increased. But we have not, as they say, moved the 1977 goalposts so far as the Nimrod system is concerned.

GEC's offer covers three levels of attainment. In ascending order, and cumulatively, it has offered three aircraft in the second half of 1987 to the standard of the present trials aircraft; six aircraft between mid-1989 and mid-1990 which would approach the final standard subject to certain exclusions, of which the most important is a vital secure data link to and from the aircraft; and 11 to the final standard between October 1991 and September 1993.

The first of those offers is not of any value, as the system is not now of a standard that could be used for training. The question that I have had to consider is whether, taking account of the work GEC has done since February, and in particular of recent flight trials, together with our knowledge of the results it has achieved during the last nine years, I can have confidence that it could deliver aircraft with the second and third levels of performance in the time scales that it has offered. This is an assessment of the Nimrod programme against the objective standard of the air staff requirement and not against the E3A.

I am sorry to say that the conclusion that I have reached after the most careful consideration is that I cannot have that confidence. GEC has certainly made technical progress in some areas since February, and has also accepted contractual terms which would give it the strongest incentive to achieve success. I pay tribute to it for that.

Nevertheless, there have been technical disappointments as well as progress. The recent flight trials which have been attempted have not produced a consistent and reliable pattern of results. Such results as have been achieved fall well short of the air staff requirement. The company has therefore made proposals for a new programme of work which would improve the system's performance over the next few years. I have considered the proposals very carefully, but the unanimous view of my scientific and military experts is that the required performance is unlikely to be achieved before the mid-1990s at the earliest, if then.

This is a question of scientific and engineering judgment; the likelihood of success does not lend itself to absolute proof one way or the other. I must judge the prospects on the basis of the scientific and service advice available to me. That advice is clear and unanimous.

As I have said, Nimrod AEW should have entered RAF service for training in 1982 and for operations in 1984. Airborne early warning is a vital air defence capability and multiplies the value of other forces. The existing Shackletons, which entered service in this role in 1972, are obsolescent and would be of limited value in hostilities.

Very reluctantly, I have decided that the time has now come to cancel the Nimrod AEW programme, notwithstanding the expenditure of £660 million so far, just over half of which has been spent on the avionics. All existing contracts are therefore being terminated. Subject to satisfactory completion of contractual negotiations, we shall instead be ordering six E3A aircraft from Boeing now, with the option of adding a further two within the next six months. The E3A is already in service with the NATO AEW force as well as with the United States air force. The RAF version will meet or come close to the 1977 operational standard we have set and will, in several respects, significantly exceed it, thus improving the RAF's capability against the military threat. There is plenty of potential for stretching the system to match further developments in the threat. I am confident that the E3A will give excellent service with the RAF.

Allowing for termination costs on the Nimrod contracts, the cost of acquiring the six E3A's with initial support will be £860 million at 1986-87 prices, which is £200 million more than the remaining cost of acquiring 11 Nimrods. Those prices are based on sterling quotations from Boeing. The difference represents value for money given our total confidence in the E3A's ability to perform the operational task in an acceptable time scale. On a through-life cost basis including running costs over 20 years, the difference between the two is marginal. These comparisons are confined to future expenditure and take no account of past expenditure on the Nimrod system. The cost of this purchase will be contained within the planned defence expenditure totals published in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's autumn statement.

Nevertheless, this is a sad decision to have to take, but I have no doubt that it is the right one. There are lessons for all of us in this outcome, and I do not seek to evade my Department's share of responsibility. Our experience with Nimrod has reminded us of the importance of establishing agreed contractual terms at the earliest possible stage, with clear specifications and agreed acceptance criteria, which place the contractor under an effective discipline. My fellow Defence Ministers and I will be ensuring that these and other lessons are fully absorbed and acted on in our future handling of major projects.

While this must inevitably be a sad day for GEC and its work force, this decision must be seen in its proper context. GEC will remain one of the MOD's biggest equipment suppliers; we spent over £700 million — [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a statement of great importance that the entire House is anxious to hear.

Mr. Younger: GEC will remain one of the MOD's biggest equipment suppliers; we spent over £700 million with it last year, even excluding expenditure on Nimrod. It and other British firms will continue to design and manufacture airborne radars despite the present decision. The loss to British defence technology will be solely in this highly specialised field of large and advanced AEW systems, and it is not strategically vital for this capability to be retained in British industry. In any case, Britain will continue to be involved in this technology through the participation of Racal, Plessey and Ferranti in the E3A order for the RAF.

Furthermore, Boeing's proposals for the E3A include a contractual commitment on its part to an extremely high level of offset, amounting to £130 to be spent on work for British companies for every £100 which we spend on the E3A. This commitment has been welcomed by British firms which will be participating in the E3A project. Boeing is publicly committed to placing high technology work with British companies and has an excellent record for honouring undertakings of this kind. Our assessment is that job losses resulting from the cancellation of Nimrod will be equalled if not exceeded by job gains in firms all over the country resulting from Boeing's offset proposals.

As I have said, the decision that I have announced has not been an easy one. I wish very much that it could have been otherwise. However, if the RAF is to have the equipment it urgently needs to defend this country, this is the only decision that can be right. I commend it to the House.

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): The Secretary of State's decision is not only sad; it is a bad one. It is a bad decision for Britain's defence interests because ultimately a country can defend itself only on the basis of the strength of its industrial and technological base. The Secretary of State and the Government have dealt a heavy blow to that industrial base in an area of high technology.

The decision will be bad for the economy because jobs will be lost and Britain, yet again, will cease to be a prime contractor producing systems and will become a sub-contractor producing components for industries and factories of other countries. It is a bad decision financially because upwards of £900 million in the end will have been wasted completely. Apparently, another £860 million will have to be found from within the defence budget.

I shall seek to catch your eye later, Mr. Speaker, to apply for an emergency debate under Standing Order No. 20, but I wish briefly to ask the Secretary of State the following questions. Will he tell the House why, on 5 December, he stated publicly that both systems work? Is that still his view? Can he tell us—his statement did not say this—when the first Boeing aircraft will come into operation with the Royal Air Force? Are there any plans for hiring from the Pentagon in the meantime other Boeing aircraft, and was that offer available to GEC as well as to Boeing?

Does the right hon. Gentleman agree that jobs will be lost? What will be the penalties if Boeing fails to meet the contractual obligation of, apparently, £130 for every £100 spent? Does the right hon. Gentleman agree also that the Government have handed Boeing a world wide monopoly in early warning systems and dealt a severe blow to GEC's hopes of teaming up with Lockheed and selling their system in other parts of the world?

Since the Secretary of State has said that both systems work, since some of his officials have behaved disgracefully over the past few weeks, and since the right hon. Gentleman now says that it is merely a matter of technical judgment, will he agree to an independent technical evaluation of the two systems before contracts are signed?

Mr. Younger: I am surprised at the right hon. Gentleman's reaction. Of course this decision wil be a great disappointment to GEC and to all those who work for it; I recognise that. To say that this decision has an effect across the whole of the British defence industry is to fly in the face of all the facts and the present outstanding export record of the British defence industry. I said, and I stand by it, that both systems work. I did not spend three hours flying over the North sea fiddling with a system in Nimrod that did not work. The question is how well it works against the stark demand of air staff requirement 400. The answer was given in my statement, which is that, at present, it is agreed by all that it does not work anywhere near that standard. I have had to judge whether the company will successfully make the system work within three years. Regretfully, I decided that that is not credible.

The first aircraft will be delivered by Boeing in 1991. No offer has been made to lease aircraft in the meantime. If an offer is made, of course I shall consider it.

Penalties for non-performance will be in the contract signed with Boeing. Boeing has a good offset record in this country. Indeed, when we purchased Chinook helicopters a considerable time ago, Boeing exceeded the undertakings it had given to provide offsets.

I repudiate absolutely what the right hon. Gentleman said about my officials. My officials have been involved throughout this project. Their whole interest in this matter has been to see a successful conclusion to the planning of the Nimrod aircraft with which they were involved in the early days. None of them would be so foolish as to put into service with the RAF a product that will not do the job that it is required to do.

Sir Ian Gilmour (Chesham and Amersham): Since, as my right hon. Friend knows technical assessments are seldom just that, but very often much tendentious argument disguised in technical uniform, what steps did the Government take to check the apparently nebulous assessments that were made before this damaging decision was taken?

[Sir Ian Gilmour]

Mr. Younger: I appreciate my right hon. Friend's point. One of the great difficulties in making assessments is that they are matters of judgment. I disagree with my right hon. Friend that we in any way took a nebulous set of calculations. We have been checking the performance of the Nimrod and, indeed, the other aircraft, the E3A, against the specified requirements of ASR400. It is against that particular requirement that we carefully assessed the performance of the aircraft, and in that respect it was found wanting.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): It is no secret that members of the alliance would much rather that the Secretary of State had been able to award the contract to GEC. We have made no bones about it. Defence considerations were paramount. The right hon. Gentleman has given some information about the comparative performance of the two systems. Is he in a position to give the House more information on this matter! There is obvious concern about the jobs that are put at risk and about the offset. What guarantees has the Secretary of State had from Boeing that these offset jobs will be of high tech quality? Is he able to state that the United States will not be able to make a spurious claim of extra-territoriality with regard to the contract terms?

The Secretary of State has said that his Department must accept its share of the responsibility. What is that share of the responsibility? The taxpayer will demand a full explanation of why more than £600 million has gone down the drain on this project.

Mr. Younger: The hon. Gentleman is right in saying that defence requirements are extremely important, although they are not the only considerations, as he will recognise. I stress that, in making this decision, I have not compared the Nimrod with the E3A. I have compared each of them against air staff requirements 400, which is a very different thing. There are, of course, respects in which the E3A exceeds the requirement by quite a long way, because it is an older system. I have not taken that into account in making this decision.

Of course, there are no guarantees about the offset, except for Boeing's very good record in offsets. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman asks some of the firms concerned about the quality of the offsets. He will then find that they are extremely pleased with the quality of the jobs that they will be offered in this work and consider that it will bring them into major international work on a high technology project which will be to the advantage.

As for technology transfers, in spite of the article in one of the newspapers this morning, it is not correct to say that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has ruled that United States requirements must not be accepted by British companies. Where company-to-company transfers are concerned, it is a matter of commercial judgment for the United Kingdom company to decide whether to accept United States terms. However, it is not generally the Government's policy for Government officials to give similar undertakings to the United States Government.

Mr. Michael Heseltine (Henley): Will my right hon. Friend accept that, because this is a sad decision for a major British company and our economy's industrial base, it is a particularly courageous decision by my right hon. Friend? Will he stress to the House that, if he has secured the unanimous support of the Army and the Navy, the budgets of which will be adversely affected by this decision, it is a far more effective check on the rectitude of the decision than any attempt to double guess it by the House?

Mr. Younger: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for his comments. He will appreciate more than most people how difficult it is to take these decisions and the many considerations that must be taken into account. I agree with him entirely that the support and the unanimous advice of the service people and scientists involved are difficult to overturn. I assure my right hon. Friend that those in the services who are concerned with this matter acted entirely objectively and disinterestedly in the way in which they gave that advice, having solely in their minds the best interests of the RAF's procurement policy.

Mr. A. E. P. Duffy (Sheffield, Attercliffe): Is the Secretary of State aware that for a prime domestic bid for a major weapons system—with all the jobs, exports and high tech involved — to be overlooked in favour of a foreign supplier at this late stage is without precedent in the history of defence procurement? Can the right hon. Gentleman imagine either the French or the United States putting themselves in this subservient role? Is he aware that this is a black day not only for British industry and for GEC Avionics—because the Government have let us down — but for his Department? Why try the House with the right hon. Gentleman's description of the checks that his Department is now to introduce? Why did he not introduce them sooner and achieve a better cost-effective relationship with GEC Avionics?

Mr. Younger: I agree with the hon. Gentleman that one's first reaction is one of extreme disappointment that the British bid was not successful. I think that hon. Members on both sides of the House would have very much hoped that it could be successful. But the hon. Gentleman's memory is extremely selective. It is not in any way unprecedented, unfortunately, for a Government to cancel a large project from a domestic supplier.

Mr. Duffy: Which one?

Mr. Younger: The hon. Gentleman may remember the cancellation of the TSR2, which was also a project which had an aircraft already flying. According to Hansard of 13 April 1965, the Government cancelled it because they felt that further expenditure on the aircraft was not justified militarily. We, too, have conducted an honest review, as I believe did the then Government, to make up our mind on a difficult technological matter. I hope, therefore, that the hon. Gentleman will not say that this decision is unprecedented.

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): Will my right hon. Friend join me in congratulating the airborne display division of GEC Avionics on its recent success in gaining a $70 million export order for the world's first holographic head-up display unit to be supplied to the USAF? Will he acknowledge that today's sad decision, which I am sure has been taken with the greatest reluctance by Cabinet and which I am sure the House will have to endorse in view of the evidence, will be a severe blow to Marconi's prestige in high technology and may prejudice future export orders? Will he therefore take urgent steps to re-establish the Government's confidence in one of our leading avionics firms by considering giving the RAF the same piece of equipment in which the USAF places such confidence?

Mr. Younger: I appreciate my hon. Friend's comments. However, while this project and all that accompanies it has had an unhappy history and those involved in it must feel sad about today's decision, that does not mean that GEC as a whole is not a high quality company producing good technology.

My hon. Friend particularly referred to the selling of the head-up displays to the United States armed services. I understand that some £127 million worth of equipment has been sold by GEC for installation in four aircraft types —the F16, the A7 Corsair, the A4 Skyhawk, and the Viggen. That is a great tribute to the company and something that I hope will be noted.

Mr. Robert C. Brown (Newcastle upon Tyne, North): Is the Secretary of State aware that of the many dismal statements made from the Dispatch Box in the past few years, this is the worst of all? Does he realise that in 1977 the present Lord Mulley announced the letting of contracts for an AEW system that the RAF was intended to have in service within five years? After four more years, the Secretary of State has today made this deplorable statement. The right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) is laughing. He should hang his head in shame because he, along with the present Secretary of State, fiddled for four years allowing the RAF, at a time of much greater threat to this country, to go without the AEW system that we thought in 1977 was essential for 1982.

The Secretary of State is selling the pass of British industry by selling out to a foreign supplier. Bearing in mind that the Boeing does not meet the full criteria of the RAF, why not give GEC and the British electronics industry a few more months to get their act right?

Mr. Younger: I should have thought that the hon. Gentleman, who is an ex-Defence Minister, would have been the first to recognise that the requirements of the RAF in the vital matter of air defence must have high priority. The hon. Gentleman should have thought back a little further and recalled the form of the contract that he and his right hon. Friend placed. As I have made clear, I do not consider that we are devoid of blame in this matter, but the hon. Gentleman might have been wiser to admit that he and his right hon. and hon. Friends are probably not devoid of blame either. This is not a happy position.

With respect to the conclusion of this matter, I very much doubt whether the hon. Gentleman would have supported us if we had cancelled the project five years ago any more than he has supported us today. We would be taking the wrong decision if we allowed the RAF to receive equipment that did not work properly.

Sir Peter Blaker (Blackpool, South): What would the Russians have thought of our determination to defend ourselves if we had chosen second best?

Mr. Younger: My right hon. Friend has made a valid point. The Russians would be extremely surprised if, in view of the threats that we face, we did not pick the piece of equipment that could be reliably expected to do the job.

Mr. John Cartwright (Woolwich): Is the Secretary of State aware of the widespread support for the view that Britain must have the most effective AEW system? If the technical assessments are as clear cut as he suggests, why was the decision delayed so long? Since he accepts that the decision rests on a judgment of technical and engineering factors, will he consider publishing a declassified assessment of those factors so that we can see that justice has been done?

Mr. Younger: I appreciate the tone and common sense of the hon. Gentleman's remarks. On earlier cancellation, I hope that all hon. Members will bear in mind that it is extremely easy to be wise after the event. I cannot think of any applause which would have been forthcoming if the project had been cancelled when the firm concerned could have reliably said that it had not been given a chance to demonstrate how the equipment would work in an aeroplane in real conditions. We have given the firm that chance. That was only fair to those embarked on the project.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must take account of the fact that the rest of today's business is under a timetable motion which was passed by the House last Friday. I shall allow three more questions from either side.

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith (Wealden): I recognise the practical common sense and courage demonstrated by my right hon. Friend, but will he take an early opportunity to inform the House of the technological opportunities available to the British firms participating in the Boeing E3A project?

Mr. Younger: I shall certainly gladly take an early opportunity to spell out those details further. I am absolutely confident that Boeing is genuine in its determination to provide in full the offset undertakings which it has given. As I have said, its past record gives every confidence that it will again do that.

Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones (Eccles): Will the Secretary of State take it from me that when I flew Nimrod a fortnight ago the question of clutter was resolved and met air staff requirements? Will he tell the House whether on his flight the interceptions also met the requirements? Will he clarify those two points?

Mr. Younger: We have been testing the equipment against all the requirements of ASR400, one of which is to eliminate the clutter and another is the ability to take up and track targets. In both cases the system at present falls short of ASR400. That is not disputed between the Government and the company. On occasions the equipment meets some of the criteria. The hon. Gentleman is a well-known expert in aviation matters and he will appreciate that if one is in an AEW aircraft at a time of war and liable to be shot down by an enemy, one requires the equipment to work all the time not just occasionally.

Mr. Kenneth Warren (Hastings and Rye): Does my right hon. Friend accept that over the past nine years there has been appalling mismanagement in the procurement executive of the Ministry of Defence on this project? Therefore, will he assure the House that there will be an inquiry into that and that those responsible, whether officers or officials, will be disciplined or discharged?

Mr. Younger: I certainly agree with my hon. Friend that all concerned would be well advised to try to learn as many lessons as possible from this sorry affair. I agree that we must look into our procedures, both for contracting and the way in which we deal with large contracts, to ensure that such cost and time overruns do not happen in future. In that way at least some good can come out of this business.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): Will the compensation formula include or exclude orders already won by British industry? Will the Secretary of State give the House a yes or no answer?

Mr. Younger: I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's point. Boeing will give orders in addition to existing contracts. They will certainly be additional to existing contracts, so I hope that they will be 130 per cent. of the value of the E3A order.

Sir Hector Monro (Dumfries): With the sad failure of GEC Avionics, is it not good news for the Royal Air Force which will now receive the aircraft and equipment that it wants and feels is absolutely essential for the air defence of the United Kingdom?

Mr. Younger: I agree with my hon. Friend. With his long experience of aviation matters, he will know that the RAF, on the one hand, will want the best equipment and, on the other hand, will feel sad that it was not possible in this case even for it to recommend the British alternative. It has good equipment which will enable it to do its job effectively.

Mr. David Young (Bolton, South-East): Is not the real tragedy of the decision that British forces will be technically dependent on the United States not only now, but for the foreseeable future? Will the Secretary of State assure us that the RAF assessment was not settling old scores of those who never wanted the Nimrod defence system in the first place?

Mr. Younger: I absolutely reject the hon. Gentleman's assertion that the future of the RAF will depend on the United States. These aircraft will be purchased by the Ministry of Defence and become our property, and we shall operate them in the normal way. If his theory were turned on its head, it would mean that the United States was dependent on us because it buys Harriers. That would not be realistic. I absolutely reject the suggestion of the RAF settling old scores. Many people in the RAF will regret that we could not have the British alternative, but at least they are sure that they have good equipment.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I shall bear in mind those hon. Members whom I have not been able to call when the matter is discussed in future.

Business of the House

4.5 pm

The Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Biffen): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement about the business for the first week after the Christmas Adjournment, which will be as follows:

MONDAY 12 JANUARY—Second Reading of the Local Government Finance Bill.

TUESDAY 13 JANUARY—There will be a debate on the Army on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

WEDNESDAY 14 JANUARY — Opposition Day (4th Allotted Day). There will be a debate on a motion in the name of the Leader of the Opposition, the subject for debate to be announced.

Motion on the Industrial Training Levy (Construction Board) Order 1987.

THURSDAY 15 JANUARY—Remaining stages of the Coal Industry Bill.

Motions on the Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (Mauritius) Order and the Double Taxation Relief (Taxes on Income) (France) Order.

The Chairman of Ways and Means has named opposed private business for consideration at seven o'clock.

FRIDAY 16 JANUARY—Private Members' Bills.

Mr. Neil Kinnock (Islwyn): I am grateful to the Leader of the House for his statement.

On 12 January the Secretary of State for the Environment will introduce legislation. To prevent a further lapse by this recidivist Secretary of State, can the Leader of the House give an assurance that his right hon. Friend will consult with Greenwich council whose impending legal challenge brought the Government's lawlessness of the past six years to light?

In the debate on the Army, can the Leader of the House ensure that the Secretary of State for Defence comes to the House with an adequate response to the problems encountered by tank workers at the former ROF factory in Leeds which is now owned by Vickers? It has laid off between 400 and 500 tank workers as a consequence of the MOD changing its system of ordering?

Is the right hon. Gentleman aware of the recent Shelter report that more than 500,000 pensioners live in accommodation which is officially unfit for habitation and that more than 100,000 households are likely to have been declared officially homeless by the end of the year? In recognition of the urgent need to combat that increase in misery, will the right hon. Gentleman agree to provide time for a debate on homelessness shortly after we return in the new year?

There is great concern on both sides of the House about the appalling decline in the merchant shipping fleet. That was recently highlighted by the right hon. Member for Taunton, (Sir E. du Cann), among others. Since that continuing decline has serious trade and defence implications, will the Leader of the House give Government time for a debate as soon as possible?

I understand that later today the Government are likely to announce as part of the campaign against the spread of AIDS that clean needles will be made available to registered drug addicts. While I accept the need for that measure, may we expect in common justice that similar provision will be made for free disposable syringes for the 200,000 or so diabetics in Britain who at present must pay the full price for them?

Will the Leader of the House confirm that the Department of Trade and Industry has commenced an investigation into alleged insider trading activities in the Department of Trade and Industry, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission or the Office of Fair Trading? Will he undertake investigations into that and ensure that a full statement is made to the House today so that we may be fully acquainted with the facts as they are hitherto known?

Finally, may I wish the Leader of the House a happy Christmas. I ask him to confirm, as he said to the Select Committee on Procedure on Tuesday, that we are—I use his words — "in the last few months of this Parliament". May I ask the Leader of the House in his usual candid fashion, to be a little more specific about dates since he obviously knows something that not even the Prime Minister knows?

Mr. Biffen: If I may, I will take those almost limitless number of points that the right hon. Gentleman has just raised in reverse order and start with perhaps the most attractive of all concerning the timing of the general election. I have nothing to add to the right hon. Gentleman's general education on this matter, except to assure him that it is an election to which I look forward with much greater relish than he does.

I now refer to the point about alleged insider activities within the Department of trade and Industry in the context of takeover bids. This matter was raised last week, and I do not think I have anything further to add to what I said then, but, of course, I will refer his comments to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The right hon. Gentleman was correct in assuming that there will be a statement concerning the provision of clean needles in various restricted circumstances as part of the campaign against AIDS. I take note of what he said about diabetics and, of course, I will refer that argument to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. The right hon. Gentleman will appreciate that the statement is strictly and clearly in respect of AIDS.

With regard to the merchant fleet, I have no plans for an immediate debate upon it, though doubtless it could arise, at least with the permission of the Chair, as part of the debate that we have on the Royal Navy. I will, of course, refer the right hon. Gentleman's comments to the usual channels. I will also refer his request for a debate on the homeless.

I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence will be fully apprised of the importance of the royal ordnance factories and that they will feature in the debate that takes place in the first week after the recess.

I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, who always carries his burdens with good nature and with a concern for cutting through the difficulties, will be only too well aware of the point about the Greenwich council. But, just by some chance that it is in a Christmas spirit that the right hon. Gentleman has raised this point, fearing that there might have been an oversight, I shall see that it is corrected.

Mr. Eric Forth (Mid-Worcestershire): My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House has said that there will be an Opposition day on Wednesday January 14. If he finds that the Opposition have been unable to come up with an appropriate subject, will he suggest that the texts of early-day motions Nos. 1 to 38 entitled "Conduct of the Leader of the Opposition" may well give the House an opportunity, long overdue, to debate the important matter of the role of the Leader of the Opposition and his relationship with the gentleman in Australia, Mr. Turnbull, and quite what the Leader of the Opposition thought he was up to; what has been his relationship with Mr. Turnbull, and what instructions he has taken from Mr. Turnbull? Will my right hon. Friend consider suggesting that, if the Opposition do not take this up, he will provide official time to debate the texts of early-day motion Nos. 1 to 38?

Mr. Biffen: My hon. Friend has said that he is anxious about the recent brisk level of controversy and that it should be continued into the new year. Certainly, the course he recommends would sustain it, but I do not think I can answer for what will be the topic chosen by the Leader of the Opposition. We shall all watch with interest.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Will the Leader of the House take note of the considerable concern and surprise on this Bench that there has been no ministerial statement yet on the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate report on Sellafield? It was a critical report which caused considerable alarm. Can the Leader of the House say whether an Environment Minister will be coming to the Dispatch Box before or immediately after the recess to make a statement on that report?

I thank the Leader of the House for the informal indications that he has given that he will not be proceeding, until January, with the motion under his name on short speeches. Will he take account of the fact that some of the concern relates to the timing of the period of short speeches? Before the right hon. Gentleman proceeds with the motion, will he give an indication that the usual channels will discuss the interests of minority parties in this matter?

Mr. Biffen: Perhaps I should have extended it to short questions, but I take note of what the hon. Gentleman says. With regard to his first point, which I think is of greater substance, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will appreciate that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is not yet in possession of the full report. Therefore, there can be no question of any statement being made this side of the recess.

Mr. Michael Latham (Rutland and Melton): Is my right hon. Friend aware that hon. Members with agricultural constituencies will be looking to him to provide shortly a day for a debate on agriculture following the important statement made yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food? Will he ensure that agriculture gets urgent priority in the new year?

Mr. Biffen: I will bear in mind my hon. Friend's request. I realise that agricultural interests are widely represented in this House, particular on the Conservative Benches. I appreciate that there is a general anxiety to have an occasion on which formally to praise my right hon. Friend for his recent achievements.

Mr. Gordon Wilson (Dundee, East): Is the Leader of the House aware that unemployment in Scotland is steadily going up whereas in the rest of the United Kingdom, it is going down? In my constituency, we are to lose another 500 jobs after an announcement yesterday. Will the right hon. Gentleman take an early opportunity to initiate a debate on the problems facing the Scottish economy because it seems to be facing problems that no longer affect other parts of the United Kingdom?

[Mr. Gordon Wilson]

Mr. Biffen: I bear in mind that the hon. Gentleman makes a point about unemployment in the Scottish context that he believes makes it separate from the more general considerations of unemployment. Therefore, I take heart from that and think that it might be suitable for debate in the Scottish Grand Committee.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: May I remind the House that business is subject to a timetable motion today. I will allow questions to go on until 4.25 and then we must move on.

Mr. Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire, South): Does my right hon. Friend accept that it would be quite wrong for any announcement about free needles for drug addicts not to be coupled with an announcement of free needles for diabetics?

Mr. Biffen: I will pass on my hon. Friend's observation to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): When will the right hon. Gentleman provide the House with the opportunity to debate a number of very important issues in the heritage, specifically the gutting of the interior of the Royal Mint which the Tower of London wanted for its own purposes and the refusal of the Government to sponsor the purchase of the Royal Dental hospital to provide the National Portrait gallery with more exhibition space for its collections?

Mr. Biffen: I thank the hon. Gentleman for drawing attention to those two points. I will of course refer them to my hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts.

Mr. Robert Atkins (South Ribble): Has my right hon. Friend seen page 2 of The Times on which reference is made to a Liberal and SDP attempt to draw attention to many of the seats of my right hon. and hon. Friends in terms of the voting record and their behaviour therein? Will my right hon. Friend comment on the fact that in one constituency, that of my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. St. John-Stevas), recent opinion polls showed a 9 per cent. reduction in the potential Liberal vote and an increase of 5,000 in the possible Tory majority? Perhaps the combined voting records of my hon. Friends in this matter would be more than 10 times the voting record of many Members of the alliance.

Mr. Biffen: I am sure that when it comes to any comparisons of voting performance, quality of speeches, conciseness of questions and general political awareness, the alliance would be at a major detriment. The more good customer guides we can have on what is on offer politically, the better it will be for us.

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East): Has the Leader of the House seen early-day motion No. 85?

[That this House condemns the Government's intention to privatise Rolls-Royce and would utterly refute the Under Secretary of State for Defence Procurement's recent statement that Rolls-Royce employees 'relish the idea of privatisation'; fully agrees, on the contrary, with the concern of most employees that their jobs, wages and working conditions would be at risk; reminds the Government that it was a previous Conservative administration which originally brought the company into state ownership, in order to prevent it from going out of business; commends the dedication and skills of the workforce, which has been responsible for revitalising the company since 1971; contends that private ownership is totally unsuitable for an industry which requires large amounts of advance investment for product research and development; re-affirms its belief that the future for Rolls-Royce and the workforce is best guaranteed by it remaining fully in the public sector and not subject to short-term yearly profit analyses; and looks forward to a Labour Government that is prepared to safeguard jobs by investing in manufacturing industry.]

It concerns Rolls-Royce and is supported by 115 Labour Members. It is against the threatened privatisation of that company. When will the Leader of the House arrange for a debate on the Government giving away that company after cancelling £370 million of the company's debts? Apart from giving those 115 Labour MPs the chance of a major debate to oppose the privatisation of companies like Rolls-Royce, we may like to draw the comparison between the fact that the Tories can cancel debts prior to privatisation for companies like Rolls-Royce but cannot do it for city councils.

Mr. Biffen: As the hon. Gentleman uses the pretext of a question to make a speech, I begin to wonder whether there is any legitimacy in having a debate. He raises an important point about any proposals on privatisation for Rolls-Royce and I shall consider carefully what he said about a debate, but I could not accept one in the terms in which he recommended it.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): May I associate myself with my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South (Mr. Cormack) who called for free needles for diabetics? May we have an early debate on the terrifying treatment that my constituent Mrs. Maureen McGoldrick has received at the hands of the evil Brent council?

Mr. Biffen: My hon. Friend's point about Mrs. McGoldrick might be suitable for an Adjournment debate, not least because she is a distinguished constituent of my hon. Friend. I cannot say more than I already have in regard to my hon. Friend's first point.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): The Leader of the House will be aware that there has been a redetermination of the funding of local passenger transport authorities. Will he draw the Secretary of State for Transport's attention to the anxiety that the Bill that we are to consider when we reassemble after Christmas will mean that the redetermination no longer takes account of local factors but is a common uplifting, which would be unacceptable to passenger transport authorities?

Mr. Biffen: I shall pass that comment on to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will have perceived that he will be able to make his arguments when the legislation is before the House.

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): As Chairman of the Services Committee, my right hon. Friend will know that that Committee has decided, although hon. Members have not been formally notified, that a restriction should be put on the number of bookings that hon. Members can make for sponsoring functions in the banqueting room. I appreciate that the reason for that is that a few hon. Members have abused their privilege of being able to sponsor lunches and dinners. Does my right hon. Friend appreciate that a number of his colleagues are finding considerable difficulty in arranging routine parliamentary constituency functions? Will he review the arrangement as a matter of urgency?

Mr. Biffen: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for informing me that he would raise this matter. I shall most certainly look into it. I realise that it is of general concern to the House, and I shall be in touch with my hon. Friend.

Mr. Laurie Pavitt (Brent, South): Will the Leader of the House ask the Minister for Health if he will make a statement early in the new year about the increasing problems which face people who are dying from cancer? A person who has an inoperable cancer goes home to die, and it may take three or four months before that happens. During that time, that person may need five or six medications every three weeks at a cost of £12 or £14·50. Surely it would be possible for the Government to arrange, in what I submit is a special case, for charges to be remitted as we know that the people concerned have only a short time to live.

Mr. Biffen: I take account of what the hon. Gentleman says, and of course I shall refer it to my hon. Friend as he requests. Meanwhile, he may wish to try to alert the Department through the offices of Question Time as the Department will be first for questions on Tuesday 13 January.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): In view of the Government's deeply regrettable decision in respect of the airborne early warning system purchased by the Ministry of Defence, will my right hon. Friend arrange for a debate as soon as possible on the future of manufacturing industry in this country, bearing in mind the fact that manufacturing industry is our only source of genuine wealth creation?

Mr. Biffen: I cannot in any sense accept the strictures that my hon. Friend puts on the Governent, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence or the announcement that he made earlier this afternoon. I take account of the importance that my hon. Friend attaches to manufacturing industry. I hope that he extends the same feelings to agriculture, services and all of the other wealth-creating elements in the country. They will always be uppermost in the mind of the Government and, I believe, the House when we debate the economy.

Mr. Ron Lewis (Carlisle): Now that the transport users consultative committee has recommended that the Settle to Carlisle railway line must be kept open, will the right hon. Gentleman arrange for the Secretary of State for Transport to make a statement early in the new year about the Government's intention to abide by that committee's decision?

Mr. Biffen: I shall of course refer that request to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will be here for questions on Monday 12 January when Transport comes top. He may then have a chance to put his question in his own way.

Airborne Early Warning System

4.25 pm

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): I beg to ask leave to move the Adjournment of the House under Standing Order No. 20 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter that should have urgent consideration, namely,

"the need for an independent and urgent inquiry into the purchase of a new airborne early warning system for the Royal Air Force."

The matter is self-evidently specific. It is important because vital issues of national defence, British industry and public finance are involved. It is certainly urgent because since the Government have taken a decision in principle, there must be a debate before contracts are signed with Boeing.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Gentleman asks leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter that he thinks should have urgent consideration, namely,

"the need for an independent and urgent inquiry into the purchase of a new airborne early warning system for the Royal Air Force".

I am satisfied that the matter raised by the right hon. Member is a proper one to be discussed under Standing Order No. 20. Does the right hon. Gentleman have the leave of the House?

The leave of the House having been given, the motion stood over, under Standing Order No. 20, until Seven o'clock this evening.

Telephone Facilities

4.26 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You very courteously wrote a letter to my hon. Friend the Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) and me concerning telephone tapping. In the light of new information that I have submitted to your office about a tapping unit — LCS 9 AES — which is outlined on the front page of Labour Weekly, could you possibly give a ruling, when we come back, on a matter which affects hon. Members on both sides of the House?

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should be grateful if you could let the House know, Sir, when you think you may be able to let the House have news as to your response to my request that the installation of equipment which provides the facility for eavesdropping on Members' telephone calls should be referred to the Privileges Committee, and whether you would agree to that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman knows the form on this. I have written to him about it. I hope that he has had my letter.

Mr. Faulds: Not yet.

Mr. Speaker: I think that he should read it first.

BILLS PRESENTED

Local Government Finance

Mr. Secretary Ridley, supported by Mr. Secretary Hurd, Mr. Secretary Edwards, Mr. Secretary Baker, Mr. John MacGregor, Mr. Secretary Rifkind, Mr. Secretary Moore and Dr. Rhodes Boyson, presented a Bill to validate things done by the Secretary of State in connection with, and to make further provision as to, rate support grants and the limitation or reduction of rates and precepts of local authorities; and for connected purposes: And the same was read the First Time; and ordered to be read a Second time tomorrow and to be printed. [Bill 41.]

Gypsies (Control of Unauthorised Encampments)

Mr. Christopher Murphy presented a Bill to amend section 10(1) of the Caravan Sites Act 1968: And the same was read the First Time; and ordered to be read a Second time on Friday 6 February and to be printed. [Bill 42.]

Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments)

4.28 pm

Mr. Michael Meacher (Oldham, West): I beg to move,

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Amendment Regulations 1986 (S.I., 1986, No. 1961), dated 17th November 1986, a copy of which was laid before this House on 20th November, be annulled.

The issue in regard to these regulations is simple. It is that no civilised society with caring values should allow thousands of its elderly people to die of hypothermia or cold-related conditions brought on by extreme cold during the winter. That is what happened last year and it must not be allowed to happen again this year.

Last year, it is said, 1,060 persons died of hypothermia. That is almost certainly an underestimate because some doctors are known to be reluctant to use the term on death certificates. Of course the Minister can intervene if he wishes. I am quoting his figures but they are the figures for the whole year. I accept that they are not just the figures for the winter, although that figure is high enough at 630. I must make it clear that the real killer is not hypothermia as such but the winter cold which increases the number of deaths among the elderly from heart attacks, strokes and bronchial pneumonia by tens of thousands. In one week earlier this year, in March, during a particularly bitter spell, the death toll shot up to no fewer than 16,000.

It is our contention that the level of benefits proposed by the Government and the quality of housing among elderly people is such that the same catalogue of preventable deaths is likely to recur this winter, yet there is no question that the toll of preventable mortality could be greatly reduced. Other countries have managed it, including those with much colder winters than ours. In France and in Sweden, where it is much colder in winter than Britain, the increase in deaths in February was 6 per cent. In the United States it was 8 per cent. In Scotland it was 19 per cent., and in England and Wales it was 24 per cent. If other countries can safeguard the lives of their frail citizens, why cannot we? The truth is that we can. The two main reasons for lethal chill among elderly people are clearly known to be low incomes and poor housing.

Only about 40 per cent. of pensioners live in centrally heated homes and about 2·5 million live on or even below the official poverty line.

It is now widely understood in geriatric medicine that the danger of pneumonia in the elderly increases at temperatures below 61 deg F. At temperatures below 54 deg F the blood thickens and its pressure rises, increasing the risk of strokes and heart attacks. What makes this so alarming is that we also know from the latest national survey conducted on the subject that more than half of pensioners — 54 per cent. — have living room temperatures of below 61 deg F, the point at which the risk of fatal breakdown begins to rise significantly.

Clearly the present level of benefits designed to help pensioners with heating bills massively fails to keep all pensioners warm. The Government implicitly recognised that, and that is why they felt obliged to introduce severe weather payments as an extra in the first place. Our central objection to the regulations is that the Government's objective is completely invalidated by the pathetically trivial nature of the payments.

I asked the Minister about total expenditure but he would not give me an exact figure, so he can correct me if I am wrong. Total expenditure is likely to amount to only about £2 million to £3 million which, spread over 10 million pensioners throughout an entire winter, is almost an insult.

Our main protest is that the Government, having acknowledged as they do that top-up payments were necessary, then rigged the system to ensure that virtually no one would get them. The minus 1·5 deg C threshold for triggering these payments has not been picked by the Government by chance. The Government deliberately and carefully calculated it as the level which, on past experience, would ensure that only about one in eight pensioners would get a single payment of £5 once every five years. That is so minuscule as to be almost offensive.

Most pensioners will not be entitled to the payment at all. Let us consider the 64 weather areas. I admit that the fact that there are now 64, and not the 16 that I think that there were before, is an improvement. If we take those 64 weather areas into which the Government now divide the country for the purposes of this payment, and use the Government's table, we can see that in two of the winters since the Government came to office not one pensioner anywhere in the country would have got a penny. In two of the remaining winters only pensioners in one of the 64 areas would have got anything, and last winter, which witnessed arctic conditions and was certainly the coldest in living memory, or at least for 40 years, pensioners in more than half of the country would still have been excluded from getting anything. To pretend that such a massively restricted system is an adequate compensation against the bitter winter cold is an insult to pensioners and a reneging of the Government from their social responsibility to the frailest and most vulnerable of our citizens.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): Is my hon. Friend aware that my constituency is on the north-west coast and that a strong cold breeze comes in from the Solway?

In many homes in my constituency elderly people simply cannot keep warm. Is he aware that many agencies in Cumbria now express anxiety over what will happen this Christmas? They cannot understand why the Government have to be so hard-faced about these matters, in refusing to spend the few additional million pounds that would ensure that those homes are kept warm. What can we do when Governments simply do not want to understand?

Mr. Meacher: The electorate will have an opportunity soon to do something decisive about it. The Government's record on the welfare state, and especially their incredibly shabby treatment of elderly people, will be an issue at the next election.I shall towards the end of my speech make some comparisons along the lines suggested by my hon. Friend but I will repeat the point that was made by the hon. Member for Newark (Mr. Alexander), who is about to leave the Chamber. He made the good point that on this very day the Government are contemplating spending many tens, if not hundreds, of millions of pounds on an airborne early warning system when they are not prepared to spend more than £2 million to £3 million, which is a fleabite, to keep elderly people warm.

I accept the Minister's point that the main thrust of Government assistance for heating bills lies primarily with heating additions and with one-off payments for draught-proofing. There are two powerul objections to his case. First, under the Fowler Social Security Act, all these extras are set to go in 1988. Certainly the money will be put back into the pool for what the Government call "client group premiums" which includes the elderly but it will mean that help will be targeted less on those with the highest heating costs and needs.

Secondly, the Government claim that the heating additions, which have improved since 1979, are now worth £140 million more in real terms than when the Conservative party came to office. I say unequivocally that that is welcome, but the Government do not go on to say that for every extra pound that pensioners have gained under the Government from higher heating additions, they have lost 30 times as much from the break of the link with earnings at each uprating. If the formula that the Labour Government used had been continued, single pensioners today would receive £8 a week more in pension and married couples would receive nearly £13 a week more.

It is welcome that pensioners are getting £140 million more in heating additions this year, but it is surely thoroughly deplorable that pensioners are getting £4,250 million less this year as a result of the Tory cut in the pension formula. That is the amount by which pensioners have been cheated by this Government, and it is growing every year. If pensioners now received what they were entitled to receive under a Labour Government, the House would not have to bother tonight with this pathetic little measure, which is footling by comparison, and there can be no doubt that many fewer pensioners would die this winter.

Mr. Pat Nicholls (Teignbridge): The hon. Gentleman speaks about the Government cheating pensioners, but I am not sure which Government he has in mind. The Government who cheated the pensioners by reneging on that particular agreement were the one in which he served as an Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security. That Government proposed that there should be an earnings rather than a prices link, and avoided their own legislation. When the then Labour Secretary of State for Social Services was attacked by pensioners for ratting on his own legislation, he said, with a fair degree of cynicism as I recall, that he had only to take those matters into account and did not have to get them right. Should not the hon. Gentleman be directing his strictures towards that Labour Government?

Mr. Meacher: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will bear in mind, as pensioners no doubt will, that in that five-year period of office, the pension increased by 20 per cent. in real terms, which is an increase of one fifth over and above prices. In the seven years that the Conservative party has been in government, the pension has increased by, I believe, between 3 and 4 per cent. The difference in the level of pension is enormous.

Everything depends on the Government's priorities. This Government are increasing public expenditure this year by £4·5 billion, but all that they can find for pensioners who are facing another bitter winter is the fleabite of £2 million to £3 million in severe weather payments. The previous Labour Government made their priorities clear when they increased the real value of pensions by one fifth. Moreover, we now propose, as a priority for the next Labour Government, a £5 a week increase in the pension for single pensioners and an £8 a week increase for married couples. That is on top of normal upratings in line with earnings to ensure that pensioners keep pace with living standards. That will be paid for by withdrawing the tax concessions that have been handed out to the richest 5 per cent. in our society since 1979.

[Mr. Meacher]

In addition, we propose a £5 a week winter premium, payable automatically for each week of winter to the 1·5 million pensioners on supplementary benefit and to the further 1 million or so who live on the margins of poverty. That is the only way to guarantee that necessary help at the level required reaches those who need it most when it is required. We believe that our programme of commitments would significantly reduce the scourge of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in our society, and we are proud of that claim.

I am sure that the Minister will ask where all the money is to come from. The answer is that it is all a matter of the Government's priorities. This Government showed their sense of priorities when they spent £800 million in abolishing the investment income surcharge: a tax to which the only people liable are those with more than £100,000 of investments on the stock exchange. By contrast, our priority is to spend £150 million on trying to ensure that the frailest and poorest in our society are enabled to keep warm in winter.

Money alone is not enough. Many pensioners live in appallingly cold homes, because the accommodation is poor, badly maintained, draughty and damp, with virtually no insulation. We believe that weather-proofing and insulating homes, and installing central heating, would not only protect elderly people—which is reason enough—but would create jobs largely for the unskilled, and thereby help all low-income groups, as well as ensuring energy efficiency.

For all those reasons, we deplore the Government's decision under the Fowler Social Security Act to end single payments for draught-proofing materials in 1988. It will also put a stop to the excellent work done by Neighbourhood Energy Action, which in our view should be strongly supported for having draught-proofed the homes of nearly 250,000 pensioners and others, and providing work for 5,000 people on the community programme. I very much hope that the Government will reconsider that extremely wretched and unfortunate decision.

These miserable little regulations—that is what they are—will do little or nothing to remedy the appalling but preventable scandal of hypothermia and cold-related deaths among the elderly. If the Government cannot bring themselves to accept the unanswerable case for bringing together greater warmth for the elderly, weather-proofing, insulation of the nation's houses, and increasing energy efficiency, the next Labour Government very soon will.

4.45 pm

The Minister for Social Security and the Disabled (Mr. John Major): The hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) opened the debate in a more restrained fashion than has often been the case when he and I have discussed matters across the Dispatch Boxes, and I am grateful to him for that. It may mean that we can examine the details of the regulations more carefully instead of simply exchanging statistics with which the House has become familiar.

I shall begin on a point of shared concern. There is no dispute between us or within the House about the concern that everyone feels for the traditionally high level of excess winter deaths in this country when compared with the level in several other countries. The hon. Gentleman will know that during the past 35 years there has been a steady reduction in the number of those deaths. That reduction has been continuous since 1959 with the exception of the period between 1976 and 1980, when a slight increase took place due to a variety of factors. However, I make no party point about that.

As the hon. Member for Oldham, West acknowledged, the problem is deep-rooted. However, the situation seems to be improving for a variety of reasons, and we hope that that trend will continue. Within that broad figure for excess winter deaths lies the smaller, but equally important, figure for hypothermia, to which the hon. Gentleman addressed some of his remarks. He acknowledged that the number of death certificates showing hypothermia as either a primary or secondary cause of death had stood at about the 1,000 mark for the past year.

The interesting point is that hypothermia is often shown not as a primary but as a secondary factor, which is attributable to reasons quite other than the insulation of the house or the amount of heating available. One of the interesting factors to emerge from the hon. Gentleman's speech was that, of those 1,000 deaths, about 640 were winter deaths, while the other 350 occurred in the summer, spring or autumn when hypothermia, which projects the image of people literally freezing, would be an unlikely proposition. That illustrates the point that hypothermia often appears as a contributory cause of death. For example, someone may have a stroke and be left immobile so that hypothermia becomes a secondary factor, which is unrelated to any action that any Government, however benevolent, could take. The hon. Gentleman's remarks put the hypothermia element into perspective, and I am grateful to him for that.

The excess winter mortality figures are startling. Between 1951 and 1955, the percentage of excess winter mortality was 68·2. By 1981 to 1985, the last period for which we have figures, as they are calculated broadly on a five-year trend, the figure had fallen to 29·3 per cent. The figure is still higher than I or the hon. Member for Oldham, West would like, but it represents a noticeable improvement which we hope and believe will continue.

Mr. Gordon Wilson (Dundee, East): Does the Minister accept that the comparison should be made with other advanced countries in western Europe, and that in those countries the figures for excess winter mortality have dropped considerably over the years? By comparison, the United Kingdom's performance is utterly scandalous. Will he look at the files of his predecessors relating to meetings that I had with Ministers on the question of hypothermia? They refused to authorise research into the medical and hospital records of the Scottish Home and Health Department, which showed that many more people were hospitalised during the winter. A proper processing of those records would show that cold and the absence of heat contribute substantially to the discomfort and ill health experienced by the elderly.

Mr. Major: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point, but he bases his supposition on a premise that may not necessarily be true. His underlying premise is that the cause of excess winter deaths may be a lack of heating or poor insulation, or a combination of the two. They may be contributory factors, but the research by Professor Keating and others has shown that a variety of outher factors, many of them not within the control of Government, may play a significant part. The reality is, as we said when we last debated fuel poverty a few weeks ago, that we do not know the true, underlying causes of excess winter mortality. We can see the trend going in the right direction and wish that to continue, but neither the hon. Gentleman, Professor Keating nor I can be entirely sure why the figures are as they are or why they are improving. We can simply observe that they are improving and continue to take action while hoping that the trend continues.

Mr. Wilson: The hon. Gentleman is a reasonable man, and there are many factors, not all of which can be affected by his Department. Will he take it into account that we do not know why the excess winter mortality rate in the United Kingdom is so much higher than in other European countries, because then there is a case for his Department authorising expenditure to cover research into those reasons rather than complacently accepting that the fall is occurring? I hope that we all accept that the fall is insufficient in view of the numbers who die.

Mr. Major: I appreciate the hon. Gentleman's point, and he will be aware that when we last debated this matter I said that the Department was looking at the underlying reasons. That will continue, but there is nothing further that I can say this afternoon.

Mr. Meacher: I can see that we shall have considered and careful debate and I welcome that. I accept what the Minister said about the slight decline in the differential deaths between winter and summer. However, the figures for deaths in which hypothermia is a factor over the past seven years show no decline. The figures for each of those years are 596, 939, 860, 717, 731, with the latest at 1,060.

Mr. Major: I think that in those figures the hon. Gentleman is again merging winter and summer, with the special factors that I mentioned. Winter deaths, which are the point of special political controversy underlying the debate, show no trend upwards or, alas, downwards in the broad measure of hypothermia-related winter deaths. A particularly high year was 1978-79. Taking the figures from memory, the average is 640 a year, and that has not materially altered over the past eight or nine years.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Does the Minister not understand that he is playing with figures? One cannot measure the pain felt by those who do not die, but are discomfited. Does he not understand that there are hundreds of thousands, if not millions of people who want to keep their homes warm but cannot afford it? The Government give money away in tax cuts to the better off, but they fail to address themselves to this specific problem. All these figures are meaningless to such people, and the small amounts of money that the Department makes available are not relevant to the measure of their needs.

Mr. Major: The hon. Gentleman introduces a note of controversy so I shall make points that I would have left till later. The hon. Member for Oldham, West was gracious enough to concede the substantial increase in heating additions, specifically targeted at the most vulnerable. The hon. Gentleman will be aware of that, and of the fact that primary help with heating is now, as it was when his party was in Government, through the supplementary benefit scale rates. These have increased materially in purchasing power since 1979. The third factor is so relevant that the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) should bear it in mind. We now have not entirely, but nearly, stable fuel prices, which is a novel and welcome innovation that was not at all the position five or 10 years ago. All those three factors are material and helpful factors of considerable assistance to the people about whom both the hon. Gentleman and I are concerned. He might usefully bear them in mind.

The exceptionally cold weather payments are the trigger for the debate. They came into effect on 11 December and provide for a single payment of £5 for fixed weeks, in any area where the average temperature falls to minus 1·5 deg C or less. Those eligible will be supplementary benefit households containing someone who is 65 or over, under two or chronically sick or disabled. This is because they are the most vulnerable groups and it is upon them that we wish to target the available assistance.

The arrangements that we are discussing are to do with extra help in times of exceptional winter weather. I stress the word "exceptional" as I fear it is often taken to mean a regular occurrence rather than an exception. In considering the proposals, I hope that hon. Members and those outside will bear in mind the fact that these provisions have always played only a restricted part in the total help available for claimants. That is largely targeted in the way that I have just outlined. It is also relevant, when considering the present position, to bear in mind the short but turbulent history of the exceptional severe weather payments.

Some of the comments made recently suggest that many people have short memories about the controversial nature of those payments. Before 1980, all the indications are that extra help with fuel costs in periods of cold weather was seldom given. The hon. Member for Oldham, West will recall that, for there was a Labour Government at that time, and he was a Minister. However, there was no statutory entitlement, and the hon. Gentleman and his colleagues did not introduce one. Perhaps the winters were less cold, or perhaps their comments are more related to expediency than principle. Discretionary payments were made only on occasion, and there is little evidence that occasional payments were made, and no record of the frequency and amount of those payments, at least none available to me.

Mr. Meacher: The Minister said that he wanted to avoid party controversy, and I hope that he means that. It is true that there were not the equivalent of exceptional weather payments before 1979, but they were not needed because the pension was significantly higher as a proportion of average earnings than it is now. It is much better for pensioners to have higher pensions than to have a fleabite of exceptionally severe weather payments on a lower pension.

Mr. Wilson: They still died of hypothermia-related diseases.

Mr. Major: The hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. Wilson) has made the point crisply. People died of hypothermia-related diseases in the 1970s, and there was a high level of excess winter deaths in the 1970s. We have just trawled over the statistics and they do not show the Labour Government in an escpecially favourable light compared with before or later. That is not greatly productive ground for us to go over again, although it is a covenient territory for both of us.

[Mr. Major]

Regulation 26 of the Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Regulations was the first regulatory entitlement to assistance. That regulation, now replaced, was couched in fairly general terms. It referred to "a period of exceptionally severe weather"

but it did not define it. It suggested a comparison of fuel consumption in bad and normal weather, again not clearly or properly defined, to decide payment. The regulation has proved to be all but impossible to operate. Every time it has been applied, it has been severely and, in my judgment, justifiably, criticised. Each time the criticism has led to a review of the advice to adjudication officers, with a completely new set of guidance then being issued. It has not been satisfactory, and it is worth setting out briefly the chequered history of this regulation, because it will put the present proposals in proper context.

The first time that the regulation was used, in 1981-82, the chief supplementary benefit officer issued guidance that it applied across the country. Single payments were made to cover the difference in consumption between that winter and the previous one. Where possible, this was calculated by comparing actual fuel bills, and where this was not possible a special formula was used.

Those arrangements were criticised on two main grounds that are relevant to the present regulations: first, the difficulty in defining a period of exceptionally severe weather and, second, determining the extent to which extra fuel consumption was caused by that severe weather. Those criticisms prompted a review of the guidance, to devise a more objective method of applying regulation 26. That result, too, was criticised in turn, since the mechanism devised meant that in order to qualify for help it had to be colder, in absolute terms, in those parts of the country where it was normally coldest than in milder parts of the country. I am glad that I carry the hon. Member for Oldham, West with me on that point.

That was absurd. It meant that in the winter of 1984-85 help was given in parts of England and Wales but not in Scotland, which was actually colder. Understandably, that led to considerable resentment, and it is not difficult to see why. If I had been a Scot, I should have resented it, too. The formula for calculating entitlement was also extremely complex. Very few claimants understood it, and I am not at all surprised.

The strength of feeling was such that the adjudicating authorities asked the social security commissioners to determine whether the guidance then in operation was or was not a correct interpretation of the regulations. Their response was no. That prompted yet further guidance in November 1985. This advised that decisions on whether the weather had been exceptionally severe should be made by adjudication officers in each local office and should be based on locally available information. Once a period of exceptionally severe weather had been declared, claims for single payments were to be assessed on the basis of the individual claimant's increased fuel consumption as a result of the severe weather.

This guidance was followed last winter and payments were made in respect of the prolonged cold spell last February, but once again the guidance was severely criticised. As in 1982, one of the main criticisms centred around uncertainty as to whether the weather was exceptionally severe. Now that the decision was to be taken at local level, it was alleged that it would be determined by an adjudication officer

"sticking his head out of the window."

In practice, there was great uncertainty as to what exactly constituted a period of exceptionally severe weather. That was resolved only when yet further guidance was issued, following which, adjudication officers throughout mainland Britain declared that the weather in February 1986 was exceptionally severe.

I set out that tangled tale simply to demonstrate beyond doubt the unsatisfactory nature of past provision and to illustrate the principal problems that need to be solved — [Interruption.] It is hardly a question of the Government having finally conceded that point. My hon. Friend the Minister for Health said a considerable time ago that these regulations were weird and wonderful. There has never been any dispute about their unsatisfactory nature. We have now produced precisely what many people, including Opposition Members, asked for when they criticised the regulations.

It was clear from the criticisms last winter that the old regulation 26 simply had to go. It was not a matter of further guidance; the regulation itself needed revision. What was needed was a system with clear rules for determining whether the weather had been exceptionally severe, who should be entitled to extra help and how much they should receive. We believe that the new scheme, which came into operation a week ago, achieves those objectives. It provides for a single payment of £5 for each and every week of exceptionally cold weather. That means that there is now no need to compare fuel bills for different years. There is no need to attempt to guess how much of a fuel bill is related to illness or to the use of additional appliances in the home. Moreover, there is no need to produce an unpaid fuel bill at the date of claim, so that claimants who settle their bills promptly, or who purchase fuel in advance, are not penalised.

Mr. Wilson: Does the Minister concede that one of the great faults of the new scheme is that it does not take into account the variations in climate in the United Kingdom, except in so far as an absolute basic temperature of minus 1·5 deg C has been chosen? Does the Minister not agree that hardship is caused to tens of thousands of elderly people because there is a uniform level of benefit throughout the United Kingdom, although it costs 20 per cent. more to heat a house in Glasgow than it does to heat a house in Bristol and 30 per cent. more to heat a house in Aberdeen than it costs to heat a house in Bristol? Therefore, would it not have been better to recognise the diversity of climate in the United Kingdom and to introduce a generous scheme to take those factors into account?

Mr. Major: The hon. Gentleman will concede that the key criterion is temperature. However, temperature is not the only criterion. The cost of heating a home depends upon a variety of other matters: the precise situation of the home, the degree of insulation, the quality of the building and energy efficiency grants, which are the responsibility of the Department of the Environment. It is not simply a matter of temperature; there is a whole series of related factors. It would not be equitable to suggest that a particular area required a higher level of weekly payment for that particular reason. I understand the hon. Gentleman's argument for a cold climate allowance, but I fear that I have been unable to accept it.

Payments under our new proposals will be available when a period of exceptionally cold weather is declared for an area. We have sought to ensure that the new rules are much simpler and clear-cut. Each local office is linked to one of 63 weather stations around the country. If the average weekly temperature recorded at that weather station over a seven-day period, from Monday to Sunday, is minus 1·5 deg C or less, a period of exceptionally cold weather will be declared in the linked local office areas. A declaration will be made speedily at the end of the relevant seven-day period. The weather stations have been carefully chosen to ensure that, among other things, they are able to provide that information quickly.

Those who will be eligible for these payments will be supplementary benefit households containing someone who is 65 or over, or under two years old, or chronically sick or disabled. They are the people who are most at risk from cold weather.

I must briefly remind the House of the general welcome that the Social Security Advisory Committee gave to our proposals. It said that the proposals represented a significant improvement on previous schemes, that they were simpler and easier to understand and that they would lead to more certainty of payment. All those are relevant factors, which the House should bear in mind.

The committee agreed also that simplicity and ease of operation should be major requirements of the new scheme and it welcomed the proposal to introduce a standard amount of payment and to eliminate the need to compare previous fuel bills, which it considered to be a particularly welcome simplification. It agreed, too, that an absolute standard of coldness, rather than a comparative basis, should be a fundamental requirement of the new scheme.

Finally, the committee showed that it understood clearly the meaning of the word "exceptional". It said that a system which allowed for a period of exceptionally severe weather to be declared on average every two years, for example, could hardly be described as catering for exceptional weather conditions. In its detailed comments, therefore, the Social Security Advisory Committee gave significant support to the main elements of our proposals. I am bound to say that those who occasionally quote the committee when it is critical of the Government have been silent on this occasion.

Mr. Meacher: The Minister is preening himself on having the support of the Social Security Advisory Committee, but he is taking amiss the thrust of its comments. According to my reading of the SSAC's comments, it seems to be saying that it does not regard this scheme as ideal. However, given that the Government have insisted that it should be an "exceptionally" severe weather payment, the committee accepts that the payments should not be reviewed every two years. However, the committee does not accept that it is desirable. The committee does not believe that the scheme is adequate and it would be wrong to construe its remarks in that way.

Mr. Major: I do not recall using the word "ideal", and I am sure that Hansard will record the fact that I did not use that word. I set out the material advantages of this scheme compared with its predecessors, whose disadvantages are understood and which I outlined to the House.

We made two specific changes in the light of the committee's more detailed comments. Firstly, the time limit for making a claim was extended from four to 13 weeks. Secondly, we have provided for one claim to be treated as a claim for consecutive weeks of exceptionally cold weather. Some concern was expressed about whether the effect of regulation of the single payments regulations, which refers to there being a need for the item in question, might prevent payment when the fuel bill had been paid. The regulations now in force specifically cover the concern expressed and ensure that payment is permissible in such circumstances. That will be generally welcomed.

The Committee also spoke about the importance of publicity arrangements and I agree with it about that. Since the new system will give help in the local areas that are coldest, the main thrust of publicity must necessarily be local and must alert people to help. Revised instructions which give detailed guidance on action to be taken are being issued to local offices. Local offices are to be instructed to place advertisements, which include a claim form, in the local press. In addition, leaflets, again incorporating a claim form, and posters will be distributed to as many local advice and information centres as possible. These will include social services departments, housing benefit offices, jobcentres, health centres, general practitioners' surgeries, gas and electricity showrooms, advice bureaux, libraries and other centres of information. Our local offices will also be instructed to display the leaflets and posters in their reception areas, and information will be available on the DHSS Freephone service.

Regional information officers will be briefed and available to appear on local radio and television programmes to publicise the availability of payments. Therefore, we have arrangements in hand to provide proper publicity whenever necessary. I do not rule out measures in addition to those that I have mentioned if these prove necessary.

The new arrangements will provide for a better system. There will be certainty through the objective criteria for deciding when an exceptionally cold period has occurred. The way that we seek to collect and disseminate information will enable it to be made known quickly that help is available, and there are now clear rules on who will be entitled to extra help. Finally, there will be a known, clear flat rate payment of £5 for each week of very cold weather without the need to worry about comparing past and current fuel bills. I am confident that the new arrangements in force provide a fairer basis for help in what is and always has been a limited part of assistance with heating for vulnerable groups. I ask the House to endorse that proposition and reject the prayer.

5.12 pm

Mrs. Elizabeth Shields (Ryedale): Severe weather payments have rightly been debated in this House in recent weeks. The correlation between very low temperatures and the deaths of elderly people has been well documented since the 1960s. Following the particularly hard winter of 1985-86, the new system of payments for exceptionally cold weather announced by the DHSS last month and now in force are a step in the right direction.

[Mrs. Elizabeth Shields]

The number of deaths between January and March this year rose considerably compared to 1985. In February, there were about 7,000 more deaths than expected and in a very cold spell of weather in March in one week nearly 16,000 people died. Many elderly people survived that cold weather, but suffered extreme hardship. It is estimated that about 578 hypothermia related deaths occurred during the period, and that is an average of about six a day. Disturbing as they are, those figures probably underestimate the true number of deaths resulting from this disease. Many cases go undiagnosed and death certificates are not necessarily a perfect guide to the number of people who have died from the cold.

As hon. Members have already said, not all deaths are attributable to hypothermia because intense cold tends to thicken the blood and causes heart attacks, strokes and respiratory diseases. Even long waiting times at bus stops can mean that old people literally catch their death of cold. Professor Keating, who has already been mentioned, said that the main exposure to cold outside the home was encountered in waiting for a bus. However, many deaths from cold in the home are avoidable, as is shown by international comparisons. Many countries, such as Finland and other Scandinavian countries, have colder temperatures than those in Britain, but they manage to safeguard the lives of their frail citizens rather better than we do.

I welcome the new exceptionally cold weather payments, but there are still too many restrictions which, taken to their logical conclusion, could prove difficult to put into practice and may even be somewhat ridiculous. One must remember that the problems and complexities associated with the claiming of this benefit may well prevent those people genuinely entitled to claim the benefit from so doing. Many old people do not want the hassle of form filling and sometimes further means testing.

As has been said, under the new scheme a payment of £5 is to be made to households of which one member is aged 65 or over or, at the other end of the scale, is under the age of two years. When a child becomes two in mid-winter, does it mean that the child has suddenly become hardened overnight because of a second birthday? I hope that in such cases the allowance will be carried through at least to the end of March.

The payments will also be made on a basis of extremely cold weather — that is to say, weekly cold weather measured from Monday to Sunday. Does that mean that if a cold spell begins and ends on a Wednesday, claimants will not be entitled to the £5? Surely we all appreciate that in Britain we do not enjoy climate but have to endure weather that is unpredictable and no respecter of the days of the week.

There is another disadvantage. It is that any pensioner who has savings of £500 will not qualify for the allowance. Some 40 or 50 years ago £500 was a real nest egg, but half a century on it is a small capital sum and far too low an amount for the elderly to risk. In order to protect such savings, many old age pensioners will turn down the heating and hope to get by on less warmth.

The heart of the problem is that only about 43 per cent. of our elderly people have central heating and many old-age pensioners still live in substandard and often badly insulated houses. The Government have certainly encouraged schemes for the insulation of lofts, and currently provide 66 per cent. of the cost or £95, whichever is the lesser, and give a 90 per cent. grant to households in which there are pensioners or disabled people on supplementary or housing benefit. As many hon. Members may have found, those grants tend to be taken up by those who are somewhat better off rather than by pensioners who are living solely on a state pension and have no other private source of income.

The long-term key to this problem lies in sufficient, adequate housing for people of all ages, but with priority for the elderly, the disabled and the very young. There is a shortage of rented accommodation in my constituency and, indeed, all over Britain. Some 2,000 applicants are on the waiting list of Ryedale district council. I know one elderly lady living in a small terraced cottage who urgently needs a supply of hot water, a proper kitchen and bathroom, and central heating. She is 79 and very frail, but still has to fetch and carry coal for a fire which by no means heats her small living room. There is a centrally heated vacant flat in a block of fairly new council properties, but there are at least a dozen hopefuls for that flat, so her chances are small.

District councils should be allowed to make greater use of their capital receipts for new build, central heating and proper insulation, especially for the elderly, so that the councils can help to reduce the cost of special payments which the lack of proper housing necessitates.

One good scheme to help protect its senior citizens from hypothermia this winter is being run by Adur council in West Sussex. The council is inviting members of the local community to match pound for pound every public donation to what is called the Adur Warm Campaign. It aims to provide a £20 fuel gift voucher to its 1,500 elderly residents most at risk in cold weather. Gas and electricity boards have agreed to accept the vouchers as payment for heating bills, and the Solid Fuel Advisory Service has said that local businesses supplying other fuels such as oil, coal and paraffin will also accept the vouchers. Adur businesses, community groups and organisations are being asked to help, and Age Concern and Warm Aid are working closely with the council in this venture. I am sure that the Minister and hon. Members will agree that this is an excellent venture which could be copied. I am also pleased to mention that, because Adur is a Liberal-led council.

Perhaps the best outcome of the debate will be to publicise once again, nationally, the very real dangers of extreme cold weather to elderly people in particular, and to motivate local councils, groups and individuals in their own areas to keep a special watch out for their elderly neighbours and acquaintances so that no unnecessary deaths occur this winter.

5.20 pm

Mr. Patrick Nicholls (Teignbridge): I hope that the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mrs. Shields) will not take it amiss if I do not follow her sequence of points because, in what will be a short debate, I want to make one or two points of my own. However, I assure the hon. Lady that I shall make one or two remarks about what pensioners may expect from an alliance Government, should such a bizarre event ever come to pass.

I start by finding a fair measure of agreement between myself and the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher). I am sure that there is a fair amount of agreement between us, which, even if it went no further, would centre on the fact that with the most vulnerable members of society — those pensioners who are dependent on a retirement pension, topped up, no doubt, with supplementary benefit — Government have an obligation to ensure that they get it right. I am certain that that is the common ground between the hon. Gentleman and myself, and even if our agreement went no further than that, it would be something. The difficulty is that those words are easy enough to say. However, people outside the Chamber, namely pensioners, have to ask themselves, "What gives us the best prospect of seeing that rhetoric carried into reality?"

When the hon. Gentleman broadened his arguments on heating additions and exceptional weather payments to discuss the retirement pension he made a point that was dangerous for him, but which was nevertheless significant. I am sure that he would like to discuss that and it is again probably common ground between us. However, I shall not embarrass him by finding too much common ground.

Nobody would ever try to suggest that the energy requirements of elderly people should be met entirely by a payment here and a payment there, and by the use of a thermometer in certain circumstances to provide a little bit more. That is not how we look after pensioners. We do so by providing a proper rate of retirement pension.

It would be pie in the sky to suggest that we shall ever reach the position where a person who is on a retirement pension receives pretty much the same amount of money as anybody else. That will not happen and I doubt — though we shall see — whether Opposition Members would say that. The state must make a judgment about how much it can afford to give pensioners. Pensioners are right to ask themselves, "What is on offer? What are the promises?" In trying to assess the worth of those promises, it is worth looking at what has happened before.

The last thing that I want to do is to be unfair to the hon. Gentleman about his opening remarks. It was sad that they lacked a certain amount of the usual rant, but they did include those familiar noughts. I shall not attribute to the hon. Gentleman how many hundreds of millions of pounds he will spend on pensioners because, give or take a few noughts, it will be a great deal. We have heard it all before, we heard more than a hint of it today and we shall hear more about it during the election campaign. If that is what is on offer, the reality is slightly different.

History can sometimes be very unkind and it has been unkind tonight in bringing the hon. Gentleman here because he is in an almost unique position. The hon. Gentleman is the Opposition's main spokesman on social security matters — hoping, no doubt, that when the impossible happens he will be the Secretary of State for Social Services in a Labour Government. The problem is that at the back of his mind he is aware of a terrible embarrassment. Once upon a time — it seems so long ago now — he was a Minister responsible for social security in a Labour Government.

I am sure that the hon. Gentleman understands pensioners' needs and the way in which hypothermia can affect us all. Nothing has changed; pensioners' needs today are exactly the same as they have always been. When the hon. Gentleman sets out his prospectus for the future of pensioners he knows that nothing has changed. Cold is cold and old age is old age. Perhaps, because of his ministerial experience, the hon. Gentleman knows better than most. Will the promises that the hon. Gentleman has made tonight and the assurances that he has given pensioners that, when he achieves office, everything will be as in the land of milk and honey, become reality? The hon. Gentleman talks about how high pensions were in real terms under the previous Labour Government — that is what he says — but he was not a pensioner.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): When does the hon. Gentleman ever listen to pensioners?

Mr. Nicholls: The hon. Gentleman rambles on from a sedentary position, I am sure that we all look forward to hearing his speech in due course, and that we shall follow every word of it with rapt attention. For the time being, the attention he is giving my speech has reminded me of what will be the next point in my speech.

It is worth bearing in mind what pensioners thought of their pensions at the time. I detect some blushing and misgiving on the face of the hon. Member for Oldham, West. I wonder why? I may be able to help the hon. Gentleman by asking him to cast his mind back to February 1975. The hon. Gentleman will remember that fairly well and I am sure that his press cuttings will remind him of that time. In February 1975 the hon. Gentleman addressed a meeting, not in this House where the standards of decency, decorum and good will to all men on each side of the House are by the by and are taken as understood, but a few hundred yards away in central hall, Westminster. There was not the amity and friendship there that I extend to the hon. Gentleman on this festive occasion. He was speaking, not to people who were talking about pensions as I am and not about people promising what they would do in the future. He was talking to people living on old age pensions. Were they pleased to see him?

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): No.

Mr. Nicholls: No, they were not. I cannot imagine that my hon. Friend was there in a professional capacity, because he seems too young and charming.

The hon. Gentleman was addressing a meeting of pensioners. At that time — the hon. Gentleman will correct my chronology if he wants to — the hon. Gentleman had not anncounced to the House that he was yet again abolishing the Christmas bonus to help pensioners with their fuel bills.

Mr. Soames: Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Nicholls: Not now, although I shall in a moment.

The record shows — my hon. Friend may be able to confirm it — that pensioners were so outraged by what the hon. Member for Oldham, West had done that he had to be rescued from the hall because the warlike pensioners wanted, to use a phrase, to take him outside.

Mr. Soames: Does my hon. Friend remember what reasons the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) gave for stealing the Christmas bonus from the pensioners?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. We are getting rather a long way from cold weather payments, and I wish that we could return to that subject.

Mr. Nicholls: Without straying beyond the bounds of what may be in order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it may be that one of the things that the pensioners were saying was that when they had to consider budgeting for the extremely expensive cost of energy at that time, they were not greatly aided in that endeavour by the loss of their bonus.

[Mr. Nicholls]

The hon. Member for Oldham, West tries to pretend that he is the pensioners' friend. He need not take my word for it, but the fact is that when he was in office he had to be rescued from pensioners because they knew the reality.

We have heard a great deal from the hon. Gentleman about how the Government have cheated the pensioners by reneging on the arrangement which Labour had. The Conservative party and the Government have never thought that one serves the interests of pensioners well by promising them the moon and giving them something rather less. The fact is that, when the hon. Gentleman's party was in government and dealing with elderly people with the ailments to which the flesh is heir, it said that it would give them a pension increase that was based on earnings. It did for a time but of course, the trouble is that it did not last. Christmas does not last for 365 days of the year.

The Labour party might have served its electoral purposes at the time, but the reality is very different. Having gone to those poor, grey-haired people in the twilight of their years and said, "Vote for us. There will be an earnings link", what happened? In 1976 pensions were raised by less than the increase in prices or earnings. In November 1978 the Labour Government gave a pension increase of 11·4 per cent., although earnings rose by 13 per cent. In March 1979 the Labour Government proposed a pension increase of 12·8 per cent., when earnings were rsing by about 15 per cent.

That was reality for a pensioner then. First of all there was a Father Christmas Government which promised that one's pension would keep up with earnings; then, suddenly, at a stroke, the Minister responsible for implementing the legislation that he had passed would not enforce it. When a publication called Pensioners Voice—its voice must have been frail and muted by then — approached the then Secretary of State for Social Services in a Labour Government it asked, "What about it? What about your legislation? Remember, you passed it. You gave us this legislation which would give us an earnings link." What did the Secretary of State say? He said:

"There is a statutory obligation to take these figures (i.e., earnings) into account, which was done, but no statutory obligation to get it right."

That really is marvellous. That is really something that pensioners can look forward to.

Although statements so blatant and cynical as that will excite a degree of derision bordering on humour, the reality is that there was a Government who, I do not doubt, were compassionate — we all know about the hon. Gentleman's compassion; he sprays it around by the bucketful — and cared, but the reality was that they passed legislation that they were simply unable to implement. Then they had the brass nerve to turn round to pensioners and say, "Right, we have taken it into account, but we were not able to get it right."

Mr. Meacher: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Nicholls: Yes, gladly I am pleased that I have been able to prick the hon. Gentleman's memory.

Mr. Meacher: In the comic and childish interlude that passes for a speech, will the hon. Gentleman acknowledge that, despite all his remarks, the net effect was that at the end of five years the value of the pension in real terms, after taking account of inflation, had risen by 20 per cent., and that is after taking account of all the factors that he has mentioned? Whereas after seven years of Tory Government, it has increased by only a paltry 3 per cent.

Mr. Nicholls: I am greatly saddened that the hon. Gentleman should feel obliged to reply in those terms when I gave way hoping that he would deny that the Labour party had ratted on its own arrangements. I wondered whether I had that quotation wrong and the Secretary of State had said something else.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I welcomed the hon. Gentleman's intervention in the hope that he was going to lead us back to cold weather payments. I hope that we can get back to them.

Mr. Nicholls: I am sure that we can, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I apologise for the fact that I was led astray.

The point that, I am making is that when Labour Members talk about the ability of pensioners to manage their money so that they can pay for their energy needs, that, as the hon. Gentleman rightly conceded, has to be looked at in relation to the pension. I have pointed out only the worst of the fiddles. It may well be that the hon. Gentleman, or whichever of his colleagues applies to the debate, will be able to tell pensioners how the necessity to care for themselves in cold weather was helped by switching the method of calculation of the old age pension from the historic to the forecasting method. If the hon. Gentleman is wondering why that was done, he need look no further than Barbara Castle's diaries to see that it was not to help pensioners, but to save money.

When pensioners are trying to meet their energy costs it is not just the pension or special payments which are relevant; it is also their savings. Many pensioners do have savings put by. The hon. Member for Ryedale said that £500 was not much of a nest egg. I do not know how attractive that would be to many old age pensioners who do not have £500 as a nest egg, but be that as it may. But under the previous Labour Government pensioners' savings were wrecked. The hon. Gentleman has said nothing to us about that.

When the hon. Gentleman was talking about severe weather payments, another thing that he failed to mention was the cost of energy. It is fairly understandable why we did not hear too much about that. Again, under the previous Labour Government the price of energy rose massively. Let me help the hon. Gentleman by reminding him of the figures. Since the previous election, domestic gas and electricity prices have fallen in real terms—gas by 7 per cent. and electricity by 10 per cent. In cash terms since the previous election, the price of gas has increased by about 3 per cent. a year. By contrast, under the previous Labour Government it increased about four times as fast. Electricity prices have increased by about 2 per cent. a year under this Government. Under the previous Labour Government it rose 11 times as fast, or as much in six months as at the moment we have had in about three and a half years.

That is the reality for pensioners or those on a fixed income. More than anything else, they need a Government who can make a commitment which they keep. This Government have kept to their commitments. They need to know that energy prices will be stable and that their savings will not be wrecked by inflation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Does the hon. Gentleman not understand that people on fixed incomes are so concerned about these matters that they have become a group of people who favour higher interest rates? We now have a group of people in society who are saddened when the minimum lending rate falls because they believe that it is a loss of income to them. Is it not an indictment when we build into our structures a group——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are debating cold weather payments and I hope that we shall eventually do that.

Mr. Nicholls: Again, without going down the byroads along which the hon. Gentleman was seeking to lead me, I can say that we have created a body of people who know that they will be dependent—some of them soon, some of them rather later—on a state retirement pension for the rest of their lives. One of the things that they will be concerned about is that the older they get the more their energy costs will matter to them. They will know that and they will—to be blunt—ask themselves who will give them the best deal and on whom can they rely.

It is not good enough for the hon. Gentleman to ignore and forget, and hope that the rest of us do the same, what his party did in office. It is not sufficient for him to hope that we shall forget why the calculation of the pension was switched from an historic method to a forecasting method. It is not sufficient for him to hope that we shall forget that the Labour Government implemented legislation and then spent the next few years wriggling out of it. We must concern ourselves with the fact that the Labour party may yet be able to get away with it, because the pensioners upon whom those tricks were performed have now, for the most part, been called to glory. The people who may be pensioners by the time we come to the next election are the sort of people who have no cause to remember what the 1970s were like because at the time they thought they were a long way from pensionable age.

I realise that in making these few remarks I have for a moment been unfair to the hon. Member for Rydedale because I promised that I would say something about the points that she raised that we might have to look forward to from a Liberal or alliance Government. The marvellous thing about severe weather payments, and many other matters, for the alliance, is that it usually tries to say that it has no record to be judged by. It can be sweetness and light to everybody — a problem which would not normally confront Opposition Members.

In this case, however, the alliance does have a record and we do not just have to look at what is happening in one or two obscure local authorities. When the Labour Government were performing such deceptions and trickeries, not as a result of any lack of compassion on the Opposition Benches but because of sheer fiscal ineptitude and the inability to generate the money that would take care of severe weather payments and such matters, they were kept in office, not by the Conservative party but by the Liberal party of that day. If the Opposition Benches swell and other Members come in to join the hon. Lady in her splendid isolation and try to dissociate themselves from the Labour party's record on this, they must be reminded that when they had the ability to choose they supported a Labour Government in such tricks and deceptions.

I started by saying that I saw common ground between myself and the hon. Gentleman. I hope that in terms of what we try to do, I can. But there is another common ground that will not go away. It is the record of past promises, recklessly made to win general elections, blatantly disregarded when the Labour party took power. The hon. Gentleman thinks that history has come full circle in putting him where he sits today. I respectfully suggest to the hon. Gentleman that it will not take him one jot further.

5.39 pm

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): After enduring that pathetic episode from the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) — a display of what my mother would have described as a most accomplished blatherskite—I prefer to return to the main subject of our debate this evening — exceptionally cold weather payments. My hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) has outlined most capably the reasoned case for the annulment of this instrument.

The Minister commenced most graciously by welcoming the tone of my hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West. However, the sugar soon fell from his words as he went about his business in his customary caustic fashion. However, he did invite us to "examine the details" for once. I am plesed that he has now returned to the Chamber because I would welcome his listening with some care to what I have to say. I would like nothing better than to examine the details with the Minister around a table together with representatives of the voluntary organisations that are saddled with the consequences of the circumstances we are discussing, representatives from the Department of Health and Social Security and perhaps one or two members of my own organisation, the Teesside Pensioners Association. I am sure that representatives from that association, in discussing exceptionally cold weather payments, would give the Minister an exceptionally warm reception. In fact, they may take issue with him on his period of exceptionally cold weather which is characterised as "a period of 7 days beginning on a Monday and ending on the following Sunday".

That is stated as if it is some charitable giveaway. One does not have to be a great mathematician to point out that that definition could well refer to an exceptionally cold weather period lasting 19 days and that, effectively, it is a way of denying a week's payment to any pensioner who may qualify for it.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Nicholas Lyell) indicated dissent.

Mr. Cook: I see the Minister shake his head. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss this in greater detail, either now or later.

I wish to raise with the Minister a much more specific reference related to my own constituency of Stockton, North. I have scoured the document for mention of my constituency, but all my best efforts are to no avail for there is no such mention. Those more readily satisfied with a little learning and who can stay awake for a moment would counsel no cause for alarm by quoting section 4*(b)* of new regulation 26A which states:

"where the home of the assessment unit"—

[Mr. Cook]

I hope the Minister is listening.

"where the home of the assessment unit is not situated within an area described in column (2) of Schedule 2A, it shall be treated as situated within the area described in that column which is nearest to it."

Would that it were quite so simple.

The crucial phrase is:

"shall be treated as situated within the area described in that column which is nearest to it."

The obvious solution would seem to be the issue of ordnance survey maps and scale rules to enable adjudication officers to determine which is the nearest point on the district boundary and which area is the neighbour to that point. Even that would be relatively straightforward.

However, thoroughly to understand the problem I am trying to present one needs to know that Stockton is bounded to the north-east by the borough of Hartlepool, whose district officers must make reference to the national climatological message station at Whitby coastguard, whereas the northern, western and southern boundaries of my constituency have as their neighbours the part district of Sedgefield and the districts of Hambleton, Richmondshire and Middlesbrough, all of which are required to use the inland station of Leeming.

One does not need the skills or expertise of an interstellar cartographer to realise that such predetermined circumstances can give rise to a situation that would be not only ridiculous but reprehensible. I refer, of course, to the prospect of close neighbours in the same geophysical location and suffering similar socio-economic deprivation being subject to evaluation on statistics that are quite different.

Mr. Soames: This is lunacy.

Mr. Cook: The hon. Gentleman may well express his boredom. I suggest that he should return to the bar that he left only five minutes ago before inflicting his presence upon us.

Under the original regulations, the Stockton office of the DHSS came wholly under the Leeming criteria so this anomaly did not apply then. Hon. Members may think that it is small beer my raising the question now. Hon. Members following my line of argument may be tempted to consider that the points are nit-picking — [Interruption.] The hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) is trying to interject again and saying that my statement is "bloody stupid". I am sure that the Teesside Pensioners Association——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Plain language is one thing, coarse language is another. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman would prefer not to use that expression.

Mr. Cook: I am grateful for your guidance, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I am simply repeating the statement made by the hon. Member for Crawley. If he seeks to withdraw it I shall gladly accept his withdrawal. I am sure that the pensioners of Stockton, North, whom I represent, will note his remark with great interest and I am sure that the pensioners of his own constituency will also take note.

However, as I have said, hon. Members making the effort to follow my argument may be tempted to consider these points as nit-picking. In case that is so I offer some simple facts to illustrate the stupidity. Since 1981 the Leeming station has had seven periods of exceptionally cold weather. In the same period the Whitby coastguard has recorded only two. Therefore, added to the administrative chaos caused by the proliferation of scale rules and survey maps, we will have, if the measure remains in force, the gross inequity of one constituent qualifying for exceptionally cold weather payment while his next-door neighbour may not. As the hon. Member for Crawley said, it is stupid. In truth, it is even more ludicrous although most certainly not laughable.

One constituent in the north of my constituency will be assessed on the same basis as someone in Humberside while his fellow elector from the south side of the same Stockton street will be subject to the same data as are applied to a claimant from Castle Morpeth in Northumberland. That is a geographical difference approaching 140 miles. It is sheer madness.

The situation I bring to the attention of the House is only the latest in a long line of instances where the Government seek to pinch pennies from the poor and deprived. This week alone we have seen several instances of that sort of mentality, and this is the week before Christmas. If Christmas means anything, it should last 366 days not 365, as the hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) said. There are 365¼ days in a year. If Christmas means anything, this regulation should be annulled tonight and Christians on the Conservative Benches should vote for that annulment.

5.48 pm

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): I want to make an unashamedly simple speech because these matters are very simple and the public outside are concerned about the way in which the Government hide behind complicated indices to prove their statistical case when, indeed, they know the truth.

Last weekend I visited the house of one of my constituents in the town of Maryport. When I walked in the door the first thing that struck me—many might say that we are not even in the cold part of the year—was how cold the house was. As I invariably do, because I love heat, I asked how they managed live in that way. I was told quite simply that they could not afford to heat their home.

In that house both the parents were out of work and there were two children. I went there to discuss a case totally unrelated to this matter. It was to do with another affair where the Government have responsibility. I sat listening to them wondering to myself, how it was possible in these times for people to live in these conditions? I hear Government Back Benchers say things such as, "You should compare your pension with our pension," and various other arguments. All such comparisons are irrelevant. What matters is that the march of progress demands that we set different criteria.

The march of progress required that in 10 years we moved from mechanical systems to chip systems, perhaps by way of the transistor, and the state should set higher standards in what it believes is necessary for people, including the conditions in which they live. Unfortunately, we still set and use criteria that have existed for decades. We must look forward and not make comparisons with the past. An analysis that is based on the past is irrelevant and invalid. We should be thinking of how we intend to raise the living standards of millions, and especially the heating of their homes. Clearly the heating of homes is a living standard. For many people heat is as important as food. There are those in my constituency——

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: No, I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman because I am conscious that the Minister wishes to reply. The Minister will reply at the conclusion of my speech.

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: There are those who fail very often—this happens in my constituency—to feed their children properly——

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: —and for many reasons they are failing similarly to heat their homes.

Mr. Cash: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I put a simple proposition to the Minister——

Mr. Cash: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Does the Minister accept that £5 per house over a five-year period——

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) must not persist in that fashion.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Does the Minister accept that £5 perhaps once every five years for my constituents, as set out in annex B of the very good report that deals with the proposals for exceptionally severe weather payments—the facts are set out in the report and the truth is that my constituents receive a fiver once in five years — is insufficient to resolve the problem that confronts many people?

Mr. Cash rose——

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman. I intend to allow the Minister to reply in a few minutes and I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman. The Minister wishes to reply to the debate.

There are many organisations in my constituency that are demanding higher standards. Many of Age Concern's voluntary workers report that they are concerned about people living in cold conditions in the winter months. There is an unemployment centre in my constituency and those who work there make representations to me repeatedly that those who use the centre daily, perhaps to fill their time during their unemployment, are complaining constantly that they cannot afford to heat their homes. There are social workers in my constituency who ask me privately, "Dale, what is going to happen? Why don't the Government understand that standards are changing in the 1980s and that what was perhaps good enough in the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s is no longer good enough?" Those who cannot afford to heat their homes know that down the road or in the next town there are those who can. They cannot understand why the great gulf or division has been allowed to open between those who can afford to heat their homes and those who cannot.

There is a responsibility upon the Government to bridge the gap that has opened but they refuse to do so. All that they are prepared to do is cut taxes for the better-off in our society. All Members of this place have received tax cuts over the past seven years of Conservative government, but we know that there are many outside the House who cannot afford to live and are faced day by day, week on week and year by year with additional, niggling little Government measures that only depress further their living standards.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North) rose——

5.54 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Nicholas Lyell): There have been some distinguished speeches in this debate and, if I may say so, the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) has asked a serious question which I shall seek to answer.

We are debating a scheme which is designed to give help to the most vulnerable in our society at a time when it is exceptionally cold. There will be common ground in the House that a reasonable scheme should fulfil the following criteria. First, it should operate when it is exceptionally cold, and in areas where it is exceptionally cold. Secondly, it must have clear standards. Thirdly, it must provide help in parts of the country where it is most needed and is very cold, and that takes up what the hon. Member for Workington was saying. Fourthly, it must be easy to understand. Fifthly, it must provide a definite amount of benefit. Sixthly and finally, it must be quick and easy to claim. No scheme is perfect, but the present one passes all the tests that I have set out and has won the approval and support of the Social Security Advisory Committee, which is the Government's independent adviser in these matters.

Mr. Meacher: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Lyell: I shall do so in a moment.

As I have said, no scheme is perfect, but it is against the six tests to which I have referred that any scheme should be judged.

The House will remember that we are discussing a scheme for exceptionally cold weather. It is based on a crude average of once in five years' coldness. It is not the basic means of support, which is the current levels of weekly benefits, including additions. These sums will be put into the basic scale rates and the special premiums in 1988.

The basic support—[Interruption.] The hon. Member for Workington made a thoughtful speech and I know that he will wish to listen to what I have to say. The basic support comes from weekly benefits, added to which are heating additions. As the House will recall, and as the hon. Member for Oldham West (Mr. Meacher) has rightly acknowledged, the heating additions have been a great deal more generous under this Government than they were under the previous Labour Government. They are up to £400 million per annum in money terms and £140 million more per annum in real terms, and these may be underestimates. It is against that background that I shall answer the questions that have been raised in the debate, but first I shall give way to the hon. Member for Oldham West.

Mr. Meacher: What is the figure within overall public expenditure that the Government have budgeted for the scheme for next winter?

Mr. Lyell: The hon. Gentleman will appreciate from his own experience that no one can forecast whether the coming winter is likely to be exceptionally severe. We shall find out in the next two months. The benefits are demand-led, and over recent years the amounts paid out have varied from nothing to quite small figures, up to about £12 million. The overall budgeting figures, which are demand-led, are well capable of taking any likely figure into account.

[Mr. Lyell]

I take up the remarks of the hon. Member for Workington. The House should remember that the scheme is based on a standard of coldness which is a crude average. One of the benefits of the scheme, as recognised by the Social Security Advisory Committee, is that it provides more help to the parts of the country that are the coldest. I realise that the charts show that the constituency of the hon. Member for Workington would receive help about once every five years. Other parts of the country that are not exceptionally cold—some city areas are much warmer than other areas—would receive help much less frequently. The tables show that some areas have received help for many weeks over recent years. One of the benefits of the scheme is that it helps areas that are especially cold.

I shall refer later and briefly to the comments made by the hon. Members for Ryedale (Mrs. Shields) and for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook). Most of the points made by the hon. Member for Oldham, West were rightly disposed of by the effective speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls), who put the hon. Gentleman on notice as to the weakness of his arguments. If I had longer, I should like to put him on notice rather more clearly still.

Mr. Corbyn rose——

Mr. Lyell: I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman because he has not been in the Chamber for very long and he has not participated in the debate, as is true of most Opposition Members.

The hon. Member for Ryedale suggested that the dangers of extremely cold weather should be publicised. That is a good point. Professor Keatings, to whom the hon. Lady referred, has said that old people can look after themselves if they stay indoors and do not expose themselves to cold weather more than is necessary.

The new arrangements will provide for a better system. There will be certainty, through the objective criteria, in deciding when an exceptionally cold period occurs. The way in which we are collecting and disseminating information will enable it to be known quickly when help is available. I commend the system to the House.

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 171, Noes 265.

Division No. 47] [6 pm

AYES

Abse, Leo
Adams, Allen (Paisley N)
Alton, David
Anderson, Donald
Archer, Rt Hon Peter
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack
Ashton, Joe
Atkinson, N. (Tottenham)
Barnett, Guy
Barron, Kevin
Beckett, Mrs Margaret
Bell, Stuart
Bennett, A. (Dent'n & Red'sh)
Bidwell, Sydney
Blair, Anthony
Boothroyd, Miss Betty
Boyes, Roland
Bray, Dr Jeremy
Brown, Gordon (D'f'mline E)
Brown, R. (N'c'tle-u-Tyne N)
Buchan, Norman
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim (Heyw'd & M)
Campbell-Savours, Dale
Canavan, Dennis
Carter-Jones, Lewis
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Thomas
Clay, Robert
Cleiland, David Gordon
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cook, Frank (Stockton North)
Cook, Robin F. (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Craigen, J. M.
Crowther, Stan
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Dalyell, Tam
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (L'lli)
Davis, Terry (B'ham, H'ge H'l)
Deakins, Eric
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Donald
Dobson, Frank
Dormand, Jack
Douglas, Dick
Dubs, Alfred
Duffy, A. E. P.
Eadie, Alex
Eastham, Ken
Evans, John (St. Helens N)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, T. (L'pool Broad Gn)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forrester, John
Foster, Derek
Fraser, J. (Norwood)
Freeson, Rt Hon Reginald
Garrett, W. E.
George, Bruce
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gould, Bryan
Hamilton, James (M'well N)
Hamilton, W. W. (Fife Central)
Harrison, Rt Hon Walter
Hart, Rt Hon Dame Judith
Heffer, Eric S.
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Home Robertson, John
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Howells, Geraint
Hoyle, Douglas
Hughes, Dr Mark (Durham)
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport East)
Hughes, Simon (Southwark)
Jenkins, Rt Hon Roy (Hillh'd)
John, Brynmor
Johnston, Sir Russell
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Kennedy, Charles
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leadbitter, Ted
Leighton, Ronald
Lewis, Ron (Carlisle)
Lewis, Terence (Worsley)
Litherland, Robert
Livsey, Richard
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Edward
McCartney, Hugh
McDonald, Dr Oonagh
McKay, Allen (Penistone)
McKelvey, William
MacKenzie, Rt Hon Gregor
Maclennan, Robert
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Robert
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Marek, Dr John
Martin, Michael
Mason, Rt Hon Roy
Maxton, John
Maynard, Miss Joan
Meacher, Michael
Michie, William
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Morris, Rt Hon A. (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J. (Aberavon)
Nellist, David
O'Brien, William
O'Neill, Martin
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Park, George
Parry, Robert
Patchett, Terry
Pavitt, Laurie
Pendry, Tom
Penhaligon, David
Pike, Peter
Powell, Raymond (Cgmore)
Prescott, John
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Raynsford, Nick
Redmond, Martin
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Ernest (Hackney N)
Robertson, George
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, J. W.
Ross, Ernest (Dundee W)
Ross, Stephen (Isle of Wight)
Rowlands, Ted
Sedgemore, Brian
Sheldon, Rt Hon R.
Shields, Mrs Elizabeth
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Ms Clare (Ladywood)
Short, Mrs R.(W'hampt'n NE)
Silkin, Rt Hon J.
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, C.(Isl'ton S & F'bury)
Smith, Rt Hon J. (M'ds E)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Stewart, Rt Hon D. (W Isles)
Straw, Jack
Thomas, Dafydd (Merioneth)
Thomas, Dr R. (Carmarthen)
Thompson, J. (Wansbeck)
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert
Weetch, Ken
Welsh, Michael
Wigley, Dafydd
Williams, Rt Hon A.
Wilson, Gordon
Winnick, David
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Sean Hughes and
Mr. Ron Davies.

NOES

Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Ancram, Michael
Arnold, Tom
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Rt Hon Sir H.
Atkins, Robert (South Ribble)
Atkinson, David (B'm'th E)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony

Banks, Robert (Harrogate)
Batiste, Spencer
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Benyon, William
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Biggs-Davison, Sir John
Blackburn, John
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Body, Sir Richard
Boscawen, Hon Robert
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A. (Brighton K'to'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Boyson, Dr Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Bright, Graham
Brinton, Tim
Brittan, Rt Hon Leon
Brown, M. (Brigg & Cl'thpes)
Bryan, Sir Paul
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nick
Bulmer, Esmond
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Rt Hon Sir Adam
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Cash, William
Chalker, Mrs Lynda
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Clark, Hon A. (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Dr Michael (Rochford)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Cockeram, Eric
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Simon
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Couchman, James
Cranborne, Viscount
Critchley, Julian
Crouch, David
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord J.
Durant, Tony
Dykes, Hugh
Edwards, Rt Hon N. (P'broke)
Evennett, David
Eyre, Sir Reginald
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Anthony
Fenner, Dame Peggy
Fletcher, Alexander
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Franks, Cecil
Fry, Peter
Galley, Roy
Gardiner, George (Reigate)
Garel-Jones, Tristan
Gilmour, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Glyn, Dr Alan
Grant, Sir Anthony
Greenway, Harry
Griffiths, Sir Eldon
Grylls, Michael
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hampson, Dr Keith
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, Kenneth
Harris, David
Haselhurst, Alan
Hawkins, C. (High Peak)
Hayes, J.
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Henderson, Barry
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hickmet, Richard
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hirst, Michael
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holland, Sir Philip (Gedling)
Holt, Richard
Howarth, Gerald (Cannock)
Howell, Ralph (Norfolk, N)
Hubbard-Miles, Peter
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunter, Andrew
Jackson, Robert
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert (Herts W)
Joseph, Rt Hon Sir Keith
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Kershaw, Sir Anthony
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom
Knight, Greg (Derby N)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawler, Geoffrey
Lawrence, Ivan
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lewis, Sir Kenneth (Stamf'd)
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Nicholas
McCurley, Mrs Anna
MacKay, Andrew (Berkshire)
MacKay, John (Argyll & Bute)
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (N'bury)
McNair-Wilson, P. (New F'st)
McQuarrie, Albert
Madel, David
Major, John
Malins, Humfrey
Malone, Gerald
Marlow, Antony
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Mather, Carol
Maude, Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Merchant, Piers
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Mills, Iain (Meriden)
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Monro, Sir Hector
Morrison, Hon C. (Devizes)
Morrison, Hon P. (Chester)
Murphy, Christopher
Neale, Gerrard
Needham, Richard
Nelson, Anthony
Nicholls, Patrick
Normanton, Tom
Norris, Steven
Onslow, Cranley
Oppenheim, Phillip
Osborn, Sir John
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Sir John (Harrow W)
Page, Richard (Herts SW)
Parkinson, Rt Hon Cecil
Patten, Christopher (Bath)
Patten, J. (Oxf W & Abgdn)
Pattie, Geoffrey
Pawsey, James
Porter, Barry
Powell, William (Corby)
Powley, John
Price, Sir David
Proctor, K. Harvey
Pym, Rt Hon Francis
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Rees, Rt Hon Peter (Dover)
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Robinson, Mark (N'port W)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rowe, Andrew
Sackville, Hon Thomas
Sainsbury, Hon Timothy
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Shersby, Michael
Silvester, Fred
Sims, Roger
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon John
Steen, Anthony
Stevens, Lewis (Nuneaton)
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stewart, Ian (Hertf'dshire N)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, John (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Temple-Morris, Peter
Terlezki, Stefan
Thompson, Donald (Calder V)
Thompson, Patrick (N'ich N)
Thorne, Neil (Ilford S)
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
van Straubenzee, Sir W.
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Waddington, David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Wall, Sir Patrick
Waller, Gary
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Warren, Kenneth
Watts, John
Wells, Bowen (Hertford)
Wheeler, John
Whitfield, John
Whitney, Raymond
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Winterton, Nicholas
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Michael Portillo and
Mr. David Lightbown.

Question accordingly negatived.

Social Security

6.11 pm

The Minister for Social Security and the Disabled (Mr. John Major): I beg to move,

That the draft Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): I remind the House that the Question on motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 and motion No. 8, the prayer on housing, if moved, will be put together at the conclusion of the debate. Therefore, it may be for the convenience of the House if the following motions are taken with motion No. 2:

That the draft Supplementary Benefit Up-rating (No. 2) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 28th November, be approved.

That the draft Family Income Supplements (Computation) (No. 2) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.

That the draft Statutory Sick Pay (Rate of Payment) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.

That the draft Social Security (Contributions, Up-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.

That the draft Social Security (Treasury Supplement to and Allocation of Contributions) (Re-rating) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.

That an Humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Housing Benefits Amendment (No. 5) Regulations 1986 (S.I., 1986, No. 2183), dated 11th December 1986, a copy of which was laid before this House on 11th December, be annulled.

Mr. Major: The House will know that the Social Security Act 1986 and the Social Security Act 1975 require the draft uprating and contributions re-rating orders to be accompanied by a report from the Government Actuary on the effects of our proposals on the national insurance fund. That report has been laid today.

These statutory instruments, together with the regulations against which the prayer is made, put into force the proposed uprating of social security benefits announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the House on 22 October. They will take effect from 6 April 1987 and will complete the process of transition to annual increases of benefit in April. In future, benefit changes will take place at the same time as other major financial changes, such as the changes in national insurance contribution rates also provided for here. I believe that this innovation will be generally welcomed. The instruments also provide for the changes in the statutory sick pay scheme which I announced on 6 November.

This is the first time—certainly in recent years—that it has been possible for the House to debate together both a benefit uprating and the changes in contributions which pay for more than half of all benefits. I hope that, if nothing else, debating these instruments together will remind those tempted to forget it that social security benefits, and their upratings, all have to be paid for by the country's working population. There is no fairy gold even for good causes. This uprating adds over £700 million, in addition to the £420 million extra provided in July, to the substantial sums already devoted to those who need support from our social security system. The total cost of the benefit system from the Consolidated Fund and the national insurance fund together will amount to a staggering £46 billion in 1987-88. This represents over 30 per cent. of public expenditure and it is an excellent discipline to consider together both acquisition and expenditure of this enormous sum.

I should like to remind hon. Members briefly of the main features of the proposed upratings. Most benefits, including retirement pension, widows' benefit and unemployment benefit, will rise by 2·1 per cent. to reflect the increase in prices between January and September 1986, the relevant period for this uprating. This means, for example, that a married couple's retirement pension rises from £61·95 to £63·25 and that for a single person from £38·70 to £39·50. Housing benefit needs allowances will rise by the same cash amount as the relevant contributory benefit, thus minimising administrative difficulties for local authorities. This is particularly important at a time when they are preparing for the introduction of the reformed housing benefit scheme in April 1988. Supplementary benefit scale rates are to be increased by 2 per cent.—the amount of increase in the retail prices index minus housing—which, as the House will know, is the normal index used for this benefit. Child benefit and family income supplement will both be increased in line with inflation to sustain our support for families with children.

This will be the third increase in social security benefits within 16 months. The House last debated an uprating as recently as June. The increase this time, which because of the transition to an April uprating date covers eight months only, cannot be directly compared with upratings over the usual 12-month period, or with annual figures of inflation. A truer perspective perhaps is to point out that pensioners, for example, have received increases of £5·95 for a married couple and £3·70 for a single person since November 1985. These are substantial and welcome rises and no less valuable for having come in three tranches. I stress this point to forestall the predictable observations that may litter the speeches of those hon. Members who may care to join us in the debate later.

I stress also that the uprating is in line with the rise in prices as measured by the retail prices index, which, as the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee continues to advise, is the best measurement available. The difference between these increases and the big cash increases given during the late 1970s is that inflation has now been dramatically reduced and smaller increases can now keep pace with the changing cost of living. Not only do benefits hold their value better between upratings but pensioners in particular will no longer see their savings destroyed by unrestrained inflation.

It is worth illustrating the relevance of that point. A pensioner who put his savings into a building society would have found that, between 1974 and 1979, their value had declined by as much as one third, even taking account of the interest received on the deposit. The same pensioner would find today that his savings are increasing in real value because of the reductions in inflation which have been achieved. This considerable achievement needs to be borne in mind when people sometimes criticise the levels of uprating, perhaps with something of a one-eyed stance.

The increases in this uprating are fully consistent with our undertaking to protect pensions and other long-term benefits against price rises. I make the point, too, because it is important, that over the past eight years there has been an increase of almost 1 million pensioners who deserve and will have our support in their retirement. We are determined to continue to maintain the purchasing power of their retirement pension, and I am pleased to reiterate that pledge.

By the time the increases take effect, we will have completed the move to an April timetable for upratings. Beneficiaries have been protected against inflation at each stage of the transition and from next year will see, I think, the advantage of this more sensible timing of increases. Apart from getting higher benefits at the time when other financial changes take place, no longer will pensioners, widows and disabled people find their tax codes readjusted in the middle of the year following their pension increase. As all hon. Members will know, for many that has been a cause of frustration, which, happily will be removed. Moreover, because the uprating coincides with the general increases in rent and rates in April, local authorities will also find that they need to assess a claimant's right to benefit only once a year instead of twice as in the past, thus reducing the burden on them. This is a welcome improvement, too, for local authorities and those who seek rent and rate rebates.

The changes in the uprating timetable are further evidence of the determination that we have shown in a variety of ways to reduce the undesirable complexity of the present social security system. Changes resulting from the Social Security Act 1986 are an important part of this policy, and the Statutory Sick Pay (Rate of Payment) Regulations 1986 that are before the House today continue this move towards greater simplicity.

There are at present three separate rates of benefit under the statutory sick pay scheme, but 85 per cent. of spells of sickness qualify for the top rate. Every indication is that that percentage continues to rise. The remaining 15 per cent. have to be divided between two lower rates. We have decided therefore to merge the middle and lower rates to produce a simple two-band system. We believe that that more logically reflects the current position as well as reducing the burden on employers who administer the scheme. I hope that hon. Members will agree that administratively that is a sensible improvement.

Mr. Frank Field (Birkenhead): I am sure that before the Minister finishes this part of his speech he will refer to the burden on claimants who will lose out. Has he had pressure from employers for this change, or has it been thought up by the Government?

Mr. Major: The hon. Gentleman will know that the Government are under repeated pressure from the large and small business lobby about the burdens on business. That is a matter of repeated pressure over the whole gamut of burdens that businesses feel have been placed on them by the Government. Undoubtedly within that the statutory sick pay scheme would have been one of the matters that employers had in mind.

The hon. Gentleman referred to the merging of the three rates and clearly has in mind the fact that the merging is effectively an abolition of the lower rate. He must bear in mind that the increase of the lower rate under the proposed abolition has a beneficial knock-through to statutory maternity pay. Many women will consider that a welcome change.

On the hon. Gentleman's specific point, those receiving the middle rate at the time of the change will, of course, be protected. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising that point. In future we will increase statutory sick pay levels in the uprating order, although a separate instrument is necessary on this occasion precisely because of the reduction in the number of rates from three to two.

As well as increasing housing benefits needs allowances, the Housing Benefits Amendment (No. 5) Regulations 1986 also provide for an increase in the rent taper, by which benefit is reduced for those with incomes above the needs allowance level, from 29 per cent. to 33 per cent. Housing benefit now goes to one household in three in Britain, at an anticipated cost of some £5 billion this year. We have made it perfectly clear beyond doubt in the past that this level of spending, and the rate at which it is accelerating, is difficult to sustain. What we have sought to do by increasing the taper in this fashion is to restrain expenditure without causing hardship to those less well off who rely on housing benefit.

These changes will not, therefore, affect anyone who is on supplementary benefit or whose income is slightly above that level. Indeed, no pensioners with an income up to £10 above supplementary benefit level will lose benefit and the average loss for this group will be only about 47p. The expected saving from this change is about £28 million in a full year. In addition, the changed method of uprating the needs allowances, to which I referred earlier, means that spending will be some £40 million less than it would have been. Moreover, the Alice-in-Wonderland nature of this benefit is such that most people on housing benefit, including pensioners, will actually experience cash increases next April because rent and rate increases will trigger higher benefit payments.

In view of the demands for increased expenditure on benefits which I anticipate hearing about later from the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), I should like to remind the House of a point of principle upon which I touched earlier—that of the balance which must always be struck between providing for those who need our help and support—the elderly, the disabled, lower-income families with children—and the need to provide for a healthy economy which allows us to accept and meet those commitments. Our record shows that we have given serious attention to the needs of social security beneficiaries and have provided for substantial improvements to the system through which help is made available to them. At the same time, we have sought to ensure that a stable and expanding economy which benefits everyone, perhaps especially those beneficiaries, continues to be encouraged.

This brings me naturally to the second main element in these instruments — the means by which national insurance benefits such as pensions, unemployment benefit, invalidity benefit and others are actually financed. The Government's proposals for national insurance contributions were announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 6 November. I hope that the House will acknowledge the Government's considerable achievement in keeping the rate of class 1 contributions unchanged for the fourth successive year. I cannot recall when that previously happened. As required by statute, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions will be £39 per week from next April. As the House will know, this is linked to the basic retirement pension rate rounded down to the nearest pound. The upper earnings limit, which may be between 6½ and 7½ times the basic retirement pension, will be £295 per week from next April, nearly 7½ times the basic pension level.

[Mr. Major]

Right hon. and hon. Members may well have noted that the regulations bringing these proposals into effect have not yet been laid. The fact is that they cannot be until the draft benefits uprating order has been approved by Parliament because of the statutory link between the lower and upper earnings limits and the basic retirement pension. The regulations implementing the earnings limits will be laid as soon as Parliament has approved the benefits uprating order.

With reference to the instruments before us today, I want first to comment on the proposals contained in the draft Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986. The House will recall that in 1985, in order to help lower-paid workers and to reduce employment costs, we introduced graduated class 1 contribution rates, which came into effect in October 1985. The reduced contribution rates change significantly the impact of national insurance contributions on those receiving lower earnings, but did not in any way affect their benefit entitlement. The net annual cost of this change, reflected in lower receipts from national insurance contributions, is expected to be £500 million in the current year, which is its first full year of operation.

We propose to maintain the value of the earnings brackets at which lower contribution rates are paid by uprating their earnings limits. The lowest earnings bracket, on which contributions will be payable at the 5 per cent. rate, will run from £39—the new lower earnings limit—to £64·99 per week. The 7 per cent. bracket will run from £65 to £99·99 per week, and the 9 per cent. bracket will start from £100 per week and end at £149·99 per week for employers, and £295 per week for employees. Employers will pay contributions at the 10·45 per cent. rate where a person's earnings are at or above £150 per week. The proposed increases in the earnings brackets are greater than strict inflation indexing would have required.

Our proposals for class 1 contributions will thus further ease the contributions burden of some lower paid workers and their employers, where they are affected by the changed earnings brackets. Most other employed earners, and their employers, will be affected only slightly. People earning £295 per week or more will have to pay a maximum of 90p per week extra, if they are not contracted out from the state earnings-related pension scheme.

These perhaps are the proposals of most interest to most workers, but a growing number are self-employed and I wish to mention specifically our proposals for them. We attach great importance to the self-employed and their contribution to the economy. We welcome their growth in numbers and we are delighted that our steps to encourage this have been successful — particularly our earlier changes to their national insurance liability. The House will be aware that self-employed people pay their national insurance contributions in two parts—the flat rate class 2 contribution and the profits-related class 4 contributions. We do not propose to change the class 4 rate, which will remain at 6·3 per cent. from next April. The profits limits for class 4 contributions rise automatically each year broadly in line with the earnings limits for class 1 contributions. The annual profits limits proposed for 1987-88 are £4,590 and £15,340 respectively. The upper profits limit is exactly 52 times the proposed class 1 upper earnings limit.

We also propose to continue the abatement to the self-employed class 2 rate, which was introduced in 1985. Accordingly, we propose to increase the class 2 contribution rate by only 10p to £3·85 per week from next April. The small earnings exception from class 2 will also rise automatically by £50 to £2,125. The effects of our proposals are that class 2 contributors will pay £5·20 per year extra in 1987-88. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the proposed upper profits limit to £15,340, class 4 contributions will be £23·94 per year higher in 1987-88.

The proposed voluntary class 3 rate, which protects those who have breaks in their contributions record—for example, students or those who have worked abroad, —is being set at 10p less than the class 2 rate—that is, a rate of £3·75 per week from next April. The difference between the class 2 and class 3 rates, therefore, has been kept unchanged.

I mentioned earlier that national insurance contributions pay for only a proportion of benefits. The changing balance between the cost of contributory benefit and the cost of non-contributory and income-related benefit leads to the proposals in the Social Security (Treasury Supplement to and Allocation of Contributions) (Re-rating) Order, which is before the House. We propose to reduce the Treasury supplement to the national insurance fund by two percentage points to 7 per cent. from April 1987. Social security expenditure is financed by contributors, including employers, and by taxpayers who pay for non-contributory benefits, whether income related or not.

It is relevant that between 1981-82 and the current year, expenditure on contributory benefits as a share of total social security expenditure, has fallen from 60 per cent. to 54 per cent. for a variety of reasons. By contrast, the share of social security expenditure devoted to income-related benefits has increased from 19 per cent. to 26 per cent. over the same period. We have to strike a balance between revenue from taxation and contributions, and we decided that the taxpayer should pay less to the national insurance fund, in recognition specifically of the increasing costs of non-contributory benefit expenditure which are met wholly by taxpayers.

This draft order also increases the proportion of contributions which are allocated to meeting the costs of the National Health Service. Many people believe, mistakenly, that the whole cost of the NHS is met by contributions. That is far from true, but because of the great increases in expenditure on the NHS over recent years, we think it is right that those who pay national insurance contributions should meet a slightly higher percentage of the cost than at present. In 1987-88, expenditure on the NHS in Great Britain is planned to rise by no less than £1·1 billion to reach a total of £19·9 billion. So much for cuts, one might say, but I have no wish to be combative this evening. Our proposals for the employment protection allocation enable us to achieve a higher contribution allocation to the NHS to meet this extra cost without increasing overall contribution rates. Therefore, we propose to increase from April 1987 the employees' NHS allocation to 0·85 per cent. and the employers' NHS allocation to 0·7 per cent. of earnings, in respect of which class 1 contributions are paid. Corresponding changes in the NHS allocation are proposed for the other classes of contributions.

I wish to turn briefly to the employment protection allocation itself. The House will be aware that a small allocation is paid to the redundancy fund, and a still smaller allocation is paid, from employers' contributions only, to the maternity pay fund. Since August 1986 the redundancy rebate has ceased to be paid from the redundancy fund to employers with more than nine employees. The level of redundancy rebates had already fallen to levels lower than in the early 1980s. As a result, there are lower demands on the resources of the redundancy fund. In addition, the introduction of statutory maternity pay has led to the maternity pay fund being wound up from April 1987. We therefore propose to abolish the allocation of employers contributions to the maternity pay fund, and to cut the allocation that is paid to the redundancy fund.

As I mentioned earlier, a report by the Government Actuary on our proposals has been laid before the House. Total income received by the national insurance fund is estimated to be £26·3 billion in 1987-88 and total expenditure is estimated to be £25·6 billion, giving an expected surplus of £742 million for the year. At this stage, about four months before the start of the financial year and about 16 months before its end, it is difficult to be certain that the estimated surplus will be realised. The balance in the national insurance fund at the end of the next financial year is expected to be £6,359 million, equivalent to nearly 13¼ weeks benefit expenditure. We regard this balance at this stage as a prudent objective which exceeds the Government Actuary's minimum working balance of one sixth of the year's estimated benefit expenditure.

In one way or another these orders will affect the lives of almost everyone and, although they are technical, they deserve serious attention. However, I want to make again the point that social security benefits must be met by tax and national insurance payers and cannot be paid for in magic gold. Their costs, and the costs of increases in them, always come out of the pockets of those in work, their employers and national insurance contribution payers. Many people are both beneficiaries and contributors. We believe that the instruments before the house tonight strike a fair and reasonable balance between protecting the beneficiaries against the rise in the cost of living and protecting the workers and employers who generate the resources needed, not only for contributions, but also for the tax revenue which finances the rest of the social security programme.

Therefore, I invite the House to endorse these motions and to reject the prayer in the name of the Opposition against the Housing Benefits Amendment (No. 5) Regulations.

6.36 pm

Mrs. Margaret Beckett (Derby, South): Since this is the time when we are all urged to think of those less fortunate than ourselves, it is particularly appropriate that this is when we debate this year's package of what the Government decide can be spared for the poorest members of our community.

Three characteristics of the package, sadly, are shared with packages proposed in previous years. First, the package will ensure a continuation of the steady decline in the standard of living of those unable to work compared with those in work, as has happened every year since 1979. Secondly, the package is full of little titbits of ingenuity —little changes here and there which all happen to produce savings for the Government. They produce a few tens of millions here and there by picking away, bit by bit, at incomes which are already too low. Thirdly, the package shows how shamelessly the Government shift their ground, denying now what they stalwartly affirmed a few months ago because any old justification will do and will be supported by Tory Members, so long as it saves public expenditure.

Two days ago the Government told us how worried they were about the low paid, but in these regulations 400,000 of the low paid will lose when the middle rate of statutory sick pay is abolished at a saving of £19 million. As the Minister said in a written answer in column 602 of Hansard on 6 November, it "overcomplicates the administration" of statutory sick pay to have the middle rate. We were surprised to hear that because last year when the Government decided to extend statutory sick pay to cover illnesses of 28 rather than eight weeks, the Minister assured us that the scheme was working superbly. He said:

> "There is growing evidence . . . that the scheme is working in general very well . . . there is substantial evidence that it is working satisfactorily." — [Official Report, Standing Committee E, 17 and 22 January 1985; c. 254-270.]

The Secretary of State gave similar assurances on the Floor of the House.

On 24 November 1986 I asked the Under-Secretary of State how many representations he had had about the administrative difficulties which have been given as a reason for the change that the Government are making this evening. He answered that there had been no complaints specifically about the structure of the re-rating, although some employers' representatives have mentioned them when pressing generally for a simplification of the scheme. Once simplification was mentioned the Government, always anxious to please, found a way not only of simplifying the scheme, but of saving money at the same time. That is what always seems to happen when the Government simplify matters.

An even more blatant piece of chicanery involves the housing benefit changes. Once again, the Government have increased the rate at which benefit is lost. As a result of that change alone, they have saved £28 million at the expense of nearly a million households — 620,000 of them pensioner households, of whom 60,000 will lose all entitlement—and 120,000 of them families with children, of whom 20,000 will lose all entitlement to benefit.

In addition, the Government are saving £23 million on rents and £17 million on rates by increasing the housing benefit needs allowances by less than the rate of inflation and by using a formula which appears to break an undertaking given by the Minister. Again, it is simplicity that is called in aid.

At the last uprating, the Secretary of State announced that the needs allowance would be increased, not by the usual formula but by linking it to the then cash increase in pensions. It was pointed out that this would mean a smaller increase in the allowances but the Minister wrote to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford) saying that the actual rate of increase would be taken into account at this uprating. Instead, once again, the link is with the cash increase in the pensions—which is not exactly generous at 80p for a single pensioner—and as a result of this change some 3·5 million households will be losers.

[Mrs. Margaret Beckett]

On 6 November I asked the Under-Secretary to estimate the loss of benefit for pensioner households, single person households, couples and couples with children. Although he told me that the reply would be made available as soon as possible, so far that has not proved to be the case. I should be grateful, if those figures are available, if he would give them to the House tonight. The total savings from the housing benefit package are some £68 million.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Is my hon. Friend aware that there are many problems for households in receipt of housing benefits when the Department of Health and Social Security is inefficient in passing on the payments to the local authorities concerned? Tenants are often accused of being in rent arrears when that is not the case.

Mrs. Beckett: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. There are difficulties caused at both ends of the chain. In a case concerning a constituent of mine, the DHSS did notify the local authority of changes in the housing benefit allowances but no action was taken for some weeks. Arrears of some £90 built up through no fault of my constituent.

At the last uprating, housing benefit needs allowances were uprated, as I mentioned, in line with cash pension increases. The same principle was used for supplementary benefit increases. By that change the Government made a saving on supplementary benefit of £11 million in a full year. This time, again for simplicity and despite the contradiction of the Minister's statement, the same approach has been used as last year for housing benefit. The Government have also returned to the previous formula for supplementary benefit, which, surprise surprise, gives a lower increase than would have been paid if, again, housing benefit and supplementary benefit had been treated alike. When the Minister replies, perhaps he will tell us what the saving will be this time.

In our earlier debate this evening, a great deal was said about the Government's record on heating allowances. My hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) quite properly pointed out that what pensioners might gain on the swings of heating allowances they have lost tenfold on the roundabouts of lower pensions.

In this year's uprating, heating allowances are not being touched because the Government say that fuel prices are stable. However, today's heating allowances reflect the fuel prices of May 1985 to January 1986 — they are already nearly a year out of date. They will thus be payable at current levels until April 1988, by which time they will be over two years out of date. We seek an assurance from the Under-Secretary that if there is a substantial movement of fuel prices over that period — perhaps because the Government put a special tax on fuel, they have done it twice before — these allowances will be reviewed.

With regard to the general level of increases to be applied, we welcome, of course, the 15p increase in child benefit. That does not make good the cuts that the Government made in 1985, for which the increase would have to be 50p. Since it is generally accepted that child benefit is the best way of helping family poverty it is especially worrying that there are rumours of a further potential threat to the strength of this means of support. It is because child benefit is a universal benefit that it is of such value. It is now suggested that, when the universal maternity grant is abolished, mothers will have to make a special application for child benefit.

I have written to the Minister to ask for an assurance that new ways will be found of issuing forms automatically, perhaps through the general practitioner or a hospital maternity unit. I would welcome that reassurance tonight. Child benefit is now worth £2·70 less for the second and subsequent children than the equivalent allowances were in 1955. That is a sad commentary on the current state of affairs, when some 4 million children now live in families in poverty.

Whatever the questions and criticisms we raise about the details of particular benefit increases, our major concern is that, once again, the standard of living of those dependent on pensions and benefits is falling compared to those in work. In his remarks, the Minister said—I do not recall the exact phrase—that the Government had given assurances that they would protect the value of pensions and that those assurances hve been maintained. That is not the assurance that the Government gave—it is an assurance which has been more convenient for the Government to make in recent years. The assurance given when the link between pensions and earnings was broken was that

"pensioners and other long term beneficiaries can confidently look forward to sharing in the increased standards of living in the country as a whole". — [Official Report, 13 June 1979; Vol. 968, c. 439.]

That has not happened in any year since 1979. In this year alone the gap is widening by £1 for a single pensioner and £2 for a married couple. That is on top of the gap that has already been established.

In 1978 the pension was worth 20·4 per cent. of average male earnings. In 1986 it is estimated to have fallen to 18·4 per cent. In 1978 supplementary benefit for a couple with two children aged four and six was 46·9 per cent. of average net incomes. In 1986 it is estimated to be 43·1 per cent. This year alone, supplementary benefit would have to rise by over £2 for such a family to match the rise in earnings. If earnings continue to rise so much faster than prices, as they are doing this year, the basic state pension will steadily fall over the next 10 to 20 years until it falls to half of what it would be if it were linked to earnings. That is a steady and accelerating increase in pensioner poverty.

The Minister referred to the balance in the way in which money is raised for these benefits between taxes and through national insurance contributions. The Minister made an extraordinary point when he said that the level of contributory benefits paid for from the fund was falling as a proportion of those pensions and benefits raised. We do not disagree, as that is unquestionably accurate. However, as the level of contributory benefits is falling, the level of income to pay for those benefits raised from contributions rises. In other words, the benefits are being paid for, disproportionately, by contributors although their share of benefits is falling. How the Minister makes that a justification for the change the Government are making is frankly beyond me, as it seems to point in exactly the opposite direction.

The money that is raised to pay for pensions and benefits will continue to be raised, disproportionately, from the less well off. The Minister referred to beneficial changes made to national insurance contributions and we do not dispute the figures he gave. Such contributions remain a heavier burden on the poor than the rich. The further reduction in the contribution to pensions and benefits made from general taxation, but cutting the Treasury supplements — now standing at 7 per cent. compared to the 18 per cent. at which it stood in 1979 — means that in the future, as in the past, the cost of pensions and benefits will fall more and more heavily on the poor rather than on the rich.

Today, the Child Poverty Action Group published a document called "Christmas on the Breadline". It quotes the comments of those striving to give their children a decent Christmas on the inadequate level of benefits that these upratings perpetuate. It draws a contrast, among others, to the availability at Harrods of some rather bizarre items such as bridal outfits for one's dog at only £100 and a mere £20 for a track suit for a cat, with a quotation from a letter of a single mother who wrote to the Child Poverty Action Group following publicity in the Daily Star. It was one of many touching and alarming quotations but a simple one. It reads:

"For us it is a worry just to pay for food and heating over the holidays."

There is no mention there of anything which makes Christmas special.

As unemployment continues to rise and as the standard of living of the unemployed, pensioners, the sick and the disabled continues to fall, as it will under these upratings, exhortations about the spirit of Christmas ring ever more hollow in our ears.

6.49 pm

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams (Kensington): The hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) made a good point when she referred to Christmas. It is right that the House should bear in mind what my hon. Friend the Minister said when he opened the debate — many millions of people are affected by what the House is proposing to do by passing these orders.

This is not just a matter of benefits for a fringe element in the population — it affects many millions of people. At Christmas time I hope that we will remember that, because we have not yet got our system for the redistribution of income right, our society is divided into those in work and those in need. The very large number of people who, in one way or another, are dependent on means-tested benefits now constitute about one quarter of our population.

I hope that the remaining three quarters of the population who are able to enjoy their Christmas with the rising living standards of the nation as a whole will not be unmindful of the needs of the one quarter of the population whose income has to be supplemented by some means or another because their own resources are not enough.

It is right that the House should take some time to look at what is happening in these orders, not just because millions of people are affected but also because very large sums of money are involved. In general, I think that we can congratulate ourselves that we are living in a civilised society which provides a basic income guarantee.

Speaking broadly, we can say that nobody has to drop into total destitution in Britain today. I am one of the hon. Members who are old enough to remember what the distressed areas, as they were called in those days, were like before the war, because I was brought up in Glamorgan. I remember very well the look of the streets, the look of the shops and the look of the people where there had been long-term unemployment and people were living on very small incomes with very little shred of hope that they would be able to get back into work and recreate the family circumstances which they had enjoyed at the height of the incomes that they earned when coal was at its best.

In Britain today we do not see the sort of harrowing scenes which were commonplace in large parts of the country before the war. So much has been achieved that we can be proud of and I am not entirely a critic of what the present Government are doing because I think the Minister is right to point out that we are raising benefits — national insurance benefits and supplementary benefits — at a rate which is faster than the rise in the cost of living. So, to some extent, we are taking with us the people in this unhappy subculture — people who are not able to rely on their own resources.

There is, as the Child Poverty Action Group has pointed out, a widening gap between those in work and those in need. I quote the figures that it has given to hon. Members in its briefing. I must say that I would like to pay tribute to the quality of the briefings that we get from the Child Poverty Action Group, which get better and better and are really quite important contributions to our thinking on these subjects. It points out that there is a widening gap for people on supplementary benefit. A couple with two young children in 1978 had 46 per cent. of the average wage. Now, in 1986, as it calculates, they get only 43 per cent. Matters are not improving where the building of one nation is concerned.

I have very often drawn attention to the fact that we are still in a muddle as to the reasons why we pay benefits to people whose income we wish to support. We have never clarified our thinking in this House on the grounds of entitlement and I think it really is worth going over this ground briefly again.

We have one system of universal benefits of which the principal example is child benefit — the only benefit of which is that there is virtually 100 per cent. take-up. Then we have the national insurance system which has slowly evolved during the 20th century and has many merits because people are able to draw their benefits without feeling that they are insulting their self-respect by doing so. National insurance provides pensions, unemployment benefit, invalidity and certain other benefits which people are not ashamed to draw. National insurance benefits, unfortunately, are not enough to cater for the needs of very many people and therefore we have to introduce a casework system based on proof of need — what we used to call the means test.

Mr. Corbyn: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that the growth in the number of supplementary benefit claims during the past 20 years is indicative of the absurdly low level of basic benefit entitlement and that the real problem is that poverty has increased despite there being a social security system because the benefit levels are inadequate to solve the problems of poverty?

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: The hon. Gentleman has just drawn attention to a point that I was coming to and I think it shows that there is an identity of thinking among students of this subject on both sides of the House.

Mr. Major: I suspect that what the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) has in mind is an interpretation of the low income figures which have featured from time to time during the past few months. Such is the weird manner in which those figures are constructed that, whenever the Government increase the real purchasing power of supplementary benefit, more people become entitled to it and the figures grow. It is an inaccurate and malicious interpretation of people who are in severe difficulty. I hope that my hon. Friend will not be tempted into agreeing with what I suspect underlay the hon. Gentleman's intervention.

[Mr. Major]

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: I may have misunderstood what the hon. Gentleman said, so it may be better to make my own points in my own way.

We have three grounds of entitlement — universal benefits, national insurance benefits and benefits based on casework and proof of need. In my view, the experiment with relying increasingly on casework in order to make certain that we do provide a basic income guarantee has failed. Selectivity has failed for many reasons and I should like to come to them briefly if time allows.

The big social developments, which are irreversible and which have taken place in the 20th century are the coming of universal suffrage, which means that we are no longer prepared to accept that our society is divided into two classes of people, and, of course, female emancipation.

I believe that, within the time span that we can contemplate, these major 20th-century changes are irreversible but we have not adapted our benefit systems to accord with those developments. We are still operating a redistribution of income in such a way that it does not take note of the fact that Britain has to be a united and equal society and it has to be a society in which women are treated on the same footing as men and are not left often in the condition in which they were in the middle ages.

Another reason why I am saying selectivity has failed is not only because it is out of tune with modern thinking, but because it is totally out of tune with the thinking of the Government. The Government quite rightly place emphasis on incentives to work and the value of thrift and the importance of saving and self-reliance. Well, we now have 14 million people in this country at any one time who are dependent on one form or other of means-tested benefit. That is, of course, taking into account people who need to rely on housing income support. But even if we eliminated that number, we have got, I believe, about 8 million people who are reliant on supplementary benefit.

Those are people who know by instinct, even if they have not actually made the calculations, that there is not too much point in having savings because if one has savings, when one falls into need, one has to run them down before one is entitled to benefit; and there is not too much point in working because, for all too many of them, the sort of work which is available yields only about the same income after they have paid for their travelling expenses and their clothing and the rest as they can get if they remain out of work and simply rely on means-tested benefit.

We have about 14 million people on the large calculation and at least 8 million on the minor calculation, if we are dealing only with supplementary benefit. People who know that what the Government are preaching, and which it is right that the Government should preach, does not somehow apply to them. I urge my right hon. and hon. Friends who are responsible for the various aspects of the redistribution of income, please to think again before bringing to the House once more upratings of the existing system which do not introduce some completely new elements.

If time allows, Mr. Speaker, I am hoping to deal briefly with ways in which I recommend that we should reduce the numbers drastically of people who are reliant on supplementary benefit. It is not enough to aim to reduce the figures by——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I call the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) to move the Adjournment motion, perhaps I should make it clear that the business postponed as a result of the debate under Standing Order No. 20 may be resumed and continued for a period equal to the amount of the time lost. That is, of course, if the House does not agree to the right hon. Gentleman's motion.

It being Seven o'clock, and leave having been given to move the Adjournment of the House under Standing Order No. 20 (Adjournment on specific and important matter that should have urgent consideration), further Proceeding stood postponed.

Airborne Early Warning System

7 pm

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): I beg to move, That this House do now adjourn.

Leave having been given this day under Standing Order No. 20 to discuss:

the need for an independent and urgent inquiry into the purchase of a new airborne early warning system for the Royal Air Force.

Several questions arise out of the statement of the Secretary of State for Defence. It was a long and detailed statement and I may come to it in my speech. However, I have no doubt that the Secretary of State for Defence or the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement will attempt to deal with it in their respective speeches.

Most hon. Members including the Secretary of State would agree on at least one thing—that decisions on defence procurement are seldom easy. They are seldom easy, obviously, because there are so many considerations that must be taken into account. Those considerations often appear to be in conflict with each other. First, there are the military considerations, then the industrial considerations and then the financial consequences for public finance and public expenditure.

The industrial considerations cannot and should not be separated from the defence considerations. A country's ability to defend itself and, indeed, to wage war if necessary in its own defence, is invariably and obviously bound up with its defence industries and industrial base. A country that does not have a strong industrial and technological base cannot, in the modern world, wage war for very long. Recently there have been many examples of countries with strong industrial bases being able to wage war against seemingly larger and more powerful countries. We won the last war partly because of the strength at that time of our industry and, of course, of our technical expertise and innovation.

I agree with the Prime Minister that defence interests are paramount, but defence interests include military and industrial interests. It is no coincidence that President Eisenhower spoke of the military-industrial complex, because without an industry and without that base it would not be possible to provide the wherewithal to wage war and to defend one's country.

No other major nation in the West would have taken the decision that this Government have taken today. I do not believe that the French, the Germans, and certainly not the Americans, would have given the sort of kick in the teeth to their own industry which this Government have done. It is no good the Secretary of State or Conservative Members saying, "Well, it is all right, you know. There is a sub-contract here for Plessey and a bit there for Racal, and Ferranti comes in with another sub-contract." That does not show an understanding of modern defence procurement. Sub-contracts are all right but the main objective should be to secure the prime system and to ensure that one's industry can compete and carry out the prime system. If we merely produce components under sub-contracts, we shall lose the expertise to carry out the prime system which we need to maintain our base and to remain a viable industrial nation.

I said that these decisions are never easy. Perhaps I should have qualified that remark by saying that they are never easy if they are considered and looked at rationally and objectively. They are, of course, much easier if the person who is taking them is driven by some sort of simple absolutism that is nurtured by half-baked economic theories, personal spleen and a besotted adoration, sometimes, of all things American.

The Government have not considered this problem objectively and rationally. The Secretary of State said in his statement that the decision was a matter of judgment. I am sorry to tell him that we do not have confidence in the Government's judgment on this matter or in their judgment on matters of defence procurement. That is why we say that there should be a second opinion on, and an independent inquiry into, the technical matters involved.

Mr. Robert Atkins (South Ribble): I am exceedingly grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for giving way. Will he comment on remarks attributed to the chief Royal Air Force officer responsible for this project, who was reported in The Times on Monday as saying, with the blessing of the Chief of the Air Staff:

"I simply cannot accept these allegations" that there had been some sort of bias in the evaluation.

"There has been the most thorough, far-reaching evaluation of the competing proposals . . . over the last six months.

The suggestion that the assessment is a biased RAF exercise impugns the integrity not only of the RAF but also of all those individuals involved in this difficult task."

Does the right hon. Gentleman accept that?

Mr. Davies: The gentleman concerned is perfectly entitled to express his view. During the past two or three weeks many things have been said in the newpapers on this matter. However, we do not trust the Government's judgment on defence procurement, or on the question of protecting British industry and British technology in general, because their record is not good. It is unnecessary to have a long memory——

Mr. Gerald Howarth (Cannock and Burntwood): The right hon. Gentleman suggests that the judgment of the Labour party might be better than the judgment of the Conservative party. If the Labour Government's judgment was so wonderful why was the TSR2 cancelled in favour of the F111, which was then also cancelled? Perhaps he will tell the House about their surfeit of judgment in that regard.

Mr. Davies: We did not order a foreign aircraft.

Let us look briefly at the Government's record on procurement during the past three or four years. It is not necessary to have a long memory to remember what happened the last time the Government became involved in defence procurement. About a year ago there was the question of the purchase of Westland or of a share in it. Perhaps I should remind Conservative Members what happened — [Interruption.] We are discussing an important matter of procurement. I am trying to show that the Government's judgment is not particularly good on these matters. What happened? Two Secretaries of State resigned. The Prime Minister was so determined that shareholder power should overrule the national interest and that the Americans should control Westland that she was prepared to subvert many of the conventions of the constitution to get her way. She got herself into such a pickle that she had to call upon Sir Robert Armstrong —that well known linguistic gymnast—to rescue her from her difficulties.

Mr. Robert Atkins: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Davies: The Secretary of State said that it was a matter of judgment, and I am trying to show that the Government's judgment in these matters has not been very good. Let us see how good the Government's judgment has been in respect of defence procurement and the royal ordnance factories. We all know what has happened to them during the past year. Let us see what has happened to the royal dockyards following the hare-brained scheme proposed by the former Secretary of State for Defence, the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine). They are being decimated and destroyed by the Government's procurement policy.

Let us look at the general policy of competition within the Department. If the Government continue with some of their competition policies, our defence industrial base will soon go the same way as our civilian manufacturing base has gone. If Conservative Members do not realise that, they should start to think about it. To some extent, our defence industries have always been protected. They have been protected by Governments of both parties in two ways. First, they have been protected by a irtual block on imports, with certain exceptions. That was one form of protection, although it was not an exact import control. Secondly, our defence industries have been protected to some extent over price in order to enable them to carry on. However, the Government are taking that protection away, and opening the industry up to competition from other countries that would never allow us to compete in the way that they compete here. That is what is happening, and if it continues there will be a substantial diminution in our defence industrial base.

Sir Antony Buck (Colchester, North): If what the right hon. Gentleman has just said is true, is it not remarkable that we have managed to export 113 Harriers to the United States?

Mr. Davies: There is obviously a two-way trade, but the danger is that our defence industrial base will be destroyed as a result of the Government's policies.

Let us briefly look at the record on the civilian manufacturing side. Not long ago, the Prime Minister wanted to sell off our last remaining motor manufacturer to the Americans as well as Land-Rover, but she was stopped by opposition from Labour Members and by many other hon. Members. Again, that shows that the Government do not have a very good record on judgment in these matters.

Mr. Michael Heseltine (Henley): How does the right hon. Gentleman square his suggestion that we do not support Britain's defence industrial base with the fact that 95 per cent. of procurement is bought through British industry or collaborative projects?

Mr. Davies: That used to be the case, but there is a great danger that that percentage will reduce rapidly as a result of the Secretary of State's policies. Given the mess that the right hon. Member for Henley made of the royal dockyards and the royal ordnance factories, he should be the last person to stand up and say anything.

As the Secretary of State said in his statement, the latest instalment in the long Nimrod saga commenced in March 1986, when the Ministry of Defence announced an open competition for an early warning system for the RAF. As the House well knows, three American companies — Boeing, Lockheed and Grumman — entered the competition, as did GEC. After the preliminary examinations, Lockheed and Grumman dropped out because I understand that their systems were not considered suitable. Thus, the two companies left, GEC and Boeing, were presumably thought to be suitable to go into the final round of the competition.

I think it is fair to say that the competition at least spurred GEC into action. I understand that during the next few months several improvements were made to its system. The transmitter was improved, as was the range and the overland capability. The receiver capacity was enhanced to prevent overloading, the tracking programme was improved, and the central computer was made to work three times as fast. No doubt there were other improvements as well, which were carried out in the fairly short period between March and the competition's final stages.

Indeed, the position had improved sufficiently for the editor of Flight International—a respectable publication that is well thought of—to write towards the end of the year:

"The Royal Air Force choice must be for quality. It is becoming evident that the GEC equipment is performing almost impeccably, and is at least equal to the Westinghouse equivalent in the E-3A, if not some years in advance of it."

Confidence in the system was enhanced when Lockheed decided that it would insert the system into its aircraft in order to try to sell the system worldwide. Again, I should have thought that Lockheed would not have done that unless it was satisfied that the system worked. We are talking about an American company that is a very close competitor of Boeing. Hon. Members may say that that is not enough for them, and that they are not prepared to take Lockheed's view, the view expressed by the editor of Flight International, and so on. In that case, perhaps they will take it from the horse's mouth, from the Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Robert Atkins: What about Jane's "All the World's Aircraft"?

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): Shut up and listen. You might learn something.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This debate is of great interest and I ask the House to listen quietly to what the Opposition spokesman has to say.

Mr. Davies: On 5 December, two weeks ago, the Secretary of State made a clear statement. He has been challenged about it in the House and he has not denied it, and so I shall repeat it tonight. Quite gratuitously, when asked, he said that "both systems work." He need not have said anything. He did not even qualify that. He went on to qualify the position in terms of cost, but there was no qualification of technical matters. He did not say that in one of those fireside chats that he gives on Radio Ayr, such as the one that he gave before the bombing of Libya. This was prime time stuff, on "News At Ten". He clearly said that the two systems work. I am not sure what the Secretary of State said this afternoon. I think that he said that they did not work. By implication, his statement shows that the two systems — [HON. MEMBERS: "No!"] The Secretary of State is perfectly capable of answering for himself. I can only repeat what he said.

Mr. Jonathan Sayeed (Bristol, East): Does not my right hon. Friend's earlier statement show that he was bending over backwards to be fair to GEC? Surely the purpose of airborne early warning is to give a better warning than ground radar pictures can do. As the GEC Nimrod gave a worse picture, would it not be better to buy an aircraft that gives a better picture?

Mr. Davies: All I know is that on 5 December, the Secretary of State bent one way, and today he has bent another. Perhaps he will tell us how he squares that statement with what has been said today. Within 48 hours of the Secretary of State's statement on television, there was a barrage of propaganda in the press rubbishing GEC and Nimrod. The two stories from the Sunday newspapers that I shall quote were probably written within 24 hours. I shall quote stories from The Observer and The Sunday Times of 7 December, stories written on Saturday afternoon. The story in The Observer was written by Adam Raphael and Victor Smart. It said, under the headline:

"Cabinet gets set to ditch Nimrod.

The Cabinet's defence committee is expected to decide this week between the rival bids . . . But with Mrs. Thatcher firmly in the Boeing camp" the Government are likely to go for the AWACS system. James Adams, the defence correspondence of The Sunday Times said:

"The project is three years late, more than £600 million has been spent . . . George Younger, the defence secretary, received the report from the equipment policy committee on Friday and is studying it over the weekend."

He had not studied it on the Friday, when he went on television.

We need to be told how the Secretary of State squares his statement that both systems work with the leaks that came from his Department. They could not have come from anywhere else, and there is a quotation from somebody in his Department who is not named. Was the Department trying to get at the right hon. Gentleman? Was it trying to change his mind? Was it a coincidence or a consequence? It is no good the Secretary of State smiling about it—he owes the House an explanation of what went on, especially when the conclusions of committees that are supposed to be secret are found in all the newspapers on the following Sunday. Has he lost control of his Department or is he still in control?

AWACS is not perfect either, and the Secretary of State knows that. It took 16 years to develop and its technology is quite old. As Boeing confirmed, it has had to be substantially updated over the years and those updatings are not done by Boeing for nothing—it charges the United States military. Many would say that AWACS was not designed to work in Europe.

There is then the question of jobs. The Government, and in particular the Secretary of State in his statement today, have tried to say that more jobs would be created. We know that jobs will be lost. We do not know how many—perhaps 2,000 or 2,500. In his statement, the Secretary of State said that Boeing had entered into a contractual obligation to provide £130 worth of work for every £100 of work on the AWACS. When I asked the Secretary of State whether any penalties would be applied if Boeing failed to carry out this obligation, he said that they would not. It is a strange contractual obligation where if one person breaks the contract there are no sanctions.

We know what it is in the contract. Boeing says that it will use its best endeavours to find the jobs and do the offset. The Secretary of State cannot tell me that, if Boeing fails to provide that £130 worth of jobs, there is a procedure for suing the company or getting damages. We have seen this arrangement time and again, as in the case of Trident when few jobs and orders came. We also saw it in the case of star wars. The right hon. Member for Henley rushed off to the Pentagon and signed an agreement to provide £1 billion, but look what has happened. Time and again, when we enter offset agreements with the United States, a mere trickle of jobs results, for the simple reason that the Americans are not as daft and soft as we are and they keep their defence contracting, in the main, to themselves. Perhaps the Secretary of State will confirm that there is no way that he can make Boeing live up to its promise of £130 worth of jobs for every £100 of work.

The Secretary of State said that the money that would be lost as a result of this exercise was about £600 million, and that the cost of AWACS would be £860 million for six. He went on to say that there was an option within six months to acquire another two. Would he explain that option a little more? Do we need six or eight aircraft? Presumably the Secretary of State knows how many we need—or does he need another six months? We should be told how many we need because no doubt the threat has been assessed, and I would have thought that the military conclusion would tell the Secretary of State how many he needs. If he orders another two within six months, how much more will that cost?

The Secretary of State then said that the £860 million was at 1986-87 prices. Perhaps I am being obtuse, but is that the fixed price? I take it that it is the fixed price, irrespective of what happens to inflation, but we should be told whether that is the actual sum in sterling that the British Government will have to pay. We were then told that the money would be found within public expenditure totals. By when does the money have to be found? The public expenditure totals do not go for more than three years, as there is now a three-year public expenditure review. Will the money be found within those three years or will it be paid in 1991, when the Boeing aircraft are delivered? We should be told what the implications for expenditure are, and we should be told whether the Government intend to lease three aircraft between now and 1991. The Secretary of State said that no offer had been made, and he was choosing his words carefully. Perhaps no formal offer has come, but have negotiations been started? Would the aircraft come from Boeing or the US Air Force, and how much would they cost the British taxpayer?

The Government's judgment on this matter is suspect, and the Secretary of State has said that he cannot prove anything and that it is a matter of judgment. In view of that, of the considerable consequences of the Government's decision for Britain's defence interests, British industry, for jobs and the economy, the history of the matter and the statements that have been made, the prudent course is to seek a second opinion by setting up an independent technical inquiry. It need not take too long. It should not take very long. There is no great rush as the contract does not have to be signed immediately.

Mr. Robert Key (Salisbury): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Davies: No, I have taken enough time.

The aircraft will not be with us until 1991, so it will be possible for the Government to satisfy everybody, including industry, by setting up an independent inquiry to look at the technical matters once and for all. We would all accept the results of such an inquiry.

[Mr. Davies]

If the Government do not do this, we must conclude that it is not just scientific and engineering matters that have been decided in this case, but that there is an element of malice towards GEC and perhaps towards some of its leading personnel. If the Government fail to set up an inquiry, we must also conclude that what they have done and what they will do by deciding in this way shows their contempt for British industry, defence interests and technology.

7.29 pm

The Secretary of State for Defence (Mr. George Younger): I am very grateful to the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) for providing us with the opportunity to have a debate so soon after the difficult decision that I had to announce this afternoon. However, with best of goodwill towards the right hon. Gentleman, the kindest description I can give of his speech is that it was a bit of a struggle. I thought that we were going to hear a clear and specific definition of the Opposition's views on the Nimrod decision, what they would have done themselves, and why. Instead, we were given a long tour d'horizon of the right hon. Gentleman's ideas on defence policy generally.

I have to offer my apologies to the right hon. Gentleman. It was somewhat tactless of me to have answered in my statement this afternoon all the questions that he was going to ask. I appreciate that it was difficult for him to recast his speech, so I was interested in some of the thinking on his feet in which the right hon. Gentleman indulged. It showed that he has a flexible attitude towards dealing with policies, if they can be made up as he talks.

He announced that in the past there was a virtual blockage of imports of defence products. If the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) had been here to hear his vast purchases of equipment from other countries, particularly from the United States during his time as a Defence Minister, described as a virtual blockage of imports, I think that he would have derived some wry amusement from it.

Mr. Neil Kinnock (Islwyn): It is plain that the Secretary of State is not very good on percentages. Is 5 per cent. a large amount or a small amount? Will he also give us the answer that he did not give this afternoon? What is the enforceable power in respect of the alleged 130 per cent. contract that he is supposed to be setting up with Boeing?

Mr. Younger: I understand why the Leader of the Opposition feels the need to try to make the speech of his right hon. Friend the Member for Llanelli again. On the 90 or 95 per cent. figure, or whatever it is, the correct figure is over 90 per cent. But that was not my point. It was the point of the right hon. Member for Llanelli. The right hon. Gentleman cannot get away from the fact that he said that there was a virtual blockage of imports, but he moved his stance when he saw he was getting nowhere. A few bars later, if that is the right way to describe it, he said, "No, no, there is a two-way trade between the two sides of the Atlantic. We are buying and selling both ways." He was moving his stance as he went along.

Then he came to his great panacea for our defence industries and exports. [Interruption.] I am trying to inform the House of the views on the Labour side, which I am sure the right hon. Member for Llanelli will be most entertained to hear. This great leader on the other side, who is so keen on defence exports and defence industries, has committed himself in a paper, which I read with great interest, which was produced by the national executive committee of the Labour party. It says:

> "There are strong arguments for a policy against the arms trade. Far too many jobs are dependent on other people's wars. There are also strong, less widely publicised economic arguments. We"— that is a Labour Government, if ever there should be another one—

> "will disband the defence export services organisation."

It is very nice to know that the Labour party has such a high regard for this organisation. I should point out that it is not the sales organisation that it intends to disband, but the defence export services organisation. Those who buy defence equipment, and, by doing so, create jobs in this country, will find that a Labour Government, should there ever again be one, will disband that organisation.

The right hon. Gentleman asked a number of questions which I shall do my best to answer, although I think that I have answered all of them already. First, he asked whether we need six or eight E3A aircraft. To fulfil the full and necessary policy that we want and that NATO wants us to provide, we need eight. In my statement I committed this country to buying six now and I have taken an option, with Boeing, to buy two more within six months at the same price. I wish to keep those two in reserve until I know the outcome of the annual review of our long-term costings. It is most important to see everything in the round so that we can make sensible decisions.

I said this afternoon that the price that had been offered by Boeing had been quoted in sterling. It is a fixed price that contains an allowance for inflation. There will only be an addition for excess costs and inflation if a point above a certain threshold is reached. The rest of the information is confidential, but that is the general line and it is a very full answer to the right hon. Gentleman's question.

Mr. Denzil Davies: The right hon. Gentleman did not say this afternoon that there would be an allowance for inflation. Is that British inflation or American inflation? How is it to be calculated in the contract?

Mr. Younger: The details are part of the contract. The right hon. Gentleman knows that we do not make details of that sort public, for obvious reasons. [HON. MEMBERS: "Why not?"] Nor did any of my predecessors in this job.

The right hon. Gentleman also asked where the money would come from. I made it clear this afternoon that the money will come from within the Ministry of Defence's expenditure patterns which have already been published —[Interruption.] The right hon. Gentleman would hear a great deal better if he did not talk so much himself. The money has to be found from within the Ministry of Defence's expenditure patterns which have been published by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. There is no mystery about that.

Lastly, the right hon. Gentleman asked whether any offer on leasing had been made. I made it clear this afternoon that there has been no offer, but that if there were such an offer I should consider it, if it were necessary to do so. I repeat that I have not had an offer, but if I receive one I shall consider it carefully.

Mr. Denzil Davies: I asked the right hon. Gentleman when the expenditure would start and when the payments would be made. Will there be payments within the next three years? The public expenditure assessment is for the next three years.

Mr. Younger: That is a perfectly good point. There will be some expenditure in the next three years, but there will be savings in the earlier years, because of the expenditure profile. I have given the totals, but the right hon. Gentleman will have to wait until he sees the breakdown and what, exactly, the cost works out at.

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): Will my right hon. Friend clarify the options? Is the issue of whether the option is to be taken up at a later date in any sense contingent upon a potential order by the French air force? Will Royal Air Force aeroplanes have the CFM56 engine — the Franco-American engine — which is certificated for the Saudi Arabian air force?

Mr. Younger: The option is not dependent upon the French taking up an order for AWACS, but I have made it clear that if the French decide to take AWACS, which is not at all unlikely, we shall be willing to co-operate with them over the procurement of AWACS and the support facilities for it. That has been very much welcomed by the French Government.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Younger: No, not for the moment.

As for the rest of the option—[Interruption.] I am trying to answer the first part of the question, but the right hon. Member for Llanelli is much more interested in asking the questions than in hearing the answers. However, that is understandable. [Interruption.] The right hon. Gentleman is more interested in asking questions than in getting answers. My hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) asked a valid question about the option. It will be exercised entirely at our discretion. If the French buy some AWACS aircraft, it will be a matter for negotiation between us and Boeing about whether that makes a difference. The engine laid on by Boeing is exactly the same as the engine in the existing AWACS aircraft.

Mr. Frank Cook: The French are interested in an airborne early warning system and have already expressed an intense interest in Nimrod. If they pursue that interest and intend to purchase the whole system lock, stock and barrel from GEC Avionics, what will be the Government's attitude? Would they permit such a purchase or would they try to block it?

Mr. Younger: I am always keen to encourage defence exports and should be very pleased if the French want to buy Nimrod. That is an excellent idea. The right hon. Member for Llanelli was somewhat unwise to pour cold water on the value of the offset deals. Whatever else one says about Boeing, it has an extremely good record in delivering what it promises on offset. When we bought Chinook helicopters from Boeing, the company more than fulfilled its undertaking on the offset. What is more, as has been made clear not only by me but by some of the contractors concerned, the offset being offered in this deal is good and of a high quality. If the right hon. Gentleman does not believe that, he should speak to the firms concerned and they will tell him that that is the case.

Mr. Denzil Davies: In his statement the right hon. Gentleman said that there was a contractual obligation. I asked if there were any penalties and he said no, but if Boeing fails to exercise its best efforts the Government have no sanction in law against Boeing. Is that the case?

Mr. Younger: I have already answered that question but I shall answer it again. In the case of the contract to supply the aircraft there are penalty clauses on Boeing if it fails to deliver on time and so on. There are no penalty clauses about the offset but Boeing has an exceptionally good record — [Interruption.] Apart from the fertile imagination of the right hon. Gentleman, there is no reason to think that Boeing will not fulfil its obligations. It will probably exceed them.

Mr. Churchill (Davyhulme): Does my right hon. Friend agree that it comes ill from the Leader of the Opposition to impugn the good faith of our American allies on whom he intends to rely for the ultimate nuclear defence of our nation? Is it not rather cheap for the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies), who has no great technical knowledge and expertise, to impugn the integrity and judgment of the scientific and service expert advice tendered to my right hon. Friend?

Mr. Younger: My hon. Friend is correct. However, he is expecting a great deal too much if he expects logic from the Opposition. I urge him to be a little more realistic in what he expects from the Opposition. One cannot expect the right hon. Member for Llanelli to be logical because he made a long speech about how good our defence industry and exports are and yet proposes to abolish the whole organisation if the Labour party come to power.

My statement was rather long and I shall not weary the House by repeating all the points that I have already made, although I seem to have had to do so for the right hon. Member for Llanelli. In the short time available to me I should like to concentrate on the most difficult and controversial issue arising from my decision — my assessment of GEC's prospects of achieving the required performance with the Nimrod system. That is probably what the House will find most useful to hear.

Airborne early warning is a fundamental requirement of modern warfare and our lack of this capability, for instance during the Falklands conflict, had consequences which we all clearly saw. In layman's language, the purpose of AEW is to put radar into the sky so that it can look far beyond the horizon of any radar system on the ground. This should give a clear picture of all flying objects over a long range, including those at low altitudes at which a hostile aircraft could conceal itself beyond the earth's curvature.

The AEW first detects hostile aircraft and then tracks their movement and, if possible, identifies their type. Friendly forces can then be alerted and fighters scrambled to intercept the intruder. The AEW aircraft will then guide them to the target. The AEW ensures that our fighters and aircrew do not wear themselves out on speculative patrols, but are called up when needed and directed straight to their targets. In this way the effectiveness of our fighter force is greatly enhanced. In other words, AEW is a force multipler in the truest sense.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): The Secretary of State for Defence stressed the importance of a vital secure data link. Does he agree with the chairman of GEC who said in a broadcast at 5 pm that in three years' time Nimrod will be much better? In the view of the right hon. Gentleman's ministerial experts would GEC have solved the problem of the secure data link within three years? That is a purely factual question but it is important in terms of judgment.

Mr. Younger: The unanimous view of the experts was that with the best will in the world—it is only their judgment—GEC would not have been able to solve all the problems in that time.

Mr. Dalyell: The data link problem?

Mr. Younger: Yes, especially the data link problem, and that problem is also experienced in the AWACS. It is not a matter of dispute between the two companies.

Mr. Dalyell: So Boeing is not better than GEC. On the data link problem, are we being told that Boeing has no great advantage over GEC? These are difficult systems. Is Boeing not much better than GEC?

Mr. Younger: I have made it clear that there is nothing between the two on that point. All hon. Members should know that, but if they do not I make it clear now that those items are still——

Mr. Dalyell: That alters it.

Mr. Younger: This is nothing new and it is perfectly well known by everybody concerned that the data link is still in the development phase. It is not a problem——

Mr. Dalyell: It is the reason given in the right hon. Gentleman's statement. Look at paragraph 5.

Mr. Younger: I know exactly what is in the statement. With respect, the hon. Gentleman has a great talent for making something out of nothing. I was quite open about it and I still say that on that aspect there is no difference between the two. I looked carefully at my statement and if the hon. Gentleman reads the text he will find that that is borne out word for word. This is a short debate and I do not want to take up time by going into a non issue.

Mr. Dalyell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am told that I have a talent for making something out of nothing. For 20 years I have been the weekly columnist of the New Scientist and I know something about the subject.

Mr. Younger: I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not be too sensitive. I am not trying to be disrespectful to him but, as I have said, this is a short debate and many hon. Members wish to speak.

Mr. Dalyell: The right hon. Gentleman has been technically caught out.

Mr. Younger: This early warning system is the essential and demanding role for which Nimrod has been planned for nearly a decade. The recent flight trials were carried out with great care. I flew in one of the sorties, as did my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement. As a result of the trials we have been able to form a clear picture of Nimrod's performance against the air staff requirement.

It must be emphasised that we did not conduct a sudden death play-off between Nimrod and the E3A, as has been represented. Nimrod was tested against the air staff requirement. Neither did we move the goal posts, although perhaps we would have been justified in doing so in view of the increase in the air threat since 1977. We did not specify, as has been suggested, that the AEW system must track aircraft targets over densely populated land. We said that this would be a valuable bonus in the competition, but it was never part of the baseline specifications against which Nimrod and AWACS were measured. I make that clear again.

Mr. George Park (Coventry, North-East): Is the Minister asserting that the specifications were never altered during the life of this contract and that GEC never got altered specifications or amendments during the whole life of the contract? Is that what the Minister is saying, because if so it runs entirely contrary to the evidence that was given to the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. Younger: The hon. Gentleman must understand that they are two different things. I have never heard of a contract that has gone through without the specifications being altered many times and on many points. Air staff requirement 400, against which this project is measured, has not been altered except in one respect, in that in-flight refuelling was added to it with the agreement of everybody. There is no problem about that because both of the contenders have in-flight refuelling capabilities.

This is a very short debate and I should conclude my speech as soon as possible because many people wish to speak.

Dr. Keith Hampson (Leeds, North-West) rose——

Mr. Tony Favell (Stockport) rose——

Mr. Younger: It is most unfair on other people.

Mr. Favell: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend. As he is aware, many of my constituents are employed at British Aerospace at Woodford. Will he please assure them and the whole of the north-west that there is no criticism of the way in which they have carried out their work on the 11 airframes? What will happen to the 11 aircraft which have been constructed by British Aerospace?

Mr. Younger: My hon. Friend has made a valid point. I should like to take the opportunity of saying again, as I said in my statement, that British Aerospace carried out its part in the contract excellently and completely to the stage that it had reached. It has done a good job in providing the aircraft and I should like to make that clear.

We shall have to give urgent consideration to the future use of those aircraft. I have begun to identify a number of possible uses for them. Nothing definite has yet been put forward, but, naturally, this is an important matter. The future of that airfield will, of course, also have to be considered. I accept my hon. Friend's great concern about that matter and I assure him that it will be addressed as soon as possible.

The air staff requirement specifies a number of performance characteristics that must be achieved, of which two are of fundamental importance. The first is the detection range which must be long enough to give the fighters time to scramble and intercept. The second is continuity of tracking. That is to say, the signature of the target aircraft must remain in and be displayed by the AEW computer system for as long as the aircraft remains within range. If the life of the track is too short, the signal may disappear and then reappear apparently as a new signal, thus giving the false impression that there are two aircraft instead of one and confusing not only the operators in the AEW aircraft, but users of the information in the air, on the ground or at sea.

We had hoped that our experts' appraisal of Nimrod and the programme of flight trials would ideally demonstrate that the system was within sight of achieving the required standard, or failing that, that there was at least a good prospect that it would achieve it within an acceptable time scale. Regrettably, my experts were unable to reach that conclusion. The flight trials yielded no consistent or reliable pattern or results. Those results, which GEC was content for us to use, generally showed a detection range significantly below what we had specified. The mean track life of the system was less than half of what we specified.

That is the performance of the system today, which the company would accept falls well below our standards now. However, the company has proposed technical solutions to overcome those various shortcomings. Taking each shortcoming and each proposed solution in isolation, it is possible that the system might approach the required standard, but even so, its performance would be marginal and on GEC's own showing the system would have only 70 per cent. of the reliability that we have specified.

My experts had to judge the system as a whole and not each of its component parts separately. All the individual improvements would have to be integrated into a system which would perform well in all respects. Sadly, our experience in recent months has been that as the firm has made an improvement in one area, that has resulted in the degradation of some other aspect of performance. The experts judged that that pattern was likely to continue and that the required performance was unlikely to be achieved before the mid-1990s at the earliest, if then.

Mr. Cranley Onslow (Woking): Is the ceiling of the aircraft relevant to the detection range? In that context, is it important that the Nimrod can attain a ceiling of about 25,000 feet and that the AWACS can attain a ceiling about 10,000 feet higher?

Mr. Younger: My hon. Friend has made a good technical point. The range at which each aircraft is effective is affected by its height because it can see that much further, the higher it can get. However, I stress that all the testing that we have done of the ability of Nimrod to operate is against ASR 400 and not against the AWACS aircraft.

Mr. Kinnock: On the basis of the appraisal that the Secretary of State has rightly offered us as a matter of public record tonight, if Lockheed were to approach him what advice would he offer it about the installation of the GEC system for its aircraft? If the French were to approach him on the subject, what advice would he tender to them about that British product?

Mr. Younger: I am not quite sure what the right hon. Gentleman means by the word "advice".

Mr. Dalyell: That is a very good question and the Secretary of State should answer it.

Mr. Younger: I am endeavouring to do just that. I am not quite sure what the right hon. Gentleman means by the word "advice".

Mr. Kinnock: The right hon. Gentleman is rubbishing British products.

Mr. Younger: I am trying to be open with the House about the sort of considerations that led me to take a very difficult decision. If the right hon. Gentleman is asking me to say nothing about that, I am very surprised. I have made it clear all along, and particularly this afternoon, that I regard GEC as a good company doing much very good work for the Ministry of Defence. I expect it to continue to do that for a long time in the future.

It is a great mistake and a damaging error to make out that because this contract ran into difficulties, anything else that GEC does is also inefficient. That is not the case. The company is a valued contractor and I wish it to remain so.

It is easy for hon. Members to criticise the judgment that we have made, but it is much more difficult to be the person who makes it. The one thing which, sadly, was missing from the speech of the right hon. Member for Llanelli was a balance between the considerations that he would have had to take if he had been in my position. He rightly emphasised the effect of a decision of this sort on the industry concerned, the company concerned and the reputation of British industry. That has been very much in my mind when making this difficult decision.

However, the right hon. Gentleman made no mention of the other criteria—the equipment and the standard of the equipment that the RAF requires to do its job. With respect to the right hon. Gentleman it is no good taking one of the criteria and letting it drive the whole thing because the whole is a balance between the various criteria that have to be taken into account. If I take the right hon. Gentleman's argument at its most literal, he is saying that the overwhelming importance of British industry having the work must take complete precedence over whether, at the end of the day, the equipment has worked.

Mr. Hugh Dykes (Harrow, East): The difficulty of my right hon. Friend's decision is appreciated by everybody and there is great sympathy for it. The great tragedy of the post-war period is that again and again we surrender to American technology. That weakens the country and the whole of Europe because we do not develop our own high technology.

Mr. Younger: I thank my hon. Friend for his absolutely valid point with which I totally agree. However, one cannot understand from that that we are in a position to do everything ourselves. It is better to collaborate on some things. To be fair to the Americans, they have taken the same view in reverse and have not attempted, because they could not beat it, to make a competitor to the Harrier. They have bought our Harriers and they are now, under licence and in agreement with us, co-operating and building them for themselves.

This is a very short debate and it is high time that I brought my remarks to a conclusion. I should simply like to say that if this is an effort by the Opposition to paint a picture that shows our decision to have been a wrong one, they have so far not addressed themselves to the principal issues. I cannot take seriously a case which rests on a series of assertions about other matters and which does not get down to the real nub of the issue, which is that the RAF requires aircraft up to a certain standard to do the job. Could GEC's equipment have got up to that standard in three years? I have faced up to the truth, have faced the fact that I do not believe that it could, and I have taken the necessary decision. I hope that the House will back me in that decision.

[Mr. Younger]

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House knows that this is a three-hour debate. A great many right hon. and hon. Members wish to take part, so I plead for short contributions, please.

7.59 pm

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): Many hon. Members recognise that decision that the Secretary of State has announced today was a difficult one. We have made it clear that, if it had been possible, we should have liked to see a decision in favour of the GEC option. There are obvious reasons in terms of British jobs, technology and export opportunities why that should have been the case. However, at the end of the day it is the defence considerations that matter. We have said that if only one option met the air staff requirements, that would be the proper decision for the Secretary of State to take.

Mr. Robert C. Brown (Newcastle upon Tyne, North): When the hon. Gentleman says "we", does he mean the Liberals, or the Liberals and the Social Democrats?

Mr. Wallace: I am speaking on behalf of my Liberal and Social Democratic colleagues in this matter.

At the end of the day we are dealing with a matter of judgment, and the House is being asked to accept the Secretary of State's judgment on which of the two options before him met the air staff requirement. He has told the House that on the advice available to him only the Boeing option met those requirements.

Because of the important consequences that that decision has for one of Britain's home-based companies, it is important that as much information as possible is made public. The decision must be seen to be right as well as be right.

In his statement this afternoon the Secretary of State described some of the considerations which led him to that decision. He has expanded on them in a letter which he sent to all right hon. and hon. Members and he has given more this evening. I urge the Secretary of State to place in the Library or to put on public record as much declassified information on this matter as possible because it is important that such information should be before the public. That is particularly important because, in statements made earlier this week, GEC has said that it felt that in some way it had been cheated. The more information that is available the more will GEC be able to challenge the various considerations that led the Secretary of State to his decision, if it feels it necessary to do so.

When the Leader of the Opposition intervened and said that the Secretary of State was rubbishing GEC by explaining to the House what had led him to his decision, he was being disingenuous. If the Secretary of State had tried to withhold from the House his reasons for coming to his decision, the Leader of the Opposition would have been on his feet crying foul again and saying that we were being kept in the dark. It is important that as much information as possible is made available.

Mr. Key: Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is time to give the lie to the idea that no proper assessment has been made and that there should be some so-called independent assessment? As most of the assessment was done at the arms and armaments experimental establishment at Boscombe Down in my constituency, does the hon. Gentleman share with me an understanding of the deep offence caused to the scientific Civil Service by such allegations?

Mr. Wallace: I accept the hon. Gentleman's point. I have no reason to believe that anything other than the best military and technical advice was given to the Secretary of State.

Key points of concern were jobs and the quality of jobs. Boeing has made various promises and claims which it says will accompany the selection of its option. It has talked of a 130 per cent. offset and in one letter it has said that the high-tech involvement will lead to new products with guaranteed new markets and export sales. I think that the House would like to know precisely what those new markets and export sales that have been guaranteed are.

We have been told that British companies will be involved in further development of the AEW system and that there will be E3A sales to other countries in which British industry will have an opportunity to participate. If those guarantees come to pass they will be welcome. My hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Ross), who has aviation industries within his constituency in which Boeing has had some involvement, has found that Boeing has been good in keeping its word.

On this occasion, however, there has been serious competition, and in those circumstances I should have thought that the Ministry of Defence was in a strong bargaining position. Therefore, I do not understand why the Secretary of State was not able to get a better belt-and-braces clause in the contract to hold Boeing to the 130 per cent. offset. It is all very well to go on good faith and previous performance, but the history of the project has been so marred by what could be called weak contractual arrangements that, as we are taking it forward, one would hope that the Ministry of Defence could be much stricter in the conditions that it sought to impose.

Indeed, the Comptroller and Auditor General, in his report published in July this year with particular reference to this project, said that one of the main lessons to be learnt for project management was "to establish contractual terms to put the contractor under effective discipline".

There is considerable justifiable anxiety on the Opposition Benches that such an opportunity has not been taken.

A further point on the contract which I raised with the Secretary of State earlier this afternoon relates to extra-territoriality laws. As I understand his reply, it was open to contracting parties to choose which law they wanted and it has been the practice of the Ministry of Defence to seek United Kingdom law. Fears on this matter arise from previous experience with several contracts involving IBM when the United States Government have sought to assert their law over matters which are very much within the United Kingdom regarding whether certain equipment could be moved within the United Kingdom and having a clear say in which countries goods may be exported to from the United Kingdom. Again, we should like some assurance that it is perfectly clear in the contract that the United States will not be able at any subsequent date to claim that its law could apply to this contract.

Mr. Wilkinson: Will the hon. Gentleman clarify one simple point? Is his party, or the alliance that he is representing, in favour of the Royal Air Force having the best aircraft in defence of Britain as regards airborne early warning? That is not clear.

Mr. Wallace: I am working on the basis that the Government have made their decision, and I am trying to make it clear that, having entered into a contract, it is important that we get the best deal. One of my points concerned extra-territoriality. That is an important point that should be covered in the contract.

The Secretary of State said in a statement this afternoon that costs would be contained within the defence budget as outlined by the Chancellor in his autumn statement. However, it has already been confirmed in news reports that the Ministry of Defence states that the defence estimates do not include any additional spending for AWACs. As the Secretary of State said, the greater costs will come in the later stages in the early 1990s. That is the very time when the bulk of expenditure on Trident is expected. Therefore, the House should be told how the Secretary of State sees the defence budget panning out in the late 1980s and early 1990s when those two major projects will have to be funded. What will give? The Secretary of State has said in the past that some hard decisions will have to be made. Can he give the House any idea of the way in which his mind is working on those hard decisions?

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend (Bexleyheath): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Wallace: I have given way a lot and I know that other hon. Members want to speak.

The project is a sorry tale which shows up some serious deficiencies in the Ministry of Defence's procurement policy. With his usual disarming frankness this afternoon the Secretary of State said that he did not seek to evade his Department's share of responsibility. We look forward to a clearer explanation of where he sees his Department having gone wrong. The Comptroller and Auditor General in his report to which I have referred identifies many areas in which it has gone wrong.

Mr. Townsend: Will the hon. Gentleman put the House out of its misery? Is the hon. Gentleman recommending that his hon. Friends should support the bold decision to give the RAF the best possible system or not?

Mr. Wallace: We have supported the Secretary of State's brave decision. I cannot make it any clearer than that. However, many other questions have to be asked, such as how we ever got to this position in the first place. There are serious matters, such as £660 million of taxpayers' money having gone down the drain, that we wish to examine. The Public Accounts Committee is already examining it and I am sure that the Select Committee on Defence will wish to examine it. If local authorities had mismanaged that amount of money, Conservative Members would have been down their throats calling for surcharges.

The Government have a responsibility to the taxpayer for the way in which they manage the public purse and there have been serious shortcomings in that. We will be looking for those shortcomings to be examined and to ensure that lessons are learned and that proper procedures are implemented in the future. However, as I have said, it is a brave decision and we hope that the Secretary of State can give more information to the public to show the full basis and jusfication for his decision.

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not appropriate to write into Hansard the fact that the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace), representing the alliance, spoke entirely on his own without a single member——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Ernest Armstrong): Order. This is a short debate and we should not waste time. The hon. Gentleman knows that that is not a matter for me.

8.11 pm

Mr. Julian Amery (Brighton, Pavilion): All my instincts incline me towards supporting the Nimrod project. It is a British project, we have sunk a lot of money into it, there are many jobs at stake and it is a pillar of our defence industries. It would be a popular decision for the Government to take and every consideration would seem to favour it — except one. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State says that it does not do the job that is required. That is a strange and saddening reversal of fortunes.

Long ago, almost before the flood, I was responsible for recommending to the RAF and the Government what sort of aircraft they should have. I produced a programme that included the TSR2, the P1154, and the HS681. Nobody questioned the fact that they were technologically better than anything that could be obtained in the United States, France or anywhere else. The only criticism was based on cost. The Tory Cabinet accepted them. Then Mr. Wilson came into office with the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins) as the Minister responsible for aviation. They cancelled all of those on the grounds of cost, not technology. They cancelled them roughly, but I do not want to go into that story now.

It is sad that we appear to be cancelling a project now, not on grounds of cost but because it is technologically not as sound as it should be. If it was technologically good and cost more, I would be in favour of supporting it. However, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has told us that it is not up to the job, technologically.

It is a difficult assessment for us to make. There are always people in the House who can make technical assessments, but there are not so many of us, I suspect, who can form a judgment on what is the margin between the two projects. I shall give only my own rough and ready measuring rod. When a Tory Government, in an election year on a defence issue, take an unpopular line they must have a damned good reason for doing so. Therefore, while I cannot say what the exact assessment may be, even with my own aviation background, it seems that the gap is pretty big.

If the world was peaceful and there was a general staff assessment that there would be no major conflict in the next 10 years, we could say that we could take second best for the RAF in the hope that it would help the defence industry to produce first best later on. I am afraid that the world is not like that. It is a dangerous world. The re-armament of the West is almost closing the window of opportunity that the Soviets have enjoyed since President Carter's time. That may make them more amenable to a return to detente, but it could precipitate adventures and risks. In that situation it seems to me that the interests of the Royal Air Force must be paramount. We cannot take risks with the men who may—I hope that they will not — have to defend our shores, convoys and other interests at home and perhaps beyond the NATO area. They must have the best equipment available.

[Mr. Julian Amery]

It is rather striking that the chiefs of staff, as I understand it—those who represent the Navy and the Army—have gone along with the decision made by my right hon. Friend although it is not necessarily the cheapest and may deprive them of some things to which they attach importance. The interests of the fighting services must be paramount in a dangerous time such as this and it is for that reason that, in spite of all my inclinations to buy British whenever we can, I support the Government wholeheartedly.

8.17 pm

Mr. Doug Hoyle (Warrington, North): When my right hon. Friend the Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) began his speech he said something that is true and that cannot be denied. He said that the sort of debate we are having tonight would not happen anywhere else. It certainly would not occur in the United States, France, Germany or Italy, because they would not surrender their technology in the way that ours is being thrown away tonight. We are trying to examine whether the British system, Nimrod, works. Indeed, we have it on the record from the Secretary of State that it does work. However, I should like the Secretary of State to answer the question that was put to him by my right hon. Friend the Member for Llanelli.

There was great play made in the statement by the Secretary of State, of the point that the failing of the British system was that when it comes to the final stage it would require the installation of a secure data link. I want to know whether AWACS has a secure data link. It is not clear from the statement. One would think that only Nimrod does not have a secure data link. If AWACS does not have a secure data link, what is the time scale for it to have one? Many technical questions have been asked but that is a technical question that we do not have an answer to.

Mr. Younger: There is a genuine misunderstanding here. I ask the hon. Gentleman to read the words of the statement very carefully. The reference in paragraph five is specifically to make it clear that GEC was offering to produce

"six aircraft between mid-1989 and mid-1990 which would approach the final standard"—

That is fine so far—

"subject to certain exclusions, of which the most important is a vital secure data link".

That is an exclusion from what it was expecting or expected to provide at that stage. That is because it is still under development. The same is true of the secure data link for AWACS. There is no difference between Nimrod and AWACS on that issue. There are plenty of differences in other ways but the systems are exactly on a par on that issue. I hope that that has clarified the matter.

Mr. Hoyle: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for his explanation. It does clarify the matter to some extent. However, it would not be clear from the statement that AWACS does not have a secure data link.

It is history and the role that the Ministry of Defence has had to play that I want to talk about. No one could ever accuse me of being a great friend of GEC. When it came to the Plessey takeover, I was on the side of Plessey. In this instance, however, I think that GEC is more sinned against than sinning. Many of the problems that have arisen are not its fault, and much of the responsibility for the time that has been taken rests with the Ministry of Defence. Many of us spent a great deal of time in 1977 persuading the then Secretary of State for Defence that it would be right to order Nimrod. The order was placed and at the very beginning GEC made it clear—this was done at one of the first meetings to be held—that one of the problems would lie with the computer. The civil servant concerned was a Mr. Geoffrey Stone, who was in charge of the project. Despite GEC stating that there would be problems with the computer—attention was drawn to the inadequacy of the performance of the 480 computer —nothing was done.

In 1978, GEC said that for £10 million—that must be set against the overall cost of the scheme now—it could filter out the misleading signals that were being picked up from cars and other man-made objects. Unfortunately, nothing was done from that time onwards. The Secretary of State has said that the goal posts have not been moved and the specification has not been altered, but it is my understanding that when the Nimrod contract was first arranged the purpose of Nimrod was largely to fly over the seas and the sparsely populated northern region. As recently as 1985 the specification was altered and it was——

Mr. Younger indicated dissent.

Mr. Hoyle: The right hon. Gentleman shakes his head. If I am wrong, I stand corrected. In 1985, the MOD specified that Nimrod should be able to operate over large areas of Britain, and that was a different specification. Is it true that the MOD has asked for that change to be made? Has it asked that Nimrod should be able to fly over Britain? When the project started, it was never to be compared with AWACS in that respect. It would seem that the project has been changed.

Mr. Younger: I apologise to the hon. Gentleman for interrupting him again.

Mr. Hoyle: I welcome the right hon. Gentleman's intervention. We want the answers.

Mr. Younger: The hon. Gentleman is making a genuine point but I wish to make it clear yet again that air staff requirement 400, which is what the products are being tested against, did not, does not and, as far as I am concerned, will not, require any competitors to operate over heavily populated land. That was never the position, it is not the position now and it will not be the position. It was said when the product went into competition that such a function was not part of ASR 400, but that if those entering the competition wished to add that capability they could do so. The important decision that I have announced today takes no account of this. It was not a requirement of GEC to produce a system that would work over heavily populated land. That was not the position and it is not the position now, and as far as I am concerned that is the end of the matter.

Mr. Hoyle: I thank the right hon. Gentleman for clarifying some of the issues. He has responded to some of the questions to which we were trying to get answers earlier on. I thank him for dealing with the technical data. I think he will agree with me, however, that although a caveat was added by saying that if a system could operate over heavily populated land it would be in a more favourable position, I was saying that when the order for Nimrod was placed, that capability was not set out in the specification or requirement.

Dr. Hampson: It would seem that the precise requirements stayed the same and that the RAF's interpretation of them changed. We have experienced enormous expense and delay because the RAF changed its view. It found that as Nimrod flew near land there was a flutter problem caused by low-speed items being picked up, such as motor traffic. AWACS never picks up moving items below 80 knots whereas Nimrod picks them up at 20 knots. The RAF took the view that the flutter with Nimrod was intolerable.

Mr. Hoyle: The hon. Gentleman is correct. I am glad that we are getting down to the nitty-gritty, to the technical specifications that we want to discuss. It is on these issues that we should be making our decision.

I am saying that many of the problems have been caused by the MOD. There have been problems because of the way in which the contract was placed in the first instance. The Ministry was reluctant to see costs increased, but the problems that arose could have been rectified early on if additional moneys had been made available. GEC drew attention to the problems at an early stage in meetings with the MOD and it was only when GEC took over the project in the last nine months and spent £50 million of its own money in doing so that the deficiencies were overcome. It got rid of the original computer and a new computer was installed along with a filtering system that stopped flutter. GEC says that the project is 85 per cent. efficient when set against the specification, which is an enlarged specification, and that is not denied. Indeed, I think that the Secretary of State has acknowledged that that is so. If GEC can fulfil 85 per cent. of the specification and if it has made so much progress in the past nine months, why throw it all away now?

Sir Adam Butler (Bosworth): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hoyle: I do not really wish to give way because many other right hon. Members wish to contribute to the debate, but I shall do so in this instance. We are establishing some facts.

Sir Adam Butler: As an advocate of the GEC case, the hon. Gentleman has made a remarkable statement. He has said that progress in the past nine months has been excellent, and I think that we are agreed about that, but he is implying that GEC knew the answers before that period and did nothing to produce them.

Mr. Hoyle: No. The right hon. Gentleman has it wrong. GEC wanted to produce the answers and wanted to put things right, but it could not obtain the funds to allow it to do so and it was not allowed by the MOD to take that course. The fact is that the Ministry was trying to work to a specification that was unworkable. In the end, however, GEC tried to put things right. That is why I am saying that, once GEC took over responsibility for the contract, great progress began to be made. I repeat my statement that the progress that it has made is remarkable. Bearing that in mind, surely we should be able to give GEC a little more time.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): Bearing in mind that the first six units will not be delivered until 1991, does the hon. Gentleman agree that so much progress has been made by GEC that it is insanity to sacrifice a system that is more sophisticated and advanced than AWACS, especially when we consider the public investment that has been made? By 1991 we could have six British Aerospace Nimrod 3s working to the specification of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Hoyle: I am so pleased to hear a Conservative Member speaking up for Britain.

I recall that when many of us were pressing the Secretary of State for Defence to order the Nimrod project, the RAF was against it. It has never changed its mind. It wanted AWACS originally and it wants AWACS now. As the RAF does not want Nimrod, would it not be better to initiate an independent assessment of the sort that has been pressed for by both sides of the House? Surely such an assessment would reveal the facts. It is wrong that the RAF should be the prosecutor and a witness at the same time, and that is what is wrong with the case which has been built up so far. We would not lose anything by allowing an independent assessment to take place. Indeed, we could gain a great deal.

I remind the right hon. Gentleman that we could save 3,500 jobs in high technology. We could maintain the lead that we built up. Apart from America, this is the only country involved in this work. We could be still there. We could gain valuable export markets. We know that Lockheed of Georgia is prepared to put in the C130. It could be exported to many countries.

I do not wish to take up any more time—I could—because many hon. Members wish to speak in the debate and add their expertise. This is a black day for the country. It is a black day among many recent black days, such as when we had the Westland dispute, when the Government tried to give away Land-Rover and Leyland lorries to General Motors and when we knew that Austin Rover was talking to Ford. Perhaps I am unfair to the Government, but it appears that they cannot give British industry to America fast enough. That is not the way that we should go. All hon. Members should stand up for British technology and maintain our belief in it by saying, "Let us give it a little more time. Let us develop it so that we can get into the world market. Let us develop a project of which we could all be proud." Despite the right hon. Gentleman's statement, I hope that he will go away and, over Christmas and new year, when he has a little time — I know that it is difficult in Scotland during Hogmanay—reflect on what has been said in the House. I hope that he will come back and say to GEC, "I shall give you the independent assessment that has been requested."

8.31 pm

Mr. James Prior (Waveney): I declare a fairly large interest in this debate. I make no bones about it. I do not see why hon. Members who have an interest should not declare it or should not take part in the debate. I think that the House gains something when people who have outside interests are able to play a part in debates.

There was criticism because, on Tuesday, I asked the Prime Minister a question. I gather that the Whips said that they thought that it was unethical that I should do so. I have taken and given a good deal of stick over the years, and I bear no malice. The Government are a good deal better at giving stick than I ever was.

[Mr. James Prior]

I unreservedly accept that my unpopularity in certain quarters has had nothing to do with this decision. I hope that all hon. Members will accept that I genuinely believe that, even if the national press does not. I regret the decision. It is wrong and it is a setback for Britain. This is an important contract because of its size and, of course, its prestige. It is one large job and it will not materially affect a company as large as GEC. Many lessons are to be learnt from this contract and from what has happened. I hope that there are no more cost-plus contracts, except during the early stages of development. Frankly, this contract has been thoroughly badly handled. GEC must take some of the blame, but the main culprit must be the Ministry of Defence. It was responsible for deciding on the money and the way in which the contract should be operated.

It is common knowledge that, time and again during the course of the contract, there were delays in obtaining equipment that GEC said was necessary. Years ago, it was said that the project would require a much greater capacity computer. I have seen the minutes of the meetings. GEC was not allowed to get the computer.

When it became clear that there was a clutter problem when looking towards land, it was said that there would have to be a traffic correlator, but we were not allowed to put one in. The transmitter is the most important item. Unless the transmitter works effectively and with power, nothing else in the aeroplane can work. The transmitter should have had a complete series of tests on the ground, but they were cut out during the moratorium of 1980-81 because there simply was not the money. The contract was handled on the basis of money, not performance. That is the lesson that we must learn for the future.

Eventually, the contract came to an end. A mistake was made by GEC. It should have stopped work on this contract at least five years ago, but it did not. It is tempting to take the attitude that one is being paid cost plus 4 per cent., so one goes on and hopes that something will turn up. It is a cosy relationship, but it simply does not work.

Since March, we have been operating on an entirely different basis. The right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) was wrong to say that it is £50 million of GEC's money. Since March it has been £25 million of GEC's money and £25 million of the Government's money. Since that time, we have been the main contractor. We told the Ministry of Defence what we would be able to achieve from March to 3 September. During that period, we achieved or exceeded all the items which we set out to improve. Two items in particular were clutter when looking towards land, which required the correlator, and the ability to see targets.

The spirit of the agreement that we entered into was that we would work together. We said that if, at the end of the six-month period, we were not able to make the necessary progress, we would accept that other firms would have to be approached and we would give up the contract. During that period, we made all the progress that we should have made. During that period, five progress reports were sent to the Ministry of Defence. On only the first report was any criticism made to us. I do not believe that anything is now known about the operation of Nimrod as against AWACS that was not known in March or earlier. One of my main contentions is that, quite frankly, from what we have heard today, they should not have gone on working after March. They should have cancelled the project then and gone for AWACS.

That was a difficult time for the Government because it followed the Westland and Rover incidents and there was a lot of anti-Americanism. The Government did not pursue AWACS. They kept on with the contract. There was a case then for cancelling it. The Government should not have taken £25 million of GEC's money in the way that they have since that time. [HON. MEMBERS: "Oh."] I do not expect any sympathy for that point, but it is an important ethical one that we should not forget.

I appreciate that the Secretary of State has had a difficult job. I wish to ask him a few relevant questions about the statement. His fifth point was that the Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement announced that, for Nimrod, we had negotiated with GEC revised contractual arrangements involving a sharing of financial risk with the company and giving it adequate incentives for completion. I should like to know what were the adequate incentives for completion. To my knowledge, the only incentives for completion were that, if we were successful in the final contract, we would be paid only 50 per cent. during the course of the contract until we had completed it to the final specification laid down by the Minister of Defence. Until that time, we would have been working entirely with our own money, and it could have cost us as much as £200 million which, even for a company the size of GEC, is a considerable amount.

I agree with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State that the ASR 400 has not been changed. That is not what matters. The interpretation that has been put on it is what matters. Since 1979 there have been no fewer than 3,845 modifications. That tells us something not only about the complications of the project but about the interpretation of the ASR 400. The truth is that we could have got on with the ASR 400 if we had not been denied or delayed in the resources required at the right time. If we had been able to test the transmitter and it had worked, many of the problems that occurred when the aircraft was in the air and the radar was being tested could have been overcome more quickly.

Point 5 of the speech by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State refers to the final time scale which is laid down for the provision of these aircraft. My right hon. Friend is right; we would have delivered the aircraft by 1990. The only outstanding problem at that time would be the joint tactical information distribution system. JTIDS is something that the Americans have to produce and that the Ministry of Defence has to buy and something over which GEC would have no control, so please do not let anyone blame us for the delay after 1990. We would deliver the aircraft by 1990. We have said so. If we refused to do so, we would be paid only up to 50 per cent.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Amery) made a remark with which I fully agree. He said that, generally, our technology has been of high quality but our costs have been too high. I talk to our technicians regularly. They are bitterly disappointed because they feel that they have been judged unfairly on their technical performance. During the past few weeks, they have said to me repeatedly, "We would not have minded if we had been beaten on price, but we mind desperately that we have been judged as being beaten on our technical performance."

There have been technical disappointments, but, as I have said, we set out with limited objectives in March and we have fulfilled them. I shall not go into the problems that remain — I have written to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of state about them—but they can be solved. We have shown not only the improvements which we have made but how further improvements can be made to bring us up to the necessary specifications. I do not think that "technical disappointment" is a fair way of expressing what has happened.

I come to the figures in paragraph 10. Frankly, I simply do not understand them. The total figure put in by GEC Avionics for the whole job on a fixed price, including inflation, was £508 million, which was to provide 11 Nimrods to the specifications laid down in ASR 400. Today we were told that we shall get six AWACS for £860 million—which does not allow for inflation, as we heard from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State—and my right hon. Friend is taking an option on two more. Those eight AWACS are hardly equivalent to 11 Nimrods — in fact, to be on equal grounds, there must be 10 AWACS. But let us say that there are eight AWACS, which is £860 million plus the cost of the two on option, which takes the amount to about £1·1 billion. A little must be added for inflation, because the first aircraft will not be delivered until 1991, so let us say that the amount will be £1·2 billion. That is precisely double the amount that the 11 Nimrods are due to cost, and which we have guaranteed. It is not £200 million more but more than double.

We delude ourselves as a country if we do not get these figures in the right perspective now. I shall not be in the House to complain—I dare say that my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) will be on his feet quickly to complain—in five years' time when the cost has gone up and it is shown that it is double the cost of Nimrod. I am not at all happy about the figures that have been produced.

I can understand that there was not a great argument about the cost by the defence chiefs, because they know that there is not much cost for the next three years. They know that there will probably be less of a cost for the next three years and that the main cost comes later. As we all know from our political experience, we do not really care what happens in four or five years' time because we do not know whether we will be here. It is a problem for someone else to sort out. That is nearly always where we go wrong.

Many subjective judgments have been made, and I do not doubt that I am making a few. It is extraordinary that, in a contract as technically difficult as this, the advice from everyone in the Ministry of Defence has been unanimous. This must be the only time that this has ever happened. It is too good to be true. It leaves me with a sad feeling.

The defence industries are important to this country. It is essential that we do not have this terrible hiatus ever again. The Ministry of Defence must recognise not only that it is a major contractor and customer, which is responsible for a tremendous number of orders, high technology and employment in Britain, but that other countries look at us and see what we are doing. If they see that we are making a mess of this, no matter whose fault it is—we take some of the blame—it has an impact on what happens to other defence contracts. Our competitors abroad will be going around saying to our customers, "Look what they have done. They have left it. They were not satisfied." That is a very dangerous position for this country to get into.

We must co-operate more. There is not enough co-operation between the defence contractors and the Ministry of Defence. In my experience, we talk much more to our other customers than to the Ministry of Defence. We need quickly to look at that aspect. GEC and the Ministry of Defence need to repair a few fences quickly. I say that not necessarily because my making these comments may obtain more orders but because I genuinely believe that, unless there is that good contact and good understanding between the two sides over what is important for Britain, we cannot possibly get it right.

Grave charges are being levelled by GEC employees who have had good relationships with the radar establishment and with the Ministry of Defence for 15 to 20 years and who feel that this time something has gone wrong. They do not know what it is. They have not been told during the past few months what it is.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Nor have we.

Mr. Prior: No one has been told. I should expect that, in a contract of this nature, as with most contracts, when things were going wrong, there would be discussion between the contractor and the customer.

Of course, we have to accept the decision. The RAF has always wanted AWACS and I do not see why it should not want AWACS. It has always wanted it and I do not impugn the RAF for that because it flew me across the Irish sea so many times over a three-year period that I would never say that the RAF was not perfectly entitled to fight hard for what it requires. However, the decision is a setback for Britain. It is a great disappointment, especially for the work force. It is a disappointment for those Conservative Members who, in difficult times, have supported me and the company, and I am grateful to them for that. We owe it to all the people who will lose their jobs over the next few weeks in unpleasant circumstances to ensure that this kind of thing never happens again.

It may not be a very good story from the company's point of view, but I think that the Ministry of Defence has a very heavy responsibility for all that has happened which has led to the decision.

8.50 pm

Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones (Eccles): I am grateful for the opportunity to make my speech after the right hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior). It is a great pity that this debate did not take place earlier. It would have been better if these matters could have been discussed before. I am sorry that the Secretary of State has left the Chamber, but he has been magnificently honest in response to questions. He has clarified many issues for us tonight.

The statement that the Secretary of State made today was particularly helpful. In that statement, he said that it is most important that there is a "vital secure data link". As an ex-RAF navigator during the war, I can appreciate that it is not very funny sending out signals telling the enemy where you are. My hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) asked whether that data link applied to Nimrod as well as to Boeing. There was some confusion but eventually we were given a clear answer. We were told that the "vital secure data link" which, in the statement is said to be a disadvantage to Nimrod, is actually a disadvantage for both aircraft. The Secretary of State was absolutely honest and positive about that. The alleged defect in Nimrod occurs in both aircraft.

[Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones]

Several other points have arisen in the debate that are important. I want to stick briefly, if I may, without romancing too much, to the letter which the Secretary of State produced today and his statement. The Secretary of State has said that the GEC offer covers three levels of attainment. He spells those out. He also referred to the first three aircraft that will be available in 1987 and he said that they will be no good because they are of an unsatisfactory standard for training. I have never heard so much cobblers in my life.

In the RAF, we were trained in what was known as mark 4 AI. We then used mark 8 AI and went operational on mark 10 AI. It is not unusual to be trained in the forces on a piece of equipment that is not completely modern. The Secretary of State and I flew in an aircraft which was perfectly adequate for training purposes. It ought not to have been dismissed in that manner.

Many important points have been raised in connection with phases 2 and 3 regarding the performance of Nimrod. The right hon. Member for Waveney was absolutely correct when he referred to the improvements. I flew on Nimrod and there were GEC boys present who praised Nimrod. Hon. Members have said today that of course they would do that. However, standing behind me at that circuit was a squadron leader radar navigator from the MOD. He said the same so I was not being fed bull; I was being fed the truth.

The GEC boys demonstrated a situation in which there was clutter. My God, there was clutter. It was impossible to pick up anything. They then switched in the computer — which has only recently been fitted — and the performance improvement was remarkable. That factor has not been taken into account.

I have knocked GEC in the past and it is far from blameless in this matter. However, the improvement in the past six months has been demonstrably remarkable. GEC deserves the faith of the Ministry in this matter because it has performed extremely well.

My hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow and my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) have managed to discover that the time scale in relation to the "vital secure data link" is not available for either aircraft. That appears in the statement as a criticism of Nimrod, but is not. We must return to the other time scale. In passing, I hope that GEC would not object if the MoD, in its infinite wisdom, decided to invoke and invite other electronics experts in this country to participate to resolve the problem. There would be no harm in that. The main contract remains sacrosanct.

We shall not have a Boeing until 1991, as stated in the fifth point in the statement. The Secretary of State was very honest about that. The implication of that is that he has presented us with a reason why we should persist with the Nimrod project. That is loud and clear.

I hope to God that the House can achieve a deathbed repentance on this occasion and revoke the decision because it is wrong. At the end of the war we had one of the finest air interception facilities in the world called mark 10 AI, but we lost it. That system could have been modern for the next 30 years, but we lost it to the Americans. We have a distinct chance, if we do not proceed with the project, of losing this technology in its entirety. This technology has an advantage outside military use. There is a great problem with clutter at civil airports and with holding people off. The equipment would be extremely useful in civil aviation. There would be that spin-off.

When the Secretary of State referred to cancellation, his hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) asked about the horizon issue. He asked if there was a relationship between the horizon and the height at which the aircraft flies. The Secretary of State said that there was a correlation. He said that as if it was a new discovery. However, we knew 15 to 20 years ago that Nimrod operated at 26,000 feet and Boeing at 29,000 feet. The horizon issue was common knowledge all those years ago. It is not a technical point; it is a matter of fact.

I make this plea. I have no commercial or constituency interest in employment terms in who receives the contract. However, I have an interest in the Royal Air Force. I believe that the RAF has been misled on this occasion. The progress that has been made by GEC, for aircraft that have already been paid for, represents a chance for us to lead the world in this technology. We must not throw that chance away.

The row over Westland and the resignation of two Secretaries of State was a great mischief. The row was about helicopters. There was an air staff target for helicopters. AST 402, and the W30 built by Westland, were built to meet that specification. The Ministry of Defence ratted on it, which is why Westland found itself with a massive cash flow problem. At the end of the day, when all the dust has settled, the row has finished and the quarrelling is over, what is the truth? The truth is that we do not have sufficient helicopters today for the needs of our forces. That is the tragedy.

When one considers the clutter question of ASR400 it seems that GEC has produced equipment higher than the air staff target in urban areas, especially near Sheffield and Edinburgh. I applaud the honesty of the Secretary of State, but I urge right hon. and hon. Members to consider that they are chucking away an important and valuable piece of advanced British technology.

8.59 pm

Mr. Cecil Parkinson (Hertsmere): I am in the rather strange position of probably being as ignorant about technical matters as it is possible to be, yet having in my constituency industries which are working at the edge of the most advanced technology. I suspect that, in common with many hon. Members tonight, I have the disadvantage of being asked to pass judgment on a project, product and system which few of us understand and on which few of us are qualified to pass any technical judgment.

We may agree on more matters than one would have guessed from listening to some of the debate. Indeed, I am glad that it has settled down after its bad-tempered beginning. No hon. Member, including those on the Front Bench, would not prefer to buy a British AEW system. No hon. Member does not agree that there would be nothing patriotic about landing the RAF with a second-rate system. We are talking about developing an airborne system which is a vital part of the nation's defences and it must be common ground that it must be as good as possible.

We all agree that for the target to be running so late and so heavily over cost suggests either hopeless optimism at an early stage—I suspect there was some of that—or appalling target control or, possibly, a combination of both. Certainly there are many lessons for the Ministry of Defence and the House to learn from the project.

It should be common ground that it cannot be easy for a Government—nor should it be for the House—to decide to write off at the end of a three-hour debate nine years' work of thousands of people and £700 million of taxpayers' money. Tonight we are taking a big decision.

I have one small criticism of the Opposition which is that they were extremely foolish to demand a Standing Order No. 20 debate so soon after such a highly complicated statement. This is probably the last chance that the House will have to debate this subject and we are disposing of it in three hours. The Opposition have nobody but themselves to blame for limiting the time available.

In making his statement, my right hon. Friend, by implication and sometimes directly, acknowledged some of the advantages of Nimrod. He acknowledged the cost and minimised the difference. Indeed, he probably gave a much fairer assessment of the potential savings from buying Nimrod. We should not ignore the fact that the technology, as developed, would have been British and ours to exploit.

Boeing promises to bring jobs here, and I do not doubt its determination to try to honour its word. Nevertheless, it will be bringing us technology for us to work on and we will be surrendering wholly British technology which could have been ours to exploit.

At the end of all this debate, the judgment, which we in this House are barely qualified to make but must do so, is to decide whether the Secretary of State, having taken the best advice he possibly can, and having considered it extremely carefully, is right. I know him personally and I am sure that the House knows that he cannot have found this decision an easy one. I have heard the Secretary of State defend projects in Scotland. We have maintained projects in Scotland when the economic justice for doing so has quite often eluded me. The Secretary of State has strong credentials as a man who likes to back British and would not take a decision like this one easily.

Mr. Dalyell: Scottish or British? GEC in Scotland will be hurt.

Mr. Parkinson: I am including Scotland as part of Britain. I hope that the hon. Gentleman is not offended.

We are told that this project is not capable of working.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): It is working now.

Mr. Parkinson: We are told that even in the mid-1990s it is not sure that the system would work. What we are effectively being told is that the system will not work. It is on this important issue that I wish to draw on my experience.

In my constituency I have the factory or the base in which most of the technology is being developed. I know many of the scientists and technologists who work there and I have seen with my own eyes the progress that has been made in recent months. It is here that I must part company with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

I find it impossible to believe that in nine more years—that is the assertion made in the Secretary of State's letter—even by the mid-1990s, we will not have the technologists to crack the problem. I know these people and they are a most impressive group who have made tremendous progress in six months. I find it an incredible statement in the assessment, that in nine more years there is still no certainty that these technologists could crack the problem. The company has made the assertion that it could be done in three years and it has made an offer to back up that assertion with a substantial sum of money.

I started by saying that I was well aware of my lack of qualifications for making what is a technical judgment. What we are saying today is that this House has no confidence in British technologists' ability to crack the Nimrod problem. The Secretary of State believes that he is justified in making that statement. He has considered the matter carefully. I am afraid that I cannot join him in a condemnation of the capabilities of my constituents and those technologists that I know. He may be justified in taking this decision, but I cannot go with him.

9.9 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): I am not interested in the party politics of this matter but I say to the right hon. Member for Hertsmere (Mr. Parkinson): "Be fair." The Opposition pleaded to have this debate before the Cabinet decision was taken. My hon. Friend the Member for Warrington (Mr. Hoyle) and many others begged the Government to give time so that the House of Commons could have some input in the decision rather than a post-mortem afterwards. That is what we were begging for.

It all comes down to the treatment of the House of Commons. I do not make too much complaint that the Prime Minister is not here and that the Secretary of State for Defence has gone off for television engagements, but it is high time that the House asserted itself and expressed its views before, rather than after, decisions are taken. Again, we are crying over spilled milk.

I very much welcome the presence of the chairman of one of our great companies. It may be that the House is a bit poorer for not having the Sir Alfred Monds of the day and the major trade union leaders in the House.

I draw the Minister's attention to paragraph 12 of the Secretary of State's statement, which said:

> "The loss to British defence technology will be solely in this highly specialised field of large and advanced AEW systems, and it is not strategically vital for this capability to be retained in British industry."

That is what the Secretary of State said this afternoon, but we should listen to the chairman of GEC who said that our competitors around the world will be making play with what the British Government have done. He is right.

All of us who have industrial concerns in our constituencies and know something about their export difficulties are aware that the decision will be used against us in all sorts of areas. Paragraph 12 of the statement is just not true.

I was a bit shocked because the chairman of GEC said that the decision was not taken in March because of Westland and Leyland. That reveals that the politics of the situation was paramount. I do not want to be cheap about it, but who is playing politics with defence now?

There should be some explanation of the transmitter not being tested on the ground. If the money was not available for such a central and basic issue, what on earth was the reason? I hope that we shall have an answer to that question in the winding-up speech.

[Mr. Tam Dalyell]

I knew that there had been a lot of modifications, but how many hon. Members knew that there had been 3,845? My hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Park) has engineering experience. How can one produce anything with that kind of constant change and nagging? No industrial designer can cope with that, let alone cope with it and keep within cost estimates.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas) is a member of the Defence Select Committee and he said to me, "If you are called, for heaven's sake ask them what are the through-life costs." This is a specific question for the Minister's winding-up speech. What are the comparative through-life costs for AWACS and Nimrod? Perhaps the right hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior) has an answer in his notes. GEC must have given some attention to this problem of through-life costs. The rest of us do not know, however, and it is a vital question. I shall give way to the Minister if he knows. Perhaps he will tell us later.

Boeing has a very good record in offsets. I do not think that anybody can deny that. Indeed, Boeing probably has a better record than any other American company, but that was before the Glenn amendment. The atmosphere in the United States is altering. Ever since Senator Glenn of Ohio brought in that amendment, admittedly in a different context, things have been different. We have seen that with the strategic defence initiative.

My constituents at Heriot-Watt university are doing work on optical physics, and, controversially, have taken £1·2 million or thereabouts from the Pentagon to keep the university physics department going. That is a paltry sum compared to the huge sums that were dangled before the House when my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) and others were asking about the industrial aspects of this matter. We live in a post-Glenn time.

The Royal Air Force has air staff requirement 400. Is that some sort of tablet from on high? Like the chairman of GEC, some of us do not believe that the Ministry of Defence was unanimous in its decision. I repeat the question: are we sure that in the next three or four years it will not dribble out that the decision was far from unanimous? I will bet my bottom dollar that, sooner or later, people will crawl out of the woodwork in the Ministry of Defence saying that they never wanted that decision. That will happen, because it has happened before.

The Secretary of State said that the secure data link was now on a par. A secure data link is absolutely crucial. I do not want to vaunt my qualifications, but for 20 years I have been the weekly columnist for New Scientist. I have many contacts and people tell me that, without a secure data link in the next generation, it is foolhardy to go ahead with the project. The AWACS project is a bit dated. It has already been going for eight years. It has the virtue of being tried but it has problems. I do not say that the secure data link is vital. The Secretary of State said in his opening statement that it was vital that it was sorted out. Who has the greater chance, GEC or Boeing, of coping with this crucial problem? I am told by people who are in a position to know that if they had to put money on who would first arrive at an answer to the secure data link, that money would go on GEC and not on Boeing. What does the Ministry of Defence say to that?

9.16 pm

Mr. Edward Heath (Old Bexley and Sidcup): In the latter half of the debate we have been getting down to the basic facts about this issue. The Secretary of State said that the issue was complex, and we sympathise with him in having to reach a very difficult decision. The number of right hon. and hon. Members who wish to take part in the debate demonstrates clearly that this announcement should never have been kept until the last Thursday before Christmas. It should not have been left to an emergency debate. The Government should have provided the time for the debate, and they should have provided that time before they reached a decision. That would have given the Secretary of State an opportunity to explain many of the matters which are still confusing to the House and certainly to the public.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior) has shown how valuable it is to have someone in the House who holds a pre-eminent position in industry, and who can put the other side of the Government's case. Good government, as we learned above all during the 1930s, depends on having in the House people who have the information themselves, and who can therefore challenge the Government on any big issue. Otherwise the House just becomes a poodle of Government.

There was a time when industrialists and top trade union leaders came to the House in order to make a contribution. They did not seek office, but wanted to give their information and knowledge to the House so that hon. Members could reach better judgments. Those industrialists and trade unionists have all disappeared. We must now wait until a Member of Parliament becomes distinguished in the House. He may then go off to industry and, in some cases, be able to enlighten us.

My view on the decision is that it is sad and regrettable, and I certainly cannot support it. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said that the interests of the services and of the Royal Air Force are important. He was absolutely right. I admire very much the work that he is doing as Secretary of State. But I do not accept that the views of the services or of the Royal Air Force, in particular, are paramount. They are not.

I must apologise to my right hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Amery) if for once in our lives we disagree. The views of the services are not paramount and I suggest that the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies), who opened the debate, has jumped on the bandwagon, just as the Leader of the Opposition jumped on the bandwagon of "paramount" at Question Time today. Those two right hon. Members are in an extremely dangerous position, and they will find themselves tied to it if ever they get into office—which I very much doubt. It is a very unwise position to adopt. Hon. Members should look at the problems to which we are tied now because we were told that the views of the Falkland islanders were paramount. The view of this House is paramount and the view of Parliament as a whole.

The chiefs of staff do not have responsibility for the Budget or for finance. They do not have responsibility for employment and jobs, or for exports and export performance. They do not in the least have that responsibility, and it would be wrong to charge them with it. Therefore, their position is one factor in the overall situation.

It is clear that, from the point of view of the Budget and of finance, of jobs and employment, and of export potential, everything in this case is on the side of GEC, and to a certain extent on the side of Nimrod as a whole. It is only on the argument about technical achievement that there is any difference. Of course, the chiefs of staff and the experts can give their views on that. But it is the Government's responsibility to take the decision and they should not say, "This was the advice that we received from the chiefs of staff." There was a time in the House when no reference was ever made to advice received from chiefs of staff or from any military. It would be a very good thing if we returned to that position. Governments are then prevented from trying to shift the responsibility on to those who are advisers, and no more than that.

I have also been somewhat shocked by the naive simplicity sometimes shown by my right hon. and hon. Friends behind me about the views of experts. The House is not governed by experts. Our task is to take experts' views and to tear them apart as skilfully as we can and as often as necessary. It is only in that way that we shall find the overall solutions that are necessary.

I shall now concentrate on the specific position of GEC, and on some of the confusions surrounding it. I accept that the specification has remained the same except, as we were told, for refueling in the air. But to use a term that is, I believe, now used in fashionable circles, that is an economical use of the truth. It is not only the specification that is important but the steps taken by the Ministry of Defence in order to insist on how that specification should be reached. When there are more than 3,000 alterations, long delays on the part of the Ministry of Defence before it says yes or no to a proposition from the company, and when money is refused for changes that the firm wants in order to reach that specification, we can see a long, sordid history of delay, lack of finance and incompetence by the Ministry of Defence. Nor is it, alas, alone in our post-war history.

For example, we have lost the greater part of our civil aviation industry because the British Overseas Airways Corporation insisted on specifications that prevented the export of aircraft to other countries, because they did not have the same idea of route lengths, and so on. Moreover, there were all the alterations that that company made as the development went along, which led to delays in the production of aircraft. The civil aviation industry tells a sad, sad story.

In this case, the important part is the confusion about specification and about how it is to be implemented, and that is where the Ministry has its say. There is then the question whether the aircraft had to cover overland operations. I do not think that we are talking so much about confusion as about a difference of definition. When dealing with North sea waters, it was found that to a certain extent operations overland were involved. That is quite different from saying that thickly populated areas on the continent of Europe had to be dealt with as well. But those are confusions and an economical use of the truth.

After nearly nine years of delay, obstruction and lack of Ministry finance, the firm managed to make extraordinary progress in nine months once it had taken control of the contract. It is contributing half the finance and is prepared to continue doing so. This is a remarkable change, and I congratulate those who have been responsible for it.

As the firm is now approaching so closely to what is required under ASR 400, my view is that the Government and the Ministry of Defence should work with it to enable it to achieve those financial results. Why should we use our research laboratories and so-called experts only to pull the thing to pieces and engage in this orgy of suicide, from the national point of view, which so many of them want? They should be used to help the firm to overcome the remaining difficulties and solve the problems. That is what they are there for. Why do they not do that?

Where I differ from the judgment of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is in my belief that, having achieved so much in nine months, the firm should be given the opportunity of carrying out the timetable into which it is prepared to put its money as well as Government money. Then we shall have the opportunity of more advanced technology than the Americans will provide through Boeing, and the opportunity of selling it in the world markets. We shall maintain British prestige and advance our own technology in a specific but important sector. What is more, we shall maintain the morale of those in industry who have been striving to achieve the target that we have set them.

9.25 pm

Mr. John Wilkinson (Ruislip-Northwood): The speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) has saddened me. In many ways it was not worthy of the occasion. It was looking backwards and it was not addressing the threat that we face from a greatly enhanced Soviet air force and naval air forces. In the past 10 years, the threat has been growing steadily and it is a threat from such aircraft as the Backfire supersonic bomber and the Fencer fighter bomber. Both these aircraft can strike at these shores, and if they are to be intercepted they have to be intercepted as far away as possible. The Backfire, for example, has a stand-off capability, and that is why interception at long range is so important.

In peacetime, the views of experts, as my right hon. Friend so disdainfully calls them, may not seem important. We can derogate the weight that we attach to the specialist advice of those who may ultimately have to put their lives at risk on our behalf, but I am absolutely certain that if we were to go to war, we should wish for our armed forces the very best. It is most significant that the Army, the Navy and the Air Force are united in their advice to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Most importantly, the Royal Air Force itself——

Dr. Keith Hampson (Leeds, North-West): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Wilkinson: No, because time is short.

In making its choice, the Royal Air Force is conscious that it is reducing the amount of money for its future programmes and it attaches great weight to airborne early warning. Neither the land battle nor the war at sea can be won without a favourable air environment. Our own population, our families, cannot sleep safely in their beds unless they know that the United Kingdom air defence region will be properly policed and guarded by interceptors that are directed to their targets by the very best airborne early warning system available.

There is no doubt that the contractors have had time enough. The specification, the air staff requirement, was set back in 1976, the Nimrod AEW programme was initiated in 1977 and the AWACS for the NATO European countries was initiated one year later, in 1978. Yet AWACS came into service in time, in 1982. That was when the first Nimrod AEW aircraft should have been delivered for training to the Royal Air Force. Since then, our NATO partners have had the benefit of this additional security. It is a classic example of what should have been a collaborative programme from the outset.

[Mr. Wilkinson]

With hindsight, we all regret that that decision was not taken. However, it was not, and in a cool, calm and highly rational manner my right hon. Friend has had the courage to grasp a difficult political nettle. I have known, literally for years, about the deficiencies of the Nimrod system for airborne early warning. I have not spoken out. To have done so would, I felt, have been prejudicial to this country's security interests.

However, in the spring of 1986 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was entirely right to say that enough was enough, that good money could not be thrown after bad, that the contract should be thrown open to competition, to make GEC assume leadership of the project, put in its own money and see if it could come up with a solution that would beat the competition within a reasonable time scale. It could not do so. As it could not do so, my right hon. Friend had to make the appropriate decision. I believe that he has, and his courage deserves to be commended. I am sure that the country will be grateful for his courage, because now our countrymen can sleep more safely in their beds.

9.31 pm

Mr. Robert B. Jones (Hertfordshire, West): I am grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to catch your eye, because the GEC factory at Hemel Hempstead in my constituency is where much of the work on the development of Nimrod has been done. Those who have been involved with the project are dedicated avionics workers. They are fully committed to the defence of Britain, otherwise they would not be there. There has been uncertainty over their future in the last few months, but in the last few days it has turned to anguish. Therefore I want to identify some of those who I think are responsible for that anguish.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told us today — although we have heard about it for several days in the press — that Nimrod does not fulfil the requirements and that therefore it must be scrapped. I do not doubt that my right hon. Friend reached his decision after a great deal of difficult and careful consideration. No Government, of whatever complexion, would have done other than buy British, if that had been possible. No Government would unnecessarily waste £660 million. My right hon. Friend must surely, therefore, have satisfied himself that Nimrod was unlikely to work properly on any reasonable time scale.

The historic background is important. My constituents have been working on this project since 1977. By March 1986 the consensus was that the system was not satisfactory. Nobody has challenged that assumption. The Royal Air Force says that it laid down clear requirements. As we have heard tonight, there was only one change — the requirement for an air-to-air refuelling capacity. With that one exception, the requirements remained unaltered until GEC was given a lower revised target, called an "interim operating standard". I am sure that that is true. However, it is misleading.

For the first eight and a half years of its life, the Ministry of Defence effectively ran this project. The MOD determined precisely what work should be carried out by GEC, and in many ways how it should be carried out. The civil servants therefore carry an enormous responsibility for the lack of progress. I should welcome a Select Committee inquiry into the management of the programme. It would, I fear, reveal that a profoundly disturbing system was in operation during that time.

Furthermore, although it is true that the specification, the ASR400, was not changed, much of the detailed requirement — filling in the broader terms of those references — was changed. Some change is inevitable. Neither science nor defence stand still. However, the MOD must stand indicted of gross mismanagement, which has now cost my constituents their immediate jobs. My right hon. Friend should now ensure that MOD heads should roll, too. One of the least acceptable facts of British political life is that those civil servants who have been guilty of mismanagement often get off scot-free. Unfortunately, it cannot be said that GEC itself was anything other than a willing partner in this arrangement. The absurd cost-plus basis of defence procurement leads to a cosy relationship which is beneficial at the time but which in the long term is destructive to the interests of both sides.

We reached the crunch point in early 1985 when, I believe, Ministers were starting to think about pulling the plug. My right hon. Friend the Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) and his successor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger), decided instead to give GEC a further chance and set about developing a competitive framework and a fixed price basis for payment. It is arguable that at this stage the Ministry of Defence was leading GEC up the garden path.

I shall now turn to a review of progress since the end of March. The new competitive framework has justified itself. GEC was left to its own devices, but with the chill winds of competition blowing, minds at long last became concentrated. By September, progress had certainly been made, but in his statement my right hon. Friend makes it clear that the customer, the RAF, even at that time did not feel that it was good enough. We have learned directly or indirectly that on all major criteria — range, tracking, computer power and filtering — performance was below par. That is not in dispute. GEC argued that the performance was quite close to specification but the RAF argued that it was a long way off. There is some common ground, probably more than appears, because the two sides are measuring things in different ways. It was not the performance that persuaded my right hon. Friend but the expectation, since he had to be mindful of the importance of getting the equipment into use early.

I should now like to turn to my right hon. Friend's comments after the test flight. He and my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement say that although the system works in the lay sense of the word, it does not work in the sense of being up to scratch. I hope that my right hon. Friend will agree that even with the best will in the world his public comment on television aroused quite false optimism in GEC. Ministers now say that there were frequent breakdowns in the system and that often, equipment which worked on take-off did not work on landing, and that on that basis they had no confidence in the consistency of the equipment and, therefore, its capacity for early retirement. With hindsight they should surely have sounded a warning note.

A factor in the decision thus faced by the Cabinet appears to be that delay in the supply of the AEW meant that we would not be able to plug our defence gap. AWACS was far from ideal, but it was working and available. Nimrod was crude. All hon. Members will understand that the Cabinet faced a difficult choice and the RAF took the view that enough was enough. I am sure that most of my hon. Friends will agree that one cannot overrule the RAF on a matter of confidence in the equipment that it has to use.

My hon. Friends representing Hertfordshire constituencies are especially disappointed at what happened in the closing days of this tale. Although there is a history of poor project management, enough changes had been made to prompt me vigorously to argue for an extension, at least until March. Unfortunately, quite apart from the growing impatience and scepticism of the RAF, my right hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior) decided to weigh in with an outspoken attack on the evaluation system. That was profoundly unhelpful and caused the die to be cast. Rightly or wrongly, the RAF had made up its mind and the Cabinet backed the unanimous choice of its scientific advisers. Given those facts it would be a mistake to prolong the agony.

Mr. Prior: Why on earth should my hon. Friend think that a statement I made last Sunday had a damaging effect on getting an extension of a few weeks or a couple of months for the assessment? His remarks are not what I would expect from my hon. Friend, and if it is any help to him I can tell him now that GEC offered to pay to the middle of January so that a further assessment could be made.

Mr. Jones: I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for that intervention. One of the consequences of the information that came out over the weekend was not only damage to the reputation of this piece of equipment and to the chances of continuing with work on it, but also damage to the credibility of GEC on a number of other fronts in which I have a constituency interest and an interest in another sense.

We have spent a great deal of time squabbling about what caused the problem in the past. Surely now we can at least spare a few words for the future. GEC has a great record in many ways and it has brought a great many other products to fruition which are selling well in the world. I hope that when my hon. Friend the Minister replies he will be able to say something about the alternative forms of radar system which it may be possible to develop over the coming years and that that will give hope to this sector of the economy, because that is what is needed.

9.40 pm

Mr. Kevin McNamara (Kingston upon Hull, North): We have had a remarkable debate this evening, but the most remarkable speech of all was that which came from the right hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior). Basically, he rubbished the whole of the Government's case. There is a duty upon the Minister when he replies to answer point by point, in detail, the questions that were raised by the right hon. Gentleman on cost, because that is fundamental to the case that was given.

Secondly, there is a real duty upon the Minister to justify why, even at this late stage, we cannot have an independent assessment. An extra few weeks, at GEC's cost, would be nothing to settle that matter. It is not as though independent assessors have not been used before. They were brought in last year by the Minister to work out technical details with the Department at Malvern. There was a suggestion within the Minister's Department that that should be done again this year.

There was a suggestion, as late as October, as reported in The Guardian this weekend, that CAP (Scientific), which helped to carry out the inquiry last year, should be brought in again. That was suggested by the risk assessment committee. The Guardian reports:

> "The ministry's 'risk assessment' committee—the group charged with assessing Nimrod's ability to meet the RAF's cardinal points specification—had already approached the British computer specialists CAP (Scientific) and two American radar specialists when it was instructed by another section of the ministry, probably the Procurement Executive, to drop the idea."

Therefore, the risk assessment committee wanted that additional support for its judgment, or its criticism for that judgment, and the Government were not prepared to give it or even to think about it.

Dr. Hampson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. McNamara: No. With the greatest respect to the hon. Gentleman, I have surrendered a lot of my time so that everybody could speak, and if I give way once I shall have to do so again.

If the people who carried out that technical assessment felt that they needed it, one cannot but come to the conclusion that there has been that degree of hostility to Nimrod in the Ministry since 1977 such that it was not prepared at any time or any occasion to think again.

But the decision on the contract, as the right hon. Member for Waveney pointed out, despite his tremendous defence of his company on television earlier this evening, has meant that we have told the world that, in one of the most sensitive areas of high technology and defence, Britain cannot make it. That is what we have said and that is what the Government are doing to British industry. They are saying that Britain cannot make it.

Last year the Government threw away our helicopter technology. Last Christmas there was one present—Westland helicopter technology to the United States. This Christmas there is another—early warning technology to the United States. I wonder, if the Prime Minister delays her election until 1988, what she will give them next year.

The Government say that this is not a strategically vital industry and that Westland was not a strategically vital industry. None of them are strategically vital industries, but if they are all given away together there will be no industry. That is what the Government are doing in our important defence base. There is no way that that can be justified.

The only thing that the Government are prepared to proceed with is the defence of a decision to purchase a nuclear warhead and develop that in Britain. But airborne early warning is far more fundamental to Britain's defence than any Trident system. The problem is that the Government, the Prime Minister and the Ministry of Defence are just a lot of nuclear junkies. They are hooked on Trident and everything else in our conventional defence suffers as a result. Airborne early warning, frigates and the

[Mr. McNamara]

Army all go because of the attitude of the right hon. Gentleman the Secretary of State and his right hon. Friends.

We then turn to the argument of offset. The Secretary of State said that Boeing is an honourable company. He promised that it will meet its offset commitments—£130 for every £100. That seems too good to be true until we examine it. The Minister has said that Boeing will be contractually committed, but, in fact, it is committed to nothing by contract, not one job. The Minister did not say whether the non-binding contract is to last beyond the delivery of aircraft or whether it will go on during the life of the aircraft. Can he tell us that? Does it cover spares and replacements or does it end with the delivery?

On top of that, we are told that Boeing always honours its commitments. We should ask the Saudis how they felt when they were promised great things from Boeing. They were promised great offsets for their purchases. They were offered nine tremendous schemes: aerospace maintenance, advanced electronics centres, computer systems, digital telecommunications, a facility for manufacturing Boeing Vertol, a power engineering centre, an applied biotechnology centre and an applied technology centre. Of all those schemes, only two, the cheapest, have got off the ground. That is the truth about Boeing at present and the way in which it honours its commitments. As my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) pointed out, since the Glenn amendment there will be very little chance of those things coming through.

I next want to come to the comments of the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). The Prime Minister said in reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) earlier this week that it is the opinion of the RAF, the people who are responsible for the defence of our country, that counts. Does the Minister believe that? Does he believe that it is the opinion of the generals that matter and that it is only they who will press the button? That is what the Government are saying.

Mr. Geoffrey Dickens (Littleborough and Saddleworth) rose——

Mr. McNamara: Are the Government abrogating the whole of their political responsibility? We know that it is not true. We know that the Government have made political decisions time and time again over defence contracts and this is nothing but a political decision on which £50 million was spent to buy time, as the right hon. Member for Waveney said.

The hon. Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) said that it is civil servants who are to blame on this contract. We can all blame civil servants. Nobody loves them, everybody hates them. However, this contract has gone on for nine years. For two of those years there was a Labour Government and we bear our share of the responsibility. However, for seven years we have had a Tory Government in control. It has gone on for seven years under four Secretaries of State — the right hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Pym), Sir John Nott, the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine) and now the right hon. Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger). They were all responsible for what is going on. They knew that when Tornado was introduced we would need an airborne early warning system to make it work effectively and properly. In spite of that, they were not prepared to cancel Nimrod or to put the impetus behind it to ensure that it was available when Tornado came on stream. Therefore, when we have our first squadron of Tornado interceptors next year they will be crippled because over the past seven years not one Tory Secretary of State has been prepared to grasp the nettle of airborne early warning and make sure that the RAF has the use of the potential of that system. Now they are doing it at twice the expense — — [Interruption.] Yes, Conservative Members do well to cheer. The Government are reacting too late. There has been vulnerability and it will remain for another five or six years. There was no reason why we should not have gone ahead with Nimrod and ironed out the problems that existed.

The Government have announced today the selling out of British jobs, of British technology and of British exports. More importantly, they have left a grave area of vulnerability in our air defences over the past seven years. For that reason rather than all the others, the Opposition will divide the House.

9.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. Archie Hamilton): The Government have been accused of many things tonight, and among the most ludicrous of the accusations is that we are reluctant to buy British. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Amery) said, the British solution would be popular. My hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones) said that he believed that the Government would buy British if that were viable. Most of our equipment budget is spent in the United Kingdom, and the GEC group of companies has about £1·8 billion-worth of MOD business on its books, excluding Nimrod.

The House knows also that the British taxpayer has spent about £660 million in cash—worth £930 million in today's money — on Nimrod. Nothing could demonstrate more clearly the commitment of Ministers, MOD officials and the Royal Air Force to ensure that the GEC AEW succeeded and that we could buy British.

It gave my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State no pleasure, and it gives me none, to have to tell the House that, despite this commitment, and despite the expenditure of these large sums, Nimrod does not at present meet the specification required by the RAF, and we have no confidence that it will do so within the time scale laid down.

I do not need to remind the House that the Soviet threat is ever-present and increasing. My hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood, (Mr. Wilkinson) recognises this as well as anyone. Despite its economic weakness, the Soviet Union has created as fearsome a fighting machine as the world has ever known, and one that far exceeds its legitimate requirements for defence. It used to be said that although the Soviet Union had greatly superior numbers in troops, tanks, aircraft and many other armaments, the West had a commanding superiority in technology. This is becoming less and less true every day. For example, it is highly likely that the Soviet Union will soon be able to deploy a new generation of cruise missiles that will fly faster and be much more difficult — [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Many questions have been raised in the debate and the Minister is answering them.

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was saying that the Soviet Union will soon be able to deploy a new generation of cruise missiles that will fly faster and be much more difficult to identify than any that can be deployed by either side today. That is why the need for a new look-down AEW system, which was endorsed by Ministers in 1977, is becoming daily more essential for our defence capability.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House earlier today, AWACS meets, or comes close to meeting, the operational standards set in 1977, and the Nimrod AEW, regrettably, does not. Nor is it likely to do so within the required time scale. Indeed, in several respects AWACS significantly exceeds our requirements and so gives us confidence that it will be able to deal with the sort of threat that we anticipate in coming years.

I can assure my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood that we shall fit the CFM56 engine in the E3A. I am confident that the engine will achieve a higher performance.

GEC has made progress in recent months—I fully acknowledge this—in producing a clearer picture, but we found that the system was seeing rather less than 50 per cent. of available targets at any one time. I disagree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath): it has not solved all the problems. In addition, its radar detection range was significantly down. False tracks were still appearing and mean track life was less than half of that required.

Mr. Heath: I did not say that it solved all the problems. I said that it had made remarkable progress in nine months. From the company's point of view and the expert advice it has, it will be able to deal with the rest of the problems, certainly as far as AWACS are concerned, in the time schedule.

Mr. Hamilton: The problem has been that it has made advances in some areas and difficulties have cropped up in others. As the House can readily see, the difference is not marginal. Measured against ASR400, the gap in performance of the two systems is wide. My right hon. Friend the Member for Pavilion alluded to that.

GEC says that it never undertook to have a perfect working system at this time and that it has every confidence that it will be able to produce a system that will approach the required standard in three years. That is the company's view, but it is not supported by the judgment of the Ministry of Defence technicians, and their judgment is unanimous. I do not think that the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) will have the satisfaction of seeing these people crawl out from the woodwork in years to come.

I am glad to see the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) represent the alliance all on his own. He was very kind and praised my right hon. Friend for his courage in taking this decision. I thank him for that, but I hope that he will not mind me saying how much I regret that there is a horrible rumour going around that the alliance will show its courage tonight by abstaining.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Prior) and the hon. Member for Linlithgow referred to the 3,845 modifications that have taken place on the Nimrod programme since 1979. Perhaps I should explain to the House what a modification is. Each and every change that has been proved necessary to make the equipment during its development programme is called a modification. So the figure of 3,845 is a measure of the complexity of the process of trial and error that is inevitably characteristic of the development programme. Needless to say, it is not a sign that the customer's requirement has changed. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear that the only change in the requirement has been the addition of in-flight refuelling.

I now refer to the accusation that we have moved the goalposts, that we have altered the specification and so made GEC's task impossible. That has remained completely unchanged with the exception of in-flight refuelling.

Lessons have been learned. I totally agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Waveney who said that he hoped there will be no more cost-plus contracts. I agree also with the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland who said that there were weak contractual arrangements. That is certainly true.

Mr. McNamara: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hamilton: I have only three minutes left, so I shall not give way.

In general, it is false to ridicule the offset arrangements, as some hon. Members have done. The Americans, and Boeing in particular, have a good record in fulfilling offset commitments of this sort. The offset programme will involve high technology work across a broad range of activities. Past projects have yielded highly successful offsets. The surface and submarine versions of the McDonnell Douglas Harpoon are the most striking. Almost £700 million of contracted work was achieved against a commitment of £300 million. Boeing's agreement for Chinook, negotiated in 1978 with a Labour Government, specified not a binding arrangement, but a "best endeavour" of 30 per cent. It delivered £100 million, and that was well in excess of what was done.

In its recent confused statements on defence policy, the Labour party favoured strong conventional defence. On the first occasion that this new-found commitment is put to the test, when the Government have to take a difficult and expensive decision in the interests of stronger conventional defence, it is found to be as hollow and empty as we have come to expect of every other election promise from the Labour party.

Another extraordinary attitude is the Opposition's hostility to the Royal Air Force. I believe that the RAF's views on defence procurement are very important, but the Opposition carry on like first world war generals regarding it as unnecessary to consult the poor bloody infantry about the conduct of the war. I hope that my right hon. and hon. Friends will join me in voting against this measure.

Mr. John McWilliam (Blaydon): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker——

Question put:—

The House divided: Ayes 170, Noes 339.

Division No. 48] [10 pm

AYES

Adams, Allen (Paisley N)	Bell, Stuart
Anderson, Donald	Benn, Rt Hon Tony
Archer, Rt Hon Peter	Bennett, A. *(Dent'n & Red'sh)
Ashley, Rt Hon Jack	Bermingham, Gerald
Ashton, Joe	Bidwell, Sydney
Atkinson, N. (Tottenham)	Blair, Anthony
Barnett, Guy	Boothroyd, Miss Betty
Barron, Kevin	Boyes, Roland
Beckett, Mrs Margaret	Bray, Dr Jeremy

Brown, Gordon (D'f'mline E)
Brown, N. (N'c'tle-u-Tyne E)
Brown, R. (N'c'tle-u-Tyne N)
Brown, Ron (E'burgh, Leith)
Buchan, Norman
Caborn, Richard
Callaghan, Jim (Heyw'd & M)
Canavan, Dennis
Carter-Jones, Lewis
Clark, Dr David (S Shields)
Clarke, Thomas
Clay, Robert
Clelland, David Gordon
Clwyd, Mrs Ann
Cohen, Harry
Cook, Frank (Stockton North)
Cook, Robin F. (Livingston)
Corbett, Robin
Corbyn, Jeremy
Cox, Thomas (Tooting)
Craigen, J. M.
Crowther, Stan
Cunliffe, Lawrence
Cunningham, Dr John
Dalyell, Tam
Davies, Rt Hon Denzil (L'lli)
Davies, Ronald (Caerphilly)
Davis, Terry (B'ham, H'ge H'l)
Deakins, Eric
Dewar, Donald
Dixon, Donald
Dobson, Frank
Dormand, Jack
Douglas, Dick
Dover, Den
Duffy, A. E. P.
Dunwoody, Hon Mrs G.
Eadie, Alex
Eastham, Ken
Edwards, Bob (W'h'mpt'n SE)
Evans, John (St. Helens N)
Fatchett, Derek
Faulds, Andrew
Field, Frank (Birkenhead)
Fields, T. (L'pool Broad Gn)
Fisher, Mark
Flannery, Martin
Foot, Rt Hon Michael
Forrester, John
Foster, Derek
Foulkes, George
Fraser, J. (Norwood)
Freeson, Rt Hon Reginald
Garrett, W. E.
George, Bruce
Godman, Dr Norman
Golding, Mrs Llin
Gould, Bryan
Hamilton, James (M'well N)
Hamilton, W. W. (Fife Central)
Hardy, Peter
Harrison, Rt Hon Walter
Hart, Rt Hon Dame Judith
Hattersley, Rt Hon Roy
Healey, Rt Hon Denis
Heddle, John
Hogg, N. (C'nauld & Kilsyth)
Holland, Stuart (Vauxhall)
Home Robertson, John
Howarth, George (Knowsley, N)
Howell, Rt Hon D. (S'heath)
Hoyle, Douglas
Hughes, Robert (Aberdeen N)
Hughes, Roy (Newport East)
Hughes, Sean (Knowsley S)
Janner, Hon Greville
John, Brynmor
Jones, Barry (Alyn & Deeside)
Kinnock, Rt Hon Neil
Lambie, David
Lamond, James
Leighton, Ronald
Lewis, Ron (Carlisle)
Lewis, Terence (Worsley)
Litherland, Robert
Lloyd, Tony (Stretford)
Lofthouse, Geoffrey
Loyden, Edward
McDonald, Dr Oonagh
McKelvey, William
MacKenzie, Rt Hon Gregor
McNamara, Kevin
McTaggart, Robert
McWilliam, John
Madden, Max
Marek, Dr John
Martin, Michael
Maxton, John
Maynard, Miss Joan
Meacher, Michael
Michie, William
Millan, Rt Hon Bruce
Mitchell, Austin (G't Grimsby)
Morris, Rt Hon A. (W'shawe)
Morris, Rt Hon J. (Aberavon)
Nellist, David
O'Brien, William
O'Neill, Martin
Orme, Rt Hon Stanley
Park, George
Parry, Robert
Patchett, Terry
Pavitt, Laurie
Pendry, Tom
Pike, Peter
Powell, Raymond (Ogmore)
Prescott, John
Radice, Giles
Randall, Stuart
Raynsford, Nick
Redmond, Martin
Rees, Rt Hon M. (Leeds S)
Richardson, Ms Jo
Roberts, Ernest (Hackney N)
Robertson, George
Robinson, G. (Coventry NW)
Rogers, Allan
Rooker, J. W.
Ross, Ernest (Dundee W)
Rowlands, Ted
Sheerman, Barry
Sheldon, Rt Hon R.
Shore, Rt Hon Peter
Short, Ms Clare (Ladywood)
Short, Mrs R.(W'hampt'n NE)
Silkin, Rt Hon J.
Skinner, Dennis
Smith, Rt Hon J. (M'ds E)
Snape, Peter
Soley, Clive
Spearing, Nigel
Straw, Jack
Thomas, Dr R. (Carmarthen)
Thompson, J. (Wansbeck)
Wardell, Gareth (Gower)
Wareing, Robert
Weetch, Ken
Welsh, Michael
Williams, Rt Hon A.
Winnick, David
Woodall, Alec
Young, David (Bolton SE)

Tellers for the Ayes:
Mr. Allen McKay and
Mr. Chris Smith.

NOES

Adley, Robert
Aitken, Jonathan
Alexander, Richard
Alison, Rt Hon Michael
Ancram, Michael
Arnold, Tom
Ashby, David
Aspinwall, Jack
Atkins, Rt Hon Sir H.
Atkins, Robert (South Ribble)
Atkinson, David (B'm'th E)
Baker, Rt Hon K. (Mole Vall'y)
Baker, Nicholas (Dorset N)
Baldry, Tony
Banks, Robert (Harrogate)
Batiste, Spencer
Bellingham, Henry
Bendall, Vivian
Bennett, Rt Hon Sir Frederic
Benyon, William
Best, Keith
Biffen, Rt Hon John
Bigge-Davison, Sir John
Blackburn, John
Blaker, Rt Hon Sir Peter
Body, Sir Richard
Bonsor, Sir Nicholas
Bottomley, Peter
Bottomley, Mrs Virginia
Bowden, A. (Brighton K'to'n)
Bowden, Gerald (Dulwich)
Boyson, Dr Rhodes
Braine, Rt Hon Sir Bernard
Brandon-Bravo, Martin
Bright, Graham
Brinton, Tim
Brittan, Rt Hon Leon
Brooke, Hon Peter
Brown, M. (Brigg & Cl'thpes)
Bruinvels, Peter
Bryan, Sir Paul
Buchanan-Smith, Rt Hon A.
Buck, Sir Antony
Budgen, Nick
Bulmer, Esmond
Burt, Alistair
Butcher, John
Butler, Rt Hon Sir Adam
Butterfill, John
Carlisle, John (Luton N)
Carlisle, Kenneth (Lincoln)
Cash, William
Chalker, Mrs Lynda
Channon, Rt Hon Paul
Chapman, Sydney
Chope, Christopher
Clark, Hon A. (Plym'th S'n)
Clark, Dr Michael (Rochford)
Clark, Sir W. (Croydon S)
Clarke, Rt Hon K. (Rushcliffe)
Cockeram, Eric
Colvin, Michael
Conway, Derek
Coombs, Simon
Cope, John
Cormack, Patrick
Corrie, John
Couchman, James
Cranborne, Viscount
Critchley, Julian
Crouch, David
Currie, Mrs Edwina
Dickens, Geoffrey
Dicks, Terry
Dorrell, Stephen
Douglas-Hamilton, Lord J.
Dover, Den
du Cann, Rt Hon Sir Edward
Dunn, Robert
Durant, Tony
Edwards, Rt Hon N. (P'broke)
Evennett, David
Eyre, Sir Reginald
Fallon, Michael
Favell, Anthony
Fletcher, Alexander
Fookes, Miss Janet
Forman, Nigel
Forsyth, Michael (Stirling)
Forth, Eric
Fowler, Rt Hon Norman
Fox, Sir Marcus
Franks, Cecil
Freeman, Roger
Fry, Peter
Gale, Roger
Galley, Roy
Gardiner, George (Reigate)
Gardner, Sir Edward (Fylde)
Glyn, Dr Alan
Goodhart, Sir Philip
Goodlad, Alastair
Gorst, John
Gow, Ian
Grant, Sir Anthony
Greenway, Harry
Gregory, Conal
Griffiths, Sir Eldon
Griffiths, Peter (Portsm'th N)
Grist, Ian
Ground, Patrick
Grylls, Michael
Gummer, Rt Hon John S
Hamilton, Hon A. (Epsom)
Hamilton, Neil (Tatton)
Hanley, Jeremy
Hannam, John
Hargreaves, Kenneth
Harris, David
Harvey, Robert
Haselhurst, Alan
Havers, Rt Hon Sir Michael
Hawkins, C. (High Peak)
Hawkins, Sir Paul (N'folk SW)
Hayes, J.
Hayhoe, Rt Hon Barney
Hayward, Robert
Heathcoat-Amory, David
Heddle, John
Henderson, Barry
Heseltine, Rt Hon Michael
Hickmet, Richard
Hicks, Robert
Higgins, Rt Hon Terence L.
Hill, James
Hind, Kenneth
Hirst, Michael
Hogg, Hon Douglas (Gr'th'm)
Holland, Sir Philip (Gedling)
Holt, Richard
Hordern, Sir Peter
Howard, Michael
Howarth, Alan (Strat'd-on-A)
Howarth, Gerald (Cannock)
Howe, Rt Hon Sir Geoffrey
Howell, Rt Hon D. (G'ldford)
Howell, Ralph (Norfolk, N)
Hubbard-Miles, Peter
Hunt, David (Wirral W)
Hunt, John (Ravensbourne)
Hunter, Andrew
Hurd, Rt Hon Douglas
Jackson, Robert
Jenkin, Rt Hon Patrick
Jessel, Toby
Johnson Smith, Sir Geoffrey
Jones, Gwilym (Cardiff N)
Jones, Robert (Herts W)

Jopling, Rt Hon Michael
Joseph, Rt Hon Sir Keith
Kellett-Bowman, Mrs Elaine
Kershaw, Sir Anthony
Key, Robert
King, Rt Hon Tom
Knight, Greg (Derby N)
Knight, Dame Jill (Edgbaston)
Knowles, Michael
Lamont, Rt Hon Norman
Lang, Ian
Latham, Michael
Lawler, Geoffrey
Lawrence, Ivan
Lawson, Rt Hon Nigel
Lee, John (Pendle)
Leigh, Edward (Gainsbor'gh)
Lennox-Boyd, Hon Mark
Lewis, Sir Kenneth (Staml'd)
Lightbown, David
Lilley, Peter
Lloyd, Sir Ian (Havant)
Lloyd, Peter (Fareham)
Lord, Michael
Luce, Rt Hon Richard
Lyell, Nicholas
McCurley, Mrs Anna
Macfarlane, Neil
MacGregor, Rt Hon John
MacKay, Andrew (Berkshire)
MacKay, John (Argyll & Bute)
Maclean, David John
McLoughlin, Patrick
McNair-Wilson, M. (N'bury)
McNair-Wilson, P. (New F'st)
McQuarrie, Albert
Major, John
Malins, Humfrey
Malone, Gerald
Maples, John
Marlow, Antony
Marshall, Michael (Arundel)
Mates, Michael
Mather, Carol
Maude, Hon Francis
Mawhinney, Dr Brian
Maxwell-Hyslop, Robin
Mellor, David
Merchant, Piers
Meyer, Sir Anthony
Miller, Hal (B'grove)
Mills, Iain (Meriden)
Miscampbell, Norman
Mitchell, David (Hants NW)
Moate, Roger
Monro, Sir Hector
Montgomery, Sir Fergus
Moore, Rt Hon John
Morrison, Hon P. (Chester)
Moynihan, Hon C.
Murphy, Christopher
Neale, Gerrard
Needham, Richard
Nelson, Anthony
Neubert, Michael
Newton, Tony
Nicholls, Patrick
Normanton, Tom
Norris, Steven
Onslow, Cranley
Oppenheim, Phillip
Oppenheim, Rt Hon Mrs S.
Osborn, Sir John
Ottaway, Richard
Page, Sir John (Harrow W)
Page, Richard (Herts SW)
Patten, Christopher (Bath)
Patten, J. (Oxf W & Abgdn)
Pattie, Geoffrey
Pawsey, James
Peacock, Mrs Elizabeth
Percival, Rt Hon Sir Ian
Pollock, Alexander
Porter, Barry
Portillo, Michael
Powell, William (Corby)
Powley, John
Price, Sir David
Proctor, K. Harvey
Pym, Rt Hon Francis
Raffan, Keith
Raison, Rt Hon Timothy
Rathbone, Tim
Rees, Rt Hon Peter (Dover)
Rhodes James, Robert
Rhys Williams, Sir Brandon
Ridley, Rt Hon Nicholas
Ridsdale, Sir Julian
Rifkind, Rt Hon Malcolm
Rippon, Rt Hon Geoffrey
Roberts, Wyn (Conwy)
Robinson, Mark (N'port W)
Roe, Mrs Marion
Rossi, Sir Hugh
Rost, Peter
Rumbold, Mrs Angela
Sackville, Hon Thomas
Sainsbury, Hon Timothy
St. John-Stevas, Rt Hon N.
Sayeed, Jonathan
Shaw, Giles (Pudsey)
Shaw, Sir Michael (Scarb')
Shelton, William (Streatham)
Shepherd, Colin (Hereford)
Shepherd, Richard (Aldridge)
Sheraby, Michael
Silvester, Fred
Sims, Roger
Smith, Sir Dudley (Warwick)
Smith, Tim (Beaconsfield)
Soames, Hon Nicholas
Speed, Keith
Speller, Tony
Spicer, Jim (Dorset W)
Spicer, Michael (S Worcs)
Squire, Robin
Stanbrook, Ivor
Stanley, Rt Hon John
Steen, Anthony
Stern, Michael
Stevens, Lewis (Nuneaton)
Stewart, Allan (Eastwood)
Stewart, Andrew (Sherwood)
Stewart, Ian (Hertf'dshire N)
Stradling Thomas, Sir John
Sumberg, David
Tapsell, Sir Peter
Taylor, John (Solihull)
Taylor, Teddy (S'end E)
Tebbit, Rt Hon Norman
Temple-Morris, Peter
Terlezki, Stefan
Thatcher, Rt Hon Mrs M.
Thomas, Rt Hon Peter
Thompson, Donald (Calder V)
Thompson, Patrick (N'lch N)
Thorne, Neil (Ilford S)
Thornton, Malcolm
Thurnham, Peter
Townend, John (Bridlington)
Townsend, Cyril D. (B'heath)
Tracey, Richard
Trippier, David
Trotter, Neville
Twinn, Dr Ian
van Straubenzee, Sir W.
Vaughan, Sir Gerard
Viggers, Peter
Waddington, David
Wakeham, Rt Hon John
Waldegrave, Hon William
Walden, George
Wall, Sir Patrick
Waller, Gary
Walters, Dennis
Ward, John
Wardle, C. (Bexhill)
Watson, John
Watts, John
Wells, Sir John (Maidstone)
Wheeler, John
Whitfield, John
Whitney, Raymond
Wiggin, Jerry
Wilkinson, John
Wolfson, Mark
Wood, Timothy
Woodcock, Michael
Yeo, Tim
Young, Sir George (Acton)
Younger, Rt Hon George

Tellers for the Noes:
Mr. Robert Boscawen and
Mr. Tristan Garel-Jones.

Question accordingly negatived.

Social Security

Postponed proceedings on Question,

That the draft Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.

resumed.

Question again proposed.

10.14 pm

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: I am grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to resume my speech — [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will hon. Members who are not remaining for this debate please leave quietly?

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: Before the House moved on to other business, I was explaining why, in my opinion, our reliance on selectivity has ended in failure. I gave three reasons. The first is because it goes against the spirit of the age: it is wrong that we should divide the nation into first class and second class citizens. Secondly, it is contrary to the Government's central precepts by which we try to encourage our citizens to work and save. If we have some 14 million people dependent on means-tested benefits, they are people who have no particular reason to save and not too much reason to work. Finally, it has ended in failure because the system is leading rapidly to administrative breakdown.

This week the London Citizens Advice Bureaux have produced a report which is comprehensive and extremely compelling reading. I hope that my right hon. and hon. Friends in the Department of Health and Social Security will look extremely carefully at its findings. I think it would be true to say that hon. Members who represent London know that what is written in the report is unfortunately all too true.

What the report describes is the chaos of the administrative system under which we handle the supplementary benefits and the case work and personal interviews involved. I have often brought the attention of the House to the fact that in the administration of supplementary benefit and national insurance the staff of the departments are required to make more than 90 million manual entries every week.

The report of the bureaux, with telling photographs, shows the type of premises in which the face-to-face interviews must take place. It draws attention to the staff shortages and the difficulty of giving people adequate training to handle the enormously complex system upon which we rely to make selectivity work. It draws attention to the number of mistakes that are made, inevitably, in interpreting the rules. It shows the tragic amount of waiting time and the inhuman conditions in which people are obliged to take their turn for an interview in order to make their claim.

One of the compelling reasons why we must hasten to abandon our reliance on selectivity is the enormous adminstrative cost and the amount of time which dedicated officials have to give to produce the results, which can give no satisfaction to them or to the claimants.

The system is intended to relieve need in a human way, but in fact it is creating intense hardship, bitterness, uncertainty and delay. No wonder that we find that a rapidly growing area of crime is crimes of violence against staff in the offices of the DHSS.

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): Surely one of the most important skills that has to be developed is that of interviewing the clients. This is where training is not as good as it ought to be. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will agree that it is essential that these interviewing skills are of the highest order.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: I might be disposed to accept the hon. Gentleman's opinion if it were not for the fact that, from my observation, the system has to be changed radically. We cannot continue to run the welfare state to provide a basic income guarantee founded on face-to-face interviews for millions of claimants.

However much effort we divert into training of staff, the system has proved itself to be unacceptable and unworkable. We must move away from the reliance on selectivity that is dividing the nation and producing, as I have said before, a sub-culture of people in our society —a large element of the nation—for whom the impulse to save and work is being rapidly undermined.

When looking at what the House is trying to do when uprating these orders and keeping the machinery going while it slowly sinks into the mud, we should ask ourselves, "Could we place more reliance on the insurance principle, and could national insurance be revived?" In an earlier intervention, it was pointed out that national insurance benefits are not enough. That is one of the reasons why we have such a large number of claimants who need to apply for supplementary benefit. Their national insurance contributions have not procured them a benefit which is enough for them to rely on; so they have to apply for additional benefits.

National insurance was from its inception under the difficulty that it needed a Government subsidy, and the Government subsidy appears once again in these orders, although it is being reduced quite arbitrarily from one percentage figure to another. I do not think that there is any rational explanation for why the Treasury contribution to the national insurance fund was what it was last year or is what it will be next year. The whole conception of national insurance has cracked, because the money that can be produced by flat rate contributions is not large enough. When, some 10 years ago, we went over to earnings-related contributions, we said goodbye to the insurance principle in any actuarial sense.

We have produced a system in which the yield of the income tax has to subsidise the welfare state. For some reason best known to the Treasury, it insists on clinging to the idea that people's national insurance contribution and their income tax contribution are completely separate and that what one pays in income tax goes into one fund and what one pays in national insurance contributions and what the employer pays in national insurance contributions goes into a completely different fund. I suggest that that administrative nonsense should end.

National insurance has become a sham. It would be far better to recognise that we are running a system which, in effect, is taking from each according to his capacity and giving to each according to his need. It might be said that that is a growing-up of the whole conception of national insurance and putting in its place gradually, and perhaps half consciously, a life-cycle system of obligation and entitlement. People draw benefit at the beginning of their lives when they are not able to make a contribution; they make their contributions while they are of working age; and they revert to the status of claimants on retirement and take their money back. I am attracted by the idea of the life-cycle of contribution and entitlement, and I believe that we want to build on it.

Looking at it from the administrative point of view, one of the axioms that my right hon. and hon. Friends must obey is the need to eliminate personal casework in very large quantities and quickly. If they do not accept that, let them consult the offices of the DHSS which are facing the problem of the monumental volumes of casework which they have to do at the moment. I consider that we should find large categories of claimants who can be handled by computer, week in, week out, without their situations being deemed to be continuously changing and needing to be reassessed. Child benefit is an example that we ought to follow when dealing with pensioners and other large categories of people.

I hope that, before next year when we consider orders such as these yet again, the Government will commit themselves to a wholly new approach. I think that we want simultaneous reform of income tax payments and allowances; national insurance contributions and benefits; housing allowances, subsidies and reliefs of every kind; and supplementary benefit. The whole system of redistribution of income in this country needs to be put on to a modern footing which is socially sound and administratively effective.

I should like to make this recommendation. We should move to a computer-based basic income guarantee which is as simple as it can possibly be, based on universal benefits and a universal requirement to contribute from income. It should be introduced in the first instance on a revenue-neutral basis. I would like to increase child benefit substantially, at least for the under-fives.

Apart from that, I am not suggesting major changes in the amount of the individual family's spending power from what they have at the moment. If we were to introduce a system of the kind I am recommending, it would constitute something which every family would be able to rely upon, whether in work or not—about half the equivalent of supplementary benefit rates at the present time.

This, I suggest, would be an extremely liberating process because it would then be up to the claimants themselves to select whether they really needed supplementary benefit or whether they could manage without. Those who had the spirit and the independence to take part-time work or to manage for a time on their savings or to make other arrangements to carry on from week to week would not need to go through the humiliation and the misery of claiming supplementary benefit. They would be people who could rely on their own resources and initiative, and would be free to act like other first class citizens to maintain themselves as best they could be their earnings or by whatever means they chose. There would be no hardship to the people who felt it necessary to apply for supplementary benefit because they would be perfectly entitled, as they are now, to say that they needed the other half of their benefit, which would be reliant on individual case work. I do not know how many people, if they were offered half supplementary benefit without any means test or question, would opt to claim the balance and how many of them would be content with the half benefit. But of course there would be a substantial saving if one is looking at it purely from the point of view of Exchequer outgoings. If there were 100,000 or 500,000 claimants who decided to opt not to insist on claiming the balance, it would allow us to improve their benefits as time went by, or to make other dispositions in the balance of obligation and entitlement that I have spoken of.

I beg my right hon. and hon. Friends to realise that we cannot go on as we are. There has got to be fresh thinking, and this is the type of approach which is in line with public expectations.

It is also practical in terms of computer technology. I hope that this idea will be considered. It is a way of restoring to people an incentive, an encouragement to work and to save, giving them back their self-reliance and taking the terrible burden of casework off the staff of the DHSS.

10.27 pm

Mrs. Elizabeth Shields (Ryedale): I shall refer briefly to two of the instruments in particular. First, I shall mention child benefit. The alliance certainly welcomes the increase of 15p in child benefit, but there is no real reason to congratulate the Government because that sum fails to make good the 1985 cut. That would require a 15p increase.

Such an increase has been supported by many different people inside and outside Parliament since the child poverty figures issued by the Child Poverty Action Group show how the fiscal system has during the past 25 years tended to move against families with children.

It is a fact that DHSS figures show that in 1983 400,000 children lived below supplementary benefit level and nearly 4 million lived on an income of up to only 40 per cent. above the supplementary benefit level. Yet child benefit is a much more cost effective way of helping those families where the head of the family is in work than making cuts in direct taxes, especially for the 250,000 working families with children whose incomes are below the tax threshold. It is also more effective than family income supplement which reaches only half of those eligible and which aggravates the poverty trap.

The Secretary of State said earlier this autumn that child benefit is a "good, sensible way of bringing help to families."

I agree with that, but the Minister does not really demonstrate his fondness for child benefit. Action, as we all know, speaks louder than words. Child benefit is worth less today than the combined value of family allowances and child tax allowances were in 1955. In the case of the second and subsequent children it is £2·70 less.

Secondly, £200 million has been cut from the housing benefit scheme since its introduction and the present housing benefit uprating marks two further cuts amounting to a total of £68 million. The rent rebate taper which is the difference between the needs allowance and the income of a family has been increased from about 17 per cent. or 21 per cent. to 29 per cent. and now stands at 33 per cent. There could be even higher tapers under the 1986 Act, thus decreasing the housing benefit yet again.

The Secretary of State for Social Services says that the average losses will be small, but averages must conceal much greater losses for some people. The Child Poverty Action Group has calculated that a couple with two children earning £110 gross, in receipt of family income supplement and housing benefit, and paying average rent and rates will lose £1·47 a week. The Minister knows that people claiming housing benefit can ill afford to lose this money, or any similar sum.

[Mrs. Elizabeth Shields]

There are allied problems, such as those concerning students, with the cuts in housing benefit. Because of the shortage of accommodation in the areas around a university or college campus, students are frequently asked to pay rent during the long summer vacation to retain a specific flat or room in the following year. Only discretionary housing benefit is payable under these circumstances, and the burden then falls on parents, many of whom are simply unable to cope with the amounts demanded for the 10 or 12 weeks of the long vacation. When the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986 come into effect, even this discretionary allowance will no longer be available. Lack of support for students in this position could result in the abandonment of courses, and the loss of talent to the community.

The hon. Member for Teignbridge (Mr. Nicholls) is no longer here, but he earlier made some remarks about alliance policies. We believe that the Government, any Government, have a basic duty to care for the weakest and most vulnerable in our society. Pensioners, the unemployed and those on a fixed income come into this category. As the alliance is fully aware of the fiscal implications of policy, we would look at the needs of the hardest hit today before giving away tax cuts that mainly benefit those in employment or in a sound financial position. We would prefer to see an improvement in both child and housing benefits instead.

10.31 pm

Mr. Nick Raynsford (Fulham) I shall address simply the housing benefit uprating and concentrate on the changes in regulations, which come at the end of a long, sad story of cuts in housing benefit over the past four years since the DHSS took over responsibility for the benefit from the Department of the Environment. The story bears repeating briefly.

In 1981, the Government published a consultation paper, called "Assistance with Housing Costs", and proposed a new reform of the system for helping people to meet their housing costs. They proposed the amalgamation of assistance under supplementary benefit and the old rent rebate and allowance and rate rebate schemes. The argument advanced by the Government was that this would create a more fair and simple system that would be better for claimants and easier to administrate.

The reality — although Conservative Members will not like this—was described in a newspaper not known to be sympathetic towards the Labour party as the greatest administrative fiasco in the history of the welfare state. When the Government tried to introduce a reform supposedly making benefits fairer to claimants and simpler to understand and administer, there were vast, long delays and people waited days, weeks, months for benefit. People were evicted from their homes because they had not got the benefit, there were massive complications and failure to calculate benefit entitlement because it was hugely complex, very unsatisfactory and entirely deserved the epithet given to it by the newspaper that I have quoted.

One might think that a Government who were responsible for such disgraceful bungling, which caused a great deal of hardship to poor people, might adopt a little humility in their approach towards the administration of this benefit system. They might have accepted that they have failed rather dramatically to deliver a decent, fair service to people in need, and accept a case for reform based on the principles that they were advised at the time they should have adopted in 1981, but did not. Those principles were a genuinely simpler system without cuts penalising claimants, ensuring that the people were given an adequate level of support to enable them to meet their housing costs.

The Government might also ponder the fact that the housing benefit scheme became more important, and therefore more expensive, partly because the Department of the Environment was pursuing a policy that deliberately increased the rents that were paid by both council tenants and private tenants. The withdrawal of subsidy forced up rents in the public sector and also encouraged rent officers to fix higher rents in the private sector. Therefore, tenants were paying higher rents. Government Ministers and the Department of the Environment justified the increase on the grounds that means-tested benefits would be available for poorer people so that they did not suffer loss.

What was the response of the Department of Health and Social Security? Again and again Ministers have said that the expenditure on housing benefit has been increasing too fast and that it must be cut. That is gross hypocrisy. The Government have deliberately cut the Department of the Environment's expenditure by forcing up rents and have justified it on the ground that there will be means-tested benefits to protect poorer people, but when those means-tested benefits begin to involve extra cost Ministers say that they do not like it and that they will cut the cost.

Since the introduction of housing benefit in 1983, the Government have not had enough humility to admit that they have made a mistake and that they ought to tread more carefully in future. Instead, insensitively and arrogantly, this Government have sought on six occasions since 1983 to cut benefits to those who are dependent upon housing benefit. What a record for this Government. The proposals that we are debating tonight represent the sixth successive cut in housing benefit in the last three years.

The result has been an increase in the tapers for those whose incomes are above the needs allowance. They were 17 per cent. on rent and 6 per cent. on rates in 1982 when the DHSS inherited the scheme. The tapers had run at that level for the previous 10 years while the Department of the Environment administered the scheme. In the last four years those tapers of 17 per cent. and 6 per cent.—a total of 23 per cent.—have been increased, and by next April they will be 33 per cent. on rent and 13 per cent. on rates—a total of 46 per cent. That is exactly twice the level that applied just four years ago.

Benefit is being withdrawn from households at twice the rate at which it was withdrawn previously. It is intensifying the poverty trap. It means that for many families on low incomes every additional pound that they earn will be almost completely swallowed up through the withdrawal of tax, national insurance and housing benefit.

The poverty trap problem is clearly illustrated by the comparison with 1979, the last year of the previous Labour Government. A household paying tax and national insurance and getting housing benefit, rent and rate rebates lost 65p of every pound that was earned. The rate of withdrawal now being introduced by a Government who had the temerity and the extraordinary insensitivity in their social security Green Paper and White Paper to claim that they were reducing the poverty trap means that next April that same household will lose 84p in every additional pound that it earns. Although the rate of tax has been reduced, the loss of benefit for every additional pound that is earned will be so steep that 84p of it will be lost. What a deplorable poverty trap. What a deplorable lack of incentive to poorer people to earn more income.

If that applied to wealthy people, Conservative Members would be clamouring about the appalling rate of taxation that was discouraging initiative and entrepreneurs, but when it applies to poor people they say nothing. They go along with it and accept it. It is a classic case of double standards. What is acceptable for poor people they would deplore if it applied to rich people. That is disgraceful hypocrisy on the part of the Government.

We heard another form of hypocrisy two nights ago during the debate on mortgage support when we were told that the Government had to make cuts in supplementary benefit for poor people getting help with their mortgages because the assistance was too generous in comparison with poorer households in work. Now, two nights later, we see exactly what the Government believe in doing to poorer households in work getting means-tested housing benefit. They will face a faster rate of withdrawal of their housing benefit because the tapers have been increased. That is from the same Government that pleaded the case for greater equity between those in work and those who are unemployed. These regulations will penalise poor families in work. That is gross hypocrisy.

[Mr. Nick Raynsford]

The cuts adopted by the Government over the last four years have weighed heavily on many poorer households. To date, those cuts have come purely through adjustments in the formula by which housing benefit is assessed—the tapers and the non-dependent deductions and so on. But now we are discussing a further change in the assessment, a further cut by the Government. Not content with making the taper steeper and reducing people's benefit by that route, they are also fiddling the formula by which housing benefit is assessed.

That formula is the needs allowance which has been in use for many years. That is a traditional formula designed to reflect the needs of low-income families in work—the group of people about whom, supposedly, the Government are concerned. That needs allowance formula will be adjusted this time, according to the Government. They are no longer prepared to uprate that formula in accordance with the time-honoured tradition. They will no longer take into account people's housing costs, which have always been taken into account in the assessment of the needs allowance.

The formula is an arcane one and I do not propose to go into it. Its key point is that housing costs have always been taken into account, because that was the fair way to reflect the needs of households on low incomes, in work and receiving housing benefit. That has now been dropped and the Government will no longer take account of housing costs. Why is that? Have they put forward an intellectually cogent argument for doing that? Have they said that they have looked at the indexes and have decided that they are no longer valid and need to be reappraised? Not at all. They have simply decided that here there is scope for more cuts, for taking more money away from poor people so that they can satisfy the Treasury that their budget is being cut.

This crude, underhand measure breaks the time honoured tradition of uprating housing benefit. That tradition goes back to a former Conservative Government who, in 1972, introduced the rent rebate scheme. That formula stood the test of time through the 1970s, and the 1980s, but it is now to be ditched by this Government in a crude and underhand way in an attempt to make cuts. What is most disgraceful about it is that when we debated the interim uprating in July the Minister did not take housing costs into account. I wrote to him privately about that and said I was worried that it had not been done.

I am quite open about my correspondence with the Minister and he is free to reply to me. In his reply the Minister said that the Government did not feel it was appropriate to take housing costs into account because this was an uprating in an interim period during which it was impossible to make projections of how housing costs would arise during that period. He said that clearly—the word he used was clearly—the Government would take into account the increase in rent and rates when assessing the following April's uprating. Did they take them into account? The Minister will say that they did, but they simply ignored them and uprated by other factors.

Mr. Major: The hon. Gentleman has put that in writing and I noticed that he fed it to his hon. Friend the Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) for her speech. From our exchange of correspondence he knows the position well, and I am surprised that he keeps reiterating precisely the same point. The hon. Gentleman lectures the House about the administrative difficulties of local authorities at the time of the 1983 reforms and thereafter. Does the hon. Gentleman think that it is administratively easier for local authorities to take into account what he calls an arcane formula for needs allowance or the cash changes that we made in July and now? Does he not recall that in July the local authorities were more than content for us to use the formula that we used then and subsequently on this occasion?

Mr. Raynsford: I am pleased to be able to reply to the Minister. On the first point, I shall continue to repeat what I said, because it is true. It is true that in his letter to me in July the Minister said that clearly the Government would take rent and rate increases into account when they came to fix the appropriate needs allowance for next April. Now we come to the reality and the Government have made no allowance for rent and rate increases in fixing that allowance. I am sorry that the Minister led me to believe that one thing was going to happen last July but has now done something very different. He will have to face that fact.

Secondly, on administration, the Minister knows, I hope, having been responsible for the administration of the scheme for some time, that local authorities expect good advance notice from the Government of the precise figures — the appropriate needs allowances. They are then fed into their computers, because the vast majority are computerised. Most local authorities will not delve into the formula that is adopted in the administration of the scheme. I am not talking about their assessment of what is fair to their claimants. They will await the statutory instrument from the Government and put it into practice if they have good advance notice.

The Government's record is shabby. They have frequently given late notice indeed about adjustments in the needs allowance, in the tapers, in the non-dependant deductions—all made to make cuts. Local authorities have had great difficulty in putting the Government's wishes into effect because of the lack of advance notice.

The Minister's pretence that there is any administrative complication in applying a figure set by a Government in a statutory instrument which the local authority then applies as a basis for assessing housing benefit calculations suggests that the Minister has less practical experience about the implications of administering the housing benefit scheme than he should have.

The Government's record on housing benefit is a sad, shabby and shameful one. It is one of which any Government should be ashamed and they should seek to improve the benefit system to claimants rather than make further cuts. Labour Members can only deplore the Government's abominable failure over the past four years to honour the pledges that were set out in the consultation paper, "Assistance with housing costs". We look forward next year to the election of a Government who will care and will administer a proper housing benefit scheme in the interests of poorer people.

10.46 pm

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): It is a curious method of governing that on the day of the royal wedding free school meals were taken away from 500,000 children in Britain and on the penultimate day before the House rises for the Christmas recess the Government are showing their deep concern for the poor of this country by making them considerably poorer by the measures that they are seeking to push through the House tonight.

If the Government were seriously concerned about eliminating poverty in Britain they would not be putting these measures before us tonight but would be putting forward measures considerably to increase child benefit, not just by the small amount by which it is being increased tonight, and to dramatically improve the housing benefit and statutory sick pay arrangements in Britain.

Quite honestly, the position of Britain's poor is a disgrace and it has become considerably worse in the past seven years. If Conservative Members, who seem anxious to leave this place to go home to their beds, thought about it, they could walk from this House and in 10 minutes they would find several hundred people with no homes to go to, sleeping by Waterloo station and the National theatre. That is the disgrace and that is the issue which the orders do not address one bit. The degree of total homelessness in London now is greater than it has been for many decades.

As hon. Members go home — some of them in chauffeur-driven cars—they will go past people having to sleep on the streets tonight, and it is not very warm out there. Ministers might decide that the simplest thing in the world is to attack local authorities who are attempting to do something about the problems, but the answer lies in their hands. They have chosen to do nothing about it.

I want to raise a couple of issues and I hope that the Minister will have the courtesy to listen to what I have to say and possibly, just possibly, answer some of the points that my hon. Friends the Members for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford) and for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) have tried to put to him during the debate. They are serious matters and we bring them to the House because they have been brought to us by our constituents and people in other parts of the country.

The hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) was talking about poverty levels and the way in which the social security system has not solved poverty in this country. Indeed, the poverty trap is perpetuated by some of the measures before us tonight. Any examination of social security legislation since it was introduced after the war will show that supplementary benefit, which was meant to be a safety net, has now become the staple existence of millions of people in this country. Nine million people in Britain are living below supplementary benefit level, and, if one takes the EEC poverty level, which is 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit, one is talking about several million more in what is, after all, supposed to be the seventh richest country in the world. Matters will get worse when the Social Security Act 1986 is finally put into operation bit by bit rather than get any better.

We should examine the measures we are being asked to agree tonight. Obviously I welcome any increase in child benefit. Who would not? However the number of children living in serious poverty at present is very large. DHSS figures alone admit to 400,000 children living below supplementary benefit level in 1983. Several hundred thousand, if not millions more, live below EEC recommended poverty levels. In all conscience I ask the Minister whether the increase in child benefit does any more than go some way towards redressing the cuts that have already been made in the past few years? Is he not aware that child benefit is the most effective way of getting real benefit to the poorest families. It is more effective than cuts in taxation or any other method. I think that the Minister probably agrees with that, but whether he is prepared to say so is another matter.

My hon. Friend the Member for Fulham knows far more about housing benefit and understands the housing benefit system better than I do and, I suspect, better than the Minister. In fact, I wish that my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham was the Minister instead of the present incumbent. We will have to wait for an election for that to happen. It is important for the House to understand that the housing benefit system has continually reduced the amount of real benefit available to people living in very great poverty by the changing of the tapers that has gone on continuously. The other side of that, which is of great concern to many people, is that when they are in receipt of housing benefit and there is a direct payment through to the local authority for that benefit from their supplementary benefit problems occur. Due to staff shortages and inefficiency within the DHSS there are frequent problems about payments getting through. That results in the local authority concerned believing those people are in rent arrears. I have tried many times to get an accurate assessment of the figures involved. However, I suspect that the Government's continual attacks on mainly Labour controlled local authorities for the level of rent arrears has something to do with non-payment of moneys owed to local authorities by the DHSS in respect of rent through housing benefit. Will the Minister look into that problem because he has not done so up to now?

While he is doing that, will he look into the future a little bit. Under the Social Security Act 1986 that he so avidly supports and that will come into operation, those people on housing benefit will have to pay a proportion of their rates. In areas such as that which I represent the rates are high. I am not proud of that and nor is the local authority—[Interruption.] Nobody is proud of the fact that the rates are high. The rates are high because of the amount of rate support grant that has been cut from my local authority in the seven years since the Government came to power. Conservative Members well know and understand that, and if they bothered to examine the books of inner urban local authorities they would begin to see some of the problems that those local authorities and the people within them suffer.

Mr. Raynsford: I respect my hon. Friend's suggestion that Conservative Members should study local authorities' books, but would it not be more appropriate if they urged their colleagues in the Department of the Environment to ensure that they act legally in future in setting the rate support grant?

Mr. Corbyn: My hon. Friend is correct. It ill becomes the Conservatives, who lecture the Opposition on law and order, to have to admit that they have been breaking the law for years. Far be it from me to want anyone to be punished with the full force of the law, but if its full force can be used against miners and printers, why should it not be used against Tory Ministers?

The third area——

Mrs. Beckett: Perhaps my hon. Friend did not hear the rather ill-mannered interjections of the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) about jobs for the boys. Perhaps my hon. Friend would like to comment on the money that has been given to the City, the jobs for the City boys and the finance for the boys who support the Conservative party and the Government, who are the most corrupt Administration that we have known for 20 years.

[Mrs. Beckett]

Mr. Corbyn: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for her intervention. I had not heard the interjection from a sedentary position of the hon. Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell). If the hon. Gentleman is making allegations or accusations about the way in which local authorities employ people, he should examine the recruitment method of authorities, especially in inner London. They are trying to ensure that racial and sexual discrimination are not practised. They are trying to ensure that genuine, real jobs are created by meeting the needs of inner urban areas. It ill becomes a Government who have poured out so much in tax handouts to the super rich and poured so much money into the City to lecture local authorities about efficiency and jobs for the boys. If the hon. Gentleman reflects, he might regret having made such remarks.

The abolition of the middle rate of statutory sick pay will affect about 400,000 payments per year. Statutory sick pay exists because recipients need to maintain some standard of living while they are sick. The Government are punishing individuals for being sick and off work as a result of it. Does the Minister realise the fear that increasingly is with many about the lack of sick pay from their employment, including those who have not completed a certain amount of service? I have met constituents who have pleaded with their doctors, who have wanted to sign them off work, to allow them to remain at work by not signing them off. They have done so because they knew that their sick pay would be insufficient or because they knew that no sick pay would be paid. They have not wanted to see their family in poverty or fall behind with rent, mortgage, and hire-purchase payments. If we are to live in a caring society, the order relating to statutory sick pay must be rejected emphatically.

When the Social Security Bill, as it then was, was being considered in Committee, we discussed briefly the efficiency or otherwise of the delivery of benefits and the effect of various uprating orders. It is interesting that the Greater London citizens advice bureau has conducted a survey on the performance of DHSS offices. I hope that the results of the survey have been sent to all hon. Members, including the Minister, and that the Minister has read it and will respond. The survey says:

"that nearly three-quarters (74%) of all offices failed 'very frequently or frequently' in their statutory responsibility to assess and pay benefit in 14 days. There were also alarmingly high figures for frequent or very frequent incidences of the following problems: errors in claimants benefits (62%), mislaid papers causing delays (91%), delays in visiting claimants (85%), claimants having to wait more than an hour to be seen (94%)".

The CAB report recommends that action should be taken in improving contact with the DHSS and improving reception areas, improving methods used in providing emergency services and assessment and in dealing with instances of urgent need, improving specialist services, improving the system that is used to clear up backlogs and improving the retrieval system.

At the heart of these problems is the level of staffing in DHSS offices and the inadequate training that many staff receive. I have taken the trouble to visit DHSS offices to discuss these matters with staffs. Many recruits enter the DHSS with a determination to do something to implement the existing system. They may not be very happy with the system, but they recognise that it does something for those in their area and they feel a natural sympathy for claimants. They find after a few months that they feel brutalised because of staff shortages and other problems. The result is quite serious incidents of violence in DHSS offices. I totally deplore that violence. The real culprits are not those who sit on either side of the glass partitions but those who sit on the Government Front Bench and in the DHSS offices. I hope that the Minister will look seriously at the CAB's report, discuss it with the CAB and make improvements in those offices.

I asked a question about the number of social claims that have been referred to out of town offices from London. I asked it because staff in the DHSS offices in my constituency had raised these matters. Two weeks ago, there was a dispute at Archway Tower. I attended the picket line and discussed the issues with the staff in dispute. On 17 December, I received the Minister's answer to my question, which stated:

"arrears of claims for single payments in some London offices" will be

"dealt with by outstationed units in Chatham and Broadstairs."

I was told that a number of those claims had been dealt with. It is unsatisfactory for the DHSS to be dealing with a backlog of cases from inner urban offices—in this case London; no doubt, it happens elsewhere — in out of town offices as a way to save money, because London weighting is not paid. The Department is removing cases from the local offices which should deal with them. Ministers should understand the trauma that people suffer in trying to get single payments and have their cases dealt with and the people who turn up absolutely penniless in my office and at that of my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham because of lost papers, misplaced files, and so on. That is not usually the fault of DHSS staff. It is the fault of decisions deliberately to understaff those offices and make them such appalling places. I hope that the Minister will seriously and sensitively approach the problem.

We are being asked to approve these uprating orders. They in no way meet the problems of poverty that are the lot of so many people as we approach Christmas. They in no way meet the real needs of people. We need a Government who will be concerned about eliminating poverty rather than about marginalising, managing and condemning poverty, which is what the Government have done.

11.2 pm

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mr. Nicholas Lyell): On the whole, this has been a good-natured and thoughtful debate. I hope that the Opposition will listen thoughtfully to some of the points that I make in reply as I argue the Government's case and express more of an overview than the hon. Member for Fulham (Mr. Raynsford) has in any of his recent speeches. May I respectfully say that he gets somewhat on tram lines in his argument. I suggest that he applies his very able brain to the yawning gap in the Labour party's case, which I hope briefly to expose.

I reject the general criticism made by the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett). It is not true to say that, since 1979, there has been a decline in the standard of living of those out of work. The hon. Lady rightly qualified her position with what are not perhaps weasel words but are at least curious words. She qualified it by saying that, of course, this was in comparison with those in work. That is why there is such a yawning gap in the Opposition's argument.

Before answering the specific points raised by hon. Members, including my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams), I shall consider our overall social security spending. When we are criticised for spending too little, it is right that the House and the country should remember that there has been a massive 35 per cent. increase in spending on pensions and benefits by the Government since 1978-79 — £11 billion in real terms. Most of that expenditure relates not to unemployment but to increases in the number of payments to the elderly, the long-term sick and the disabled and to the £4·5 billion real increases in the average overall benefit paid, particularly to low-income families in work and those categories to which I have referred.

Britain's position should be compared with that of other European countries. The proportion of gross domestic product spent on support of the elderly is the third highest in Europe. The only countries that do more are France and Denmark. Indeed, the latest figures that we have from France relate to 1983, the height of the French Government's Socialist experiment from which they had to renege so rapidly in more recent years. Those countries exceed our provision only by exacting far higher taxes and contributions from those who have to pay for the benefits.

Mr. Corbyn: I am interested in the Minister's comments. Can he compare the levels of pension payments in all European contries? If he did that, he would find that the British level of standard old age pension is among the lowest of all the EEC countries. The level of poverty among British pensioners is one of the highest.

Mr. Lyell: If the hon. Gentleman were to make a study of that, he would realise that the narrow way in which he has asked his question ignores many aspects of the benefits and other measures of support received by the elderly in this country. He is mistaken if he believes the point that underlies his question.

We must balance what we spend with what we expect the working population to pay — the amount that we expect them to meet in the costs of that expenditure. For example, a married man with gross earnings of £150 a week—that is not far short of three quarters of average earnings and fairly close to the average earnings of a manual worker — pays at present £13·50 a week in national insurance contributions and more than £23 a week in tax if his wife does not work. That is five times the amount that the same man would receive in child benefit if he has one child and is close to the total of the current rate of basic retirement pension for a single person.

The large increases in benefits argued for so vehemently by some hon. Members and especially by the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) and picked up, by implication, by the hon. Member for Derby, South would mean increases in that man's contributions and taxes as well as in those of better-off workers.

We believe that it is fairest to all to limit the burdens that we place on those in work and on employers while still protecting those dependent on social security benefits against rises in the cost of living as we have done. The proposals achieve that balance.

The hon. Members for Fulham and for Derby, South should examine the fundamental weakness of the Opposition's case. It is curious that we have heard nothing from the hon. Member for Oldham, West about uprating, but I will pick up the points that he made in our earlier debate this evening, which underlie the comments made by the hon. Member for Derby, South. The Opposition's proposals — the £3·5 billion or £3·6 billion, all to be taken from the rich — do absolutely nothing for the poor.

Mr. Raynsford rose——

Mr. Lyell: I will give way in a moment when the hon. Gentleman has had a chance to listen to what I have to say. We heard a great deal about the promised £5 and £8 increase in basic pension, the £3 that is to be added to child benefit and the extension of the long-term rate of supplementary benefits for the long-term unemployed and we heard earlier the claim that Labour can finance that by taxing £3·6 billion from the supposedly very rich. However, we have yet to hear, despite the repeated demands from myself and my hon. Friend the Minister, a clear explanation of the details—or perhaps I should say the major aspects of that proposition. Does the hon. Member for Oldham, West intend to raise supplementary pensions in line with retirement pensions? I would assume that he does and that is the only way to ensure that the poorest pensioners gain least from the increase. I would assume that he would also want to increase the children's scale rates in supplementary benefit in line with child benefit for the same reason and housing benefit in line with both. If so, and the hon. Member for Fulham may realise this——

Mr. Raynsford: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lyell: Not just yet. The hon. Gentleman must accept that the costs of the proposals would not be £3·6 billion but £4·6 billion. Many pensioners on supplementary benefit and families on low incomes will be interested to learn that Labour's much-vaunted generosity consists of giving with one hand and taking away with the other.

Perhaps after Christmas the hon. Gentleman would also like to explain, for the benefit of widows and the long-term sick and disabled, what he intends to do about the benefits that they receive which are at present linked to the rate of retirement pension. His response and the hon. Lady's speech have demonstrated that a grasp of the realities of public expenditure are not their strong point. If they were given the chance to put their plans into action, they would cost, not £3·6 billion, but £5·6 billion. I am interested to hear what the hon. Gentleman is so keen to tell me.

Mr. Raynsford: I am happy that the Minister should give way. It ill becomes a Minister who is once again justifying fiddling the uprating formulas to make £40 million from cuts in benefits to poor people to attack the Opposition for the implications of putting their formula for helping poor people into practice. Earlier, the Minister took great credit for the additional expenditure that the Government have provided—I grant that they have—on social security. That is because the number of people in poverty and dependent on social security has increased. If he takes so much credit for that, why do the Government use the increase in expenditure on housing benefit and single payments repeatedly as an excuse for cutting them?

Mr. Lyell: It is noticeable to the whole House that the hon. Gentleman did not answer my question.

Mrs. Beckett: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lyell: Yes, in a moment. Perhaps the hon. Lady will listen for a second.

Mrs. Beckett: I have been listening for quite a long time.

Mr. Lyell: If the hon. Lady knows the answer, perhaps I shall let her speak.

Mrs. Beckett: I have listened with great care to what the Minister has said. He seems to be under a misapprehension. We are debating the uprating under this Government, not the uprating that the next Labour Government propose to introduce. [Interruption.] The Minister for Health should have a little patience. He attends these debates rarely and, perhaps, does not understand. If the Minister cares to read the record he will see that we have frequently given the answers to the questions he asks. Perhaps he would now like to answer the question that we have asked him consistently——

Mr. Colin Moynihan (Lewisham, East): Give us the answer.

Mrs. Beckett: Wait a minute. If, as the Minister argues, the sum of £3,600 million is inadequate to meet the cost of the £5 and £8 increase for pensioners, what size of an increase would it meet? Will he now tell the House why the Government gave them 80p instead of whatever they think £3,600 million from the wealthiest taxpayers could afford?

Mr. Lyell: It is interesting that the hon. Lady was so keen to dodge answering the question. That is how the Opposition deal throughout.

Mr. Raynsford: These are the Government's regulations.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the House and anybody who may be listening to the article,

"How Labour will pay the bill."

Mr. Raynsford: Answer the question.

Mr. Lyell: I shall answer my question in a moment. The Guardian on 24 October carried an article on how Labour would pay the bill. This is a classic example from the hon. Member for Oldham, West. The answer is that Labour will not pay the bill. The article states:

"we are adamant that beyond our two central overriding pledges, no other commitments can be guaranteed until the books are opened on coming into office."

[HON. MEMBERS: "Ah."] The fact is that £3·6 billion will do nothing for the poor. The fundamental argument of the hon. Lady's case that a Labour Government will uprate the pension——

Mrs. Beckett: £1, £2, £3, £4? How much money will it give them?

Mr. Lyell: I do not think that the hon. Lady understands the point.

Mrs. Beckett: Yes I do.

Mr Lyell: Everything in ordinary child benefit or ordinary pension is clawed back unless the supplementary pension, child scale rates and so on are increased. I invite the hon. Lady to read my speech and to invite her hon. Friends, including the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), to study it. They will find that the money is all clawed back. It means nothing. That is the yawning gap in the Opposition's case.

Now I shall answer the points made in greater detail by hon. Members and my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington.

With regard to statutory sick pay a point was made concerning losses. However, no acknowledgement was made by the hon. Lady or others of the transitional protection for all those who are currently at the middle rate. Even when there are those who theoretically have losses, it does not necessarily mean that employees will get less. We have encouraged occupational sick pay schemes, and statutory sick pay has stimulated such schemes. If we go back to 1977, 80 per cent. of people were in such schemes and we know that the figures have significantly increased.

Mrs. Beckett: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Lyell: In a moment.

With regard to housing benefit, the fact is, as we have said often, that it does go too far up the income scale. It is nonsense that 7 million households, something like a third, should receive housing benefit. I know that this is delightful for the hon. Member for Fulham, as he has spent his entire professional life in this work and he certainly understands it. Figures like 44p or 84p roll off his tongue. I respect him, but I would respect him more if he examined the weaknesses in his case instead of nitpicking around the details.

Mr. Raynsford: Will the Minister give way.

Mr. Lyell: In a moment, but let me just finish my point.

Most losers lose less than 25p. Those who lose more are generally those who are at the upper end. All those who lose are on incomes that are above supplementary benefit level. I am sure that that would be acknowledged by the hon. Member for Fulham.

Mr. Raynsford: The Minister has said that housing benefit goes to too many people. Does the same logic apply to mortgage interest tax relief? That also is a housing benefit that goes to rather more people on higher incomes. If it is appropriate to make cuts, would it not be more appropriate to make them from that benefit, which goes to higher income groups, rather than from poor people who depend on housing benefit to meet their housing costs.

Mr. Lyell: I am glad to acknowledge one thing and that is that the hon. Gentleman has made clear time and time again his anxiety to get his hands on mortgage interest tax relief. He is anxious to get hold of that money.

Mrs. Beckett rose——

Mr. Lyell: I will give way.

Mrs. Beckett: May I take the Minister back to something a little less exciting to his hon. Friends? Did I hear the Minister correctly? I think that he said that statutory sick pay had stimulated the development of occupational sick pay schemes. That cannot possibly be true and I would like to know what evidence he has for that. As far as I can recall, the last data available on occupational sick pay schemes were published in 1977 and relates to 1974. That was, in any case, before the statutory sick pay scheme was introduced. There is no new evidence about occupational sick pay schemes unless the Minister has some new fund of evidence that he has not made available?

Mr. Lyell: The point that I was making—obviously I have not made it sufficiently clear for the hon. Lady—is that although we do not have a complete survey—80 per cent. of people had schemes going back to the 1977 figures which go back to 1974. We are aware that there have been substantial increases since then and we believe that statutory sick pay has been a significant influence on that growth.

Mrs. Beckett: Will the Minister give way again?

Mr. Lyell: No I must move one.

Mrs. Beckett: Be fair, give way.

Mr. Lyell: Very well.

Mrs. Beckett: How can the Minister possibly say that there has been a substantial improvement if the last evidence that we have is from 1977? He must justify such a statement being made to the House.

Mr. Lyell: If the hon. Lady goes on intervening too much she will find that I get armed with fresh material. Without going into too much detail I refer the hon. Lady to a study completed by Income Data Services published in June 1984 which considered the matter. I am very surprised that the hon. Lady was not aware of it. I advise the hon. Lady, once again, to look, rather more carefully at the yawning gap in her own case rather than spend time on the kind of minute detail that has been the substance of her speech.

The hon. Lady was again wrong to suggest that heating allowances had been uprated on the basis of a stale and outdated measurement period. Far from being outdated and stale, it is the most recent possible—from January to September 1986, during which time fuel prices fell by 0·1 per cent. One can hardly get more stable than that. The higher rate heating additions increased in July, and the money is now in pensioners' hands. I should have thought that she would have noticed and applauded that.

On child benefit, the hon. Lady quite reasonably asked how people would get a form when maternity grant ends. The Government are anxious that people should know about and understand the benefits that they should get, and we are taking a great deal of trouble to improve our forms. Six of them have now won plain English awards. There will be a tear-off coupon on the leaflet entitled, "Babies and Benefits", which all mothers can pick up at antenatal clinics. I suggest that that will be an extremely helpful method.

Mr. Corbyn: The translation of information and forms was mentioned in the then Social Security Bill Committee. What progress has been made with a multilingual approach to giving benefit information and advice?

Mr. Lyell: I am not omniscient. While I know that we are giving that matter careful thought, I cannot say how many languages are involved.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kensington, and later the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn), asked about the London citizens advice bureau report. I was in King's Cross and Camden seeing the citizens advice bureaux only last week, when I discussed the very topics that are dealt with in the report.

It is simply not right to describe the overall position as chaos. Weekly benefits, which are the fundamental income support—to use the new term—of millions of people, are being paid efficiently, week in, week out in the overwhelming majority of cases. I do not deny that there have been pressure points. There have been take-up campaigns. We are not opposed to take-up campaigns as long as they are properly liaised and dealt with. Our objective is to deliver benefits as swiftly, efficiently, carefully and effectively as possible.

There have been pressure points, but we have been acting on them—not since we received the report, which was only yesterday, but since the beginning of the year. Moreover, the interim staff complement increases have been taking effect since May. They have helped significantly to overcome backlogs. Almost all of the 5,175 extra staff are in place. There are still one or two offices in which we are trying to build up to the complement, but most are in post.

My hon. Friend the Member for Kensington will approve of the fact that we are in the process of major social security reforms in the shape of simplification, common methods between benefits, which will be of great help, and computerisation. We have local office microcomputer projects, which help people to deal with cases more quickly and trace papers, and—which is even more significant in the long term—computerisation in the local office project. The system is wholly suitable for computerisation. It is the largest computerisation in western Europe. It is much larger than the NASA computerisation and should be completed between now and 1992. It is an important and valuable advance.

The hon. Member for Islington, North should not criticise outstationing. At Chatham and Broadstairs only the backlog in some cases of single payment schemes have been outstationed, and that has been done simply to help the staff to get through the work more efficiently and to get benefits delivered to those entitled to them in the inner cities. I say in all sincerity that it is a sensible policy, and competent staff in the inner cities have nothing to fear for their jobs.

Mr. Corbyn: While my question about outstationing related to the office in my constituency, there are wider implications. Is the Minister aware that the trade unions representing the civil servants who work in the DHSS have made representations continuously about staff shortages and the problems they face over the backlog under the single payment scheme? Is he further aware that the outstationing of that work merely deals with an immediate crisis whereas there is a long-term problem involving levels of understaffing in many inner city offices?

Mr. Lyell: I repeat that outstationing is helpful and that staff have nothing to fear. I should be happy to talk to the hon. Gentleman about the matter, and I hope we shall get his encouragement because the policy is designed to help his constituents.

The growth of personal pensions, occupational pensions and the overall benefits for the elderly that are likely to result from our schemes will be helpful.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: Will my hon. and learned Friend give way?

Mr. Lyell: Yes, but after this intervention I must conclude.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: I wish to pay tribute to the staff, particularly of inner London offices. They do a stupendous job and perhaps only British civil servants can make the system that we are now using work as well as it does. But like Galileo, I have to say, "Eppur si muove." The fact is that the system is breaking down. My hon. and learned Friend can say what he likes, but we cannot go on as we are.

Mr. Lyell: My hon. Friend is not giving credit for the great efforts that are being made, though I appreciate that he speaks with sincerity on this subject.

The provisions of the orders and regulations strike a fair balance. The value of the main long-term benefits is being protected without major increases in the contribution burden on the working population and the structure and administration of the social security system is being progressively simplified and improved.

To those such as the hon. Member for Derby, South who demand higher benefit increases I must point out that social security spending has, as I said, increased since 1978-79 by over 35 per cent. in real terms. I ask the House to reflect on that and on the Government's achievements in the sphere of social security and to support the orders and regulations.

Question put and agreed to

Resolved,

That the draft Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.—[Mr. Major.]

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resolved,

That the draft Supplementary Benefit Uprating (No. 2) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 28th November, be approved.

That the draft Family Income Supplements (Computation) (No. 2) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.—[Mr. Major.]

TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT

Resolved,

That the draft Statutory Sick Pay (Rate of Payment) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 1st December, be approved.—[Mr. Major.]

SOCIAL SECURITY

Resolved,

That the draft Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.

That the draft Social Security (Treasury Supplement to and Allocation of Contributions) (Re-rating) Order 1986, which was laid before this House on 24th November, be approved.—[Mr. Major.]

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS &c.

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 101(5) (Standing Committees on Statutory Instruments &c.)

ANIMALS

That the draft Welfare of Livestock (Prohibited Operations) (Amendment) Regulations 1986, which were laid before this House on 4th December, be approved.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

Question agreed to.

Third World Debt

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Garel-Jones.]

11.28 pm

Mr. Colin Moynihan (Lewisham, East): It is fitting that one of the last debates in this House this year provides us with an opportunity to be forward looking—a chance to draw together opportunities which present themselves for a rare synthesis of altruism and self-interest in the exercise of the power of Government.

To responsible Third World Governments their new task in the coming year must appear daunting indeed. There is an overhang of debt initially increased by over-enthusiastic lenders who too frequently over-extended their lending programmes without adequate project preparation and evaluation. Additionally, many developing countries, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, have severely limited manpower resources on which the donor community places an enormous burden on a relentless roller coaster moving from donor meeting to donor meeting while political pressures at home continue to build up in their absence.

Nor can Third World Governments find much solace in the patchwork quilt of rescheduling measures they are forced to adopt, including conditionality which too frequently appears to sacrifice the painful social policy implications at the altar of severe austerity programmes. Such programmes do little more than buy time— time during which agricultural prices are often forced down by excessive subsidisation and protection from the very Governments whose representatives in long and hard negotiations with developing countries pontificate over the evils of protectionism.

Compound the constraints to development by adding high real interest rates, the prospect of increasing protectionist pressures and the lack of implemented new initiatives to resolve the debt crisis and the prospects of a serious collapse in the international banking community remains a reality. However, there are opportunities to tackle these challenges, but they will require far more political will by donor Governments and the banking sector than has been revealed to date. Among initiatives I hope to see are more debt-equity swaps and interest capping and, where appropriate, the subsidisation of spreads. However, to achieve growth and particularly private sector-led growth, not only will the appropriate macroeconomic framework be required, but new initiatives to permit dramatic reductions in debt will be essential.

I shall outline to the House tonight the predicament of a model Third World Government — one that has followed every international policy prescription issued to it, that is democratic, steadfast of purpose and dramatically successful in the achievement of its principal objectives, yet is still unable to lift its people from the doldrums of poverty and deprivation in which they have languished for several decades because of the overhang of international debt incurred by earlier less democratic and less sanguine regimes. I shall ask Members to stifle the yawn which precedes the anticipated profferment of the Third World begging bowl while I update them on another crisis, related, but this time closer to home, and perhaps closer to their hearts.

A few years ago, cocaine was an obscure drug, used by the rich and the exotic. It is no longer. Cocaine abuse is now the fastest-growing narcotic problem in Britain and other Western countries. Use of the drug has spread from the penthouse to the street. The explosion of cocaine use in Europe and north America has been mirrored by the growth in illict coca cultivation in Bolivia—from a few hundred million dollars worth in 1980 to $2,500 million worth in 1986, with Bolivia currently providing 30 per cent. of the cocaine entering Western Europe. The combination of a strong Government in Bolivia, the vulnerability of that Government to the debt crisis and Bolivia's key role as a supplier of cocaine paste to the international narcotics industry provides a unique window of opportunity for action by the Western powers, hopefully, under the leadership of Great Britain.

I am personally convinced that the opportunity now presented allows a bold new initiative which will tackle a pressing social problem in Britain and other Western European countries, while producing entirely desirable development effects in a deserving Third world country.

Allow me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to set the scene for the benefit of those hon. Members who are unfamiliar with the details of the Bolivian situation. As recently as July 1985, inflation in Bolivia was running at the almost unprecedented level of 23,000 per cent. per annum. Remember the chaos caused here not long ago by just 23 per cent. inflation and begin to imagine the paralysis induced by 23,000 per cent. Think for a moment of the totalitarian solutions that historically have been imposed as a result of far less severe inflations and marvel then at the achievement of a democratically elected Government in Bolivia in reducing this inflation in six months to a manageable 39 per cent. per annum. The Paz Estennsoro Government have had a remarkable term of office to date, with an economic programme brilliantly conceived by Ministers Juan Carriaga and Gonzales Sanchez de Lozada.

Of course, this stupendous achievement has not been without cost in terms of domestic hardship, and the Bolivian Government must be acutely aware of the need to deliver on their promise to reactivate the economy, and to alleviate the deprivation caused by the economic adjustment programme which has led to thousands being made redundant, while reducing the real income of tens of thousands more whose jobs have survived.

Bolivia is a country blessed with an abundance of natural resources, but the debt-service burden, and the country's pariah status in international financial markets as a result of repayment arrears, have prevented it from raising the capital to exploit its natural wealth. Bolivia's international debt is minuscule by comparison with Latin America's over-borrowed giants. Its $2·5 billion debt, of which $800 million is commercial, pales into insignificance alongside the $300 billion combined total of Brazil, Mexico and Argentina. Yet Bolivia's prospects of being able to redeem its debt are non-existent by comparison with its more indebted but much richer and bigger neighbours. The international financial community has long since discounted its Bolivian debt, which currently trades in the London secondary market at 8 to 10 cents to the dollar, yet has lacked the initiative to find a way out of the impasse without creating the banker's nightmare —a precedent. International bankers frown upon the repurchase of debt at a discount by the debtor, but are benevolent towards the same exercise by third parties, such as the Governments of Western countries.

The Government of Bolivia have prepared a bold programme for the elimination of the non-traditional, or cocaine-oriented, coca crop, and are determined to push this through despite the economic impact of the eradication of by far the most important industry in a country which is, Haiti aside, the poorest in the western hemisphere.

The Government's programme, recently presented to special meetings of the United Nations and the World Bank, calls for about $200 million over three years in international aid to finance an imaginative and soundly based programme of drug traffic interdiction, crop eradication and alternative development. The Governments of Western countries, if their anti-narcotics policies are to mean anything, will have to participate in, and largely finance, this progamme. There thus arises an opportunity to link debt to drug eradication and to solve two problems at once.

My proposal is essentially this. Rather than donate the money needed to finance the Government of Bolivia's drug eradication and alternative development programme outright, let the Western Governments most affected by the cocaine problem buy Bolivia's commercial debt at a deep discount from the commercial banks which now hold it. Let the Bolivian Government buy back their debt from the Western Governments in Bolivian pesos, which the recipients would agree immediately to re-deposit in the narcotics action fund to underwrite the Bolivian Government's three-year action programme. Relieved of the burden of debt service and amortisation, the Bolivian Government could find the funds to finance the drug eradication programme in this way.

The programme can be non-inflationary if, relieved of the need to service debt, or buy in paper from the secondary market, which the Bolivian Government are preparing to do anyway, the Government of Bolivia can find the peso funds over a three-year period for the drug eradication programme. In this case, they hand over the cash for the outstanding debt, knowing that they will get pesos straight back for the narcotics programme. Moreover, and possibly more important in this case, with capital flight from the cocaine trade estimated at 85 per cent. of the street value of cocaine, approximately $300 million per annum is currently being illegally reinvested into the economy, the larger proportion of which generates domestic demand in essential purchases for the campesino farmers. During the three-year period of an eradication campaign, this income will more than offset the cost of the programme and arguably have a deflationary impact on the economy in the medium term if the programme succeeds.

I have discussed this programme at length with senior economists at the World Bank, where, during part of the summer recess, I worked as a consultant on the Bolivian medium-term economic strategy, and with leading figures in the Bolivian Government. Furthermore, I have acted as an adviser to the private sector in the preparation of a reactivation programme, a Confederation de Empresarios Privadeos, energetically and inspiringly led by Carlos Itturalde. However, most important, I have had the pleasure and privilege of discussing this proposal with five Treasury officials, and as yet have heard no substantial argument against it. It offers a solution to the impasse of the Bolivian debt — a way out of the precedent trap which the bankers so fear, for the conditionality which Western Governments would attach to their purchase and resale of the Bolivian debt would be unacceptable to any other Latin American Government except Bolivia's political gravity-defying regime. It offers at the same time a way of funding a relatively cheap and critically important Third world development programme with profound implications for the social cohesion of the developed Western economies.

[Mr. Colin Moynihan]

The resolution of the commercial debt crisis will give Bolivia renewed access to international capital markets and the ability to fund the development of its huge natural reserves. The elimination of its narcotics industry will re-establish its sense of national morality and purpose, and will make a major contribution to the elimination of the cocaine menace in the developed western economies. Alternative and comparable schemes can be developed using export credits or swapping debt for private sector participateion in deregulated and overvalued loss-making parastatals which could benefit from short-term international management contracts.

As recognised at the Williamsburg, summit, new and workable arrangements for servicing and tackling debt are required. Constant piecemeal rescheduling will severely restrict the capacity of recipient Governments to invest for development and growth and the corresponding lack of political stability will reduce confidence for the much needed private sector reactivation. There can be no doubt in this Chamber that there is little chance of bridging the north-south divide, or of avoiding a repetition of the appaling famine and poverty in sub-Saharan Africa unless we are prepared to act and substantially reduce the transfer of the meagre financial resources of the developing countries to the West.

My main thrust has been on debt development swaps, perhaps better understood as a debt-drug initiative or as a mechanism for financing development programmes.

In this respect, the current political and economic climate in Bolivia offers us a window of opportunity. This happy coincidence of interest between one of the poorest and most deserving of Third World countries and the developed economies must not be allowed to pass.

I seek an assurance from my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary that the Government will investigate with all speed this proposal for debt-development swaps for Bolivia, and will ensure that our Government will play a leading role in seizing imaginative, original and mutually beneficial solutions to the twin problems of debt and drugs.

11.43 pm

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Ian Stewart): I begin by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan) on obtaining this debate and on his speech. Before I respond to his interesting proposal, I shall say something more generally about the crucial problem of world debt, the subject with which he opened his remarks.

There is no doubt that the debt problem remains severe, although developments over the past year have had mixed effects on individual debtor countries. For instance, the fall in the US dollar helped those with a high proportion of debt denominated in dollars. Falls in the oil price have caused severe problems for some oil exporters including Mexico, Nigeria and Egypt while having a beneficial effect on most countries, but falls in other commodity prices have been a problem for nearly all debtors. The key action that we in developed countries can take in response is to pursue policies which will bring long-term sustainable growth in the world economy. We need to keep inflation down, and we need to take steps to keep markets open in the face of increasingly protectionist pressures, particularly in the United States.

I am glad to say that major countries are increasingly co-ordinating their policies to bring about growth. For instance, at the Tokyo summit the seven leaders of the industrialised nations agreed new arrangements for closer policy co-ordination, while in October the United States and Japan were able to announce agreement on a set of joint actions designed to provide Japanese growth and reduce internal imbalances.

On trade liberalisation, we are also seeing progress. The GATT agreement in Punta del Este represented a real breakthrough. We have placed particular emphasis on the need for a reduction of subsidies and protectionism in agriculture. And I might add that at the Commonwealth Finance Ministers' meeting in September I found a warm welcome for the part Britain had played, through our presidency of the European Community, in bringing this into the GATT agenda. The potential gains to developing countries from liberalisation of agricultural policies are far larger than any possible increase in direct aid.

But within this context we also need specific policies on debt. At the IMF meeting in Seoul last year I strongly welcomed the initiative put forward by Mr. Baker and we have continued to give this our support. The Baker initiative calls for developed and developing countries, international financial institutions and commercial banks to work together. Efforts by the developing countries towards structural adjustment in their economies are matched by appropriate associated financing. Such changes in their economies are essential if these countries are to become creditworthy again and so attract voluntary lending. The policy changes and the financing package are designed on a case by case basis to match the varying debt burdens, economic structures and readiness to implement reform of the debtor countries.

There have been some suggestions that the Baker initiative has "failed" and that an alternative strategy is needed, but this is to misunderstand the nature of the initiative, which provides a framework rather than a specific model. The scheme was never intended to be an instant solution, and the progress so far is encouraging. The IMF and the World Bank have taken on the important role of working with the debtor countries to put together the packages of structural reform and new money. With only a few exceptions, the major debtors are co-operating with this approach. In return the World Bank has negotiated $3·7 billion in new policy based loans with 10 of the 15 major debtors and has discussions under way with other countries for a further $5 billion in lending. The developed countries can therefore also do their part by giving wholehearted support to these institutions.

I was very pleased to learn of the agreement reached on Monday this week on the eighth replenishment of the International Development Agency of $12·4 billion — a sum in excess of the $12 billion that we had hoped for. This will enable the International Development Agency to contribute further to resolving the problems of the poorest of the debtor countries, including Bolivia. I am particularly glad that the United Kingdom was able to increase its contribution by $15 million.

The Paris club, where Government creditors meet to reschedule official debts, is making a major contribution in resolving the financing gap problems of debtor countries. The Paris club has shown its willingness to reschedule on generous terms, including up to 100 per cent. of principal and interest over 10 years. Between 1983 and the beginning of this year the Paris club had rescheduled over $32 billion for 32 countries, and in July of this year agreement was reached to reschedule Bolivia's debts.

Commercial banks are also moving in to support comprehensive policy reform programmes in the debtor countries. The essential point about the Baker Initiative is that it brings together all those with a stake in the debt problem and asks them to play a role which reflects their involvement. Therefore, debtor countries are asked to reform their policies rather than continue with those which contributed to their problems. Creditors — official, multilateral and private—are asked to provide financing in order to help the process of recovery in those economies in which they have a share.

We should be wary of new global solutions or solutions for individual countries which allow any of these participants to evade their responsibilities. All too many suggested schemes involve Governments taking on the risks of the commercial banks, or allow debtor countries to take financial help without the essential associated adjustment. Our ultimate aim must be to see international financial markets move towards operating, without Governmental or institutional intervention. Schemes for alleviating the debt problem must not lose sight of this.

What does all this mean for my hon. Friend's scheme for Bolivia? First, we do not underestimate the challenge presented by the Bolivian economy. As my hon. Friend has said, since August 1985, President Paz Estenssoro has initiated wide-ranging and courageous economic reforms to tackle the formidable problems that he inherited when he came to power. In particular, the fall in tin and hydrocarbon prices has exacerbated the long-standing balance of payments problem. In the face of these reversals the Government have demonstrated a firm and admirable commitment to adjustment. They have collaborated closely with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank which have assisted in the formulation of an economic recovery programme which the United Kingdom Government have supported.

Bolivia is one of the poorest countries in Latin America and is the largest recipient of United Kingdom technical co-operation in the region. An official mission from the United Kingdom visited Bolivia in October to identify with the Bolivian authorities key areas of the economy where we could assist Bolivia. We are considering proposals to make available a grant of up to £5 million in balance of payments support in the form of British goods and equipment. The primary requirement for the success of the economic recovery programme is the continued determination of the Bolivian Government to apply sensible and consistent economic policies.

There can no doubt that the present drugs problem in Bolivia is a threat to its viability as a nation. Bolivia is now the world's leading exporter of illicit cocaine and its Government's pledge to take the country out of the drug export business shows great courage. We applaud this step and we are contributing £600,000 to the United Nations fund for drug abuse control in support of law enforcement programmes there, but the scale of the problem should not be underestimated.

The proposal put forward by my hon. Friend for dealing with the present burden of Bolivia's debt servicing difficulties is an interesting idea. As I understand it, the proposal envisages commercial banks selling to Governments at a very deep discount external loans which they extended to Bolivia in the past and which are now not being fully serviced. To this end discussions are taking place, I understand from what my hon. Friend has said, between the commercial banks and the Bolivian Government.

My hon. Friend's proposal goes on to assume that developed country Governments will somehow be persuaded to provide the necessary finance with which to pay off the commercial banks, and that the commercial banks will be prepared to take the balance sheet losses involved. It would replace substantial debts previously owed to commercial banks with an investment or loan —however one wishes to describe it—for a considerably smaller amount owed to these Governments. The Bolivian Government would then repay developed country Governments this smaller amount in pesos. The pesos would then be used as part of developed countries' help with the Bolivian drug eradication programme.

My hon. Friend is putting this proposal to me rather than to any of my colleagues at the Home Office or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office because of my responsibility for policy on debt. Therefore, it is as a solution to the debt problem that I must assess it, and not in terms of development aid or as a solution to the drugs problem. We therefore need to decide whether it provides a better use of developed countries' funds than our current approach to debt, both generally and in Bolivia.

First, as I have said, the Bolivian Government have made good progress so far in making key structural changes in their economy. We should encourage them further by providing finance in support of further such reforms. Secondly, to the extent that the commercial banks are unwilling to sell the debt back to Bolivia but are prepared to sell it to other Governments, it must be the case that they perceive a risk and a cost in selling to Bolivia which they do not want to bear.

If developed country Governments buy the debt, the banks would be passing that cost and risk on. That would go against the principle that all those with a stake in a particular debtor country should share proportionately in helping alleviate the debt. To go against that principle would be to set a dangerous precedent. The commercial banks would be even less likely to carry their share of the risk in future debt packages in other countries, and we would disrupt the process of returning international financial markets to working without Government intervention.

Therefore, if we are talking solely about a solution to Bolivia's debt problem, I am not convinced that my hon. Friend's scheme is a better use of developed country resources than the provision of new money within the policy framework that I have described earlier. I am not in a position to say whether my Home Office or Foreign Office colleagues would view this as a more effective use of their funds for drugs eradication or aid than the direct funding that they already provide. I also suspect that the

[The Economic Secretary to the Treasury]

United Kingdom will not be alone among the developed country Governments in having some difficulty with the scheme.

Nevertheless, we shall be looking further at the proposal that my hon. Friend has put forward tonight and we shall consider it carefully. I would not want to rule it out completely at this stage. Certainly we would not want to stand in the way of such a scheme if the commercial banks were prepared to come to an arrangement directly with the Bolivian Government. We should not forget that the exposure of the United Kingdom banks to Bolivia commercial debt is only a small proportion of the whole. We would have to work in very close co-operation with developed countries if any proposal along those lines were to be taken forward.

I would not want to leave the House tonight in any doubt about our commitment to helping eradicate drugs or to alleviating the debt problem. My hon. Friend's proposal shows great ingenuity in trying to bring those two areas together. I congratulate him on putting it forward for consideration both here and internationally, and I shall reflect upon what he has said.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes to Twelve o'clock.

House of Commons

Friday 19 December 1986

The House met at half-past Nine o'clock

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

BILL PRESENTED

DOG FIGHTING (PENALTIES)

Mr. Harry Greenway, supported by Sir Hugh Rossi, Sir Marcus Fox, Mr. Roy Galley, Mr. Frank Field, Mr. John Hannam, Mr. Allan Rogers, Mr. Tim Smith and Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth, presented a Bill to amend the Protection of Animals Act 1911 to increase the penalties for offences against animals under section 1(1): And the same was read the First time; and ordered to be read a Second time upon Friday 23 January and to be printed. [Bill 43.]

Christie Hospital, Manchester

Motion made and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Lennox-Boyd.]

9.35 am

Mr. Fred Silvester (Manchester, Withington): The outstanding feature of Adjournment debates is that the answers are always written before the questions are heard, but perhaps today will be an exception. Debates on specific hospitals and problems in the Health Service are usually answered the easy way and we all have on our files interesting letters from the predecessors of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, including my right hon and learned Friend the Member for Rushcliffe (Mr. Clarke) and my hon. Friend the Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), which take the straightforward line.

There are three lines of defence in such matters. The first is to quote the global sums spent on the NHS, which are remarkable but not always relevant. The second is to refer to living within our means, about which we have several letters on file. The third is to suggest that Ministers have no power to intervene in regional decisions. The case of ministerial detachment is unsatisfactory because, although Ministers cannot intervene in every local decision, they cannot escape from the casual connection between policies devised at the Elephant and Castle and their effect in the field.

Not everything can be answered by generalities. We have got into the procrastinating habit of assuming that general principles worked out by the Department must be applicable to each local circumstance and if we have to stretch the hospital or chop off its legs to make them fit, we shall do that. Until my right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Hayhoe) came to the Ministry, the central problem facing us was not being tackled. General principles do not apply in every case.

Today I want to talk specifically about the Christie hospital. It is no ordinary hospital, but is the largest single cancer-treating hospital in Europe and is linked with one of the leading cancer research institutes. Its origins go back to 1893 when the first of the two elements was founded, and it was brought together on its present site as a combined hospital known as the Christie in 1932. Cancer research has been pioneered there since the mid-1940s when Dr. Edith Paterson, an expert in radiation biology, was at work. The Paterson institute is almost entirely sustained by public subscription and has carried on the work of cancer research in conjunction with the hospital. The hospital undertakes many drugs trials and there is a regular interchange of personnel with centres overseas. For those reasons the Christie is a national asset and an undisputed centre of excellence.

I decided to bring the questions arising from the hospital to the House today because I wanted to summarise what we were able to tell the Prime Minister on her visit last Friday and to ensure that her words found a place on my hon. Friend's agenda and were not forgotten. We were delighted to welcome the Prime Minister and she saw the hospital, which is working well, its several new facilities, enormous dedication and considerable efficiency. The Prime Minister was told of some of the things that I will the House. She told us how important it was for the country to preserve and encourage centres of excellence. I emphasise that my comments are not a begging letter or a bellyache. To suggest that the Christie is going downhill and depriving people of treatment is a travesty of the truth. It depresses and sickens me when hospitals are used as pawns of political propaganda.

[Mr. Fred Silvester]

First, as an aside, I draw my hon. Friend's attention to a card which is going around which was published by the Labour party in support of its "Save our health service" campaign. The card shows a child's drawing. It says:

"My grandad is the fittest person I know. 2 years ago he was very poorly and when he went into Christie's Hospital they cured him."

The card is from a child aged eight called Ruth. That card, which was made in London and made its way to Manchester, has caused great offence to some in the hospital because it implies that the Labour party gives official backing and credence to the proposition that the sort of help available to Ruth's grandad would not be available unless a particular political party was elected. I find that offensive, as do some others.

I do not want to fall into the same trap of making political mileage one way or another about the Christie. We must deal with an important point of principle and fact if we are to get it right. In the past six years, the Christie has had much new building and it treats more people than ever. The Christie has a problem of success, because its success is paid for despite rather than because of the NHS system of resource allocation. In brief, the Christie's excellence continues to attract patients for whom there is no allocation. The Christie copes. It raises huge sums through voluntary effort. The Christie is the most efficient cancer hospital bar none. It has squeezed a quart, even a gallon, into a pint pot. All those qualities—excellence, voluntary effort, efficiency and hard work—are precisely the virtues which the Government seek to promote, but the reward has not followed the endeavour.

The Pat Seed scanner was provided by a fund in honour of the brave lady who fought cancer and gave so much encouragement to others. The fund raised £1 million for the scanner and the building. The Jubilee out-patients suite and the day ward were provided by voluntary subscriptions which raised £1·5 million. The adult leukaemia unit was subscribed by the Leukaemia Research Fund, the Cancer Research Campaign and the Women's Trust Fund at a cost of £800,000. The Pat Seed appeal committee has agreed to provide a developmental linear accelerator at a cost of a further £1·2 million. The Kay Kendall Foundation will provide a new laboratory in experimental haematology costing £900,000 and the Women's Trust Fund is providing £100,000 for the medical oncology department's research laboratories. I am sure that my hon. Friend is a mathematician. If she adds all that up, she will find that during the past six years about £5·6 million has been raised by voluntary effort. Not a penny of that has come from public sources.

The Christie is the most efficient cancer hospital bar none. If one considers the cost comparisons available for hospitals providing a similar service in the United Kingdom and the summary tables one finds, for example, that the cost per in-patient case at the Christie is £678. Those are the 1984-85 figures. The hospital with the nearest total is in the Trent area. Its cost per in-patient case is £738. The royal Marsden in London has a cost per in-patient case of more than £1,000. The nursing cost per in-patient case in the Christie is £88. The next nearest figure per in-patient case is twice as expensive and the royal Marsden is four times as expensive. Those comparisons may be carried out in the domestic service, too, and in catering and building maintenance. Whichever yardstick one applies, one finds that the Christie is in the most efficient section.

Secondly, I shall dwell briefly on the comparison with the royal Marsden hospitals in the Fulham road and Surrey. I shall try to avoid paranoia in this matter, because I know that my hon. Friend the Minister is not altogether sympathetic about some comparisons between the north and the south. But these comparisons are extraordinary and they cause raised eyebrows, if nothing else. The basic figures which I have already given to my hon. Friend show that the average cost per patient is four times as great at the royal Marsden in London. If one considers the expenditure tables for 1985-86, one finds that the royal Marsden in Surrey gets approximately £10 million a year from public funds for a case load of 5,895. The royal Marsden in London gets another £10 million for a case load of roughly 5,989. The Christie gets approximately £11 million, some of which is earmarked, for a case load of more than 10,000. Similar sums of public money are being spent on double the number of patients.

Whichever way one looks at it, the figures are highly unsatisfactory. The cost per in-patient day at the royal Marsden on medical and surgical equipment is £6·50 and is £1·37 at the Christie. In pharmacy, the figure is £13·95 at the royal Marsden and £8·27 at the Christie. In radiology, it is £2·33 at the royal Marsden and £1·31 at the Christie. The drugs bill at the royal Marsden is £1·5 million. At the Christie it is £900,000. The staffing facilities are much better at the royal Marsden, not only in numbers but also because the royal Marsden appears to have no nursing auxiliaries and many senior nurses, while much work is done at the Christie with nursing auxiliaries.

If there were only one or two discrepancies one would not make much of it, but the fact is that the cumulative evidence of the difference of treatment at the royal Marsden and at the Christie provides continuous aggravation and no one has yet given a satisfactory explanation. We have investigated whether the type of case treated at the two hospitals is different, but apart from a certain amount of highly intensive neck surgery there is little difference between the two provisions.

Thirdly, I said that the Christie gets a quart into a pint pot. It serves a region, as my hon. Friend the Minister knows, which has the third highest cancer incidence in the country and a population with many elderly people who are coming up to the age when cancer is likely to develop. But if one considers the figures from 1980-85, one sees that the number of patients is up by 15 per cent. The throughput per bed is up by 28 per cent. The day cases are up by 43 per cent. The number of days that people spend in the hospital is down from 10·1 to 8·5. The hospital is squeezing more and more people through. That is not uncommon, of course, in the Health Service, but the record of the Christie in that respect is superlative. One can continue to do that for so long, but after that the cracks begin to show. The Christie has achieved all that with the cards stacked against it. There has been no major capital expenditure on X-ray by the region since it bought a piece of ultra-sound machinery in 1979 for £40,000. As a regional specialty, the Christie can bid for traditional funds for development, but little is forthcoming.

The needs are clearly apparent. In the case of radiotherapy, the present complement of treatment machines is six plus a cobalt 60 unit. The calculation of requirements over the next seven years is that nine linear accelerators will be needed. Even if that is achieved, the hospital will have only half the number of machines in relation to population served compared with the national average. In the case of diagnositic radiology, it has relied entirely upon Pat Seed money. There is an urgent need for a second scanner and the movement into nuclear magnetic resonance imaging will impose further requirements on the hospital. None of this has come from regional funds. It is all very well to rely on voluntary funds, and we approve of it, but there has been no matching provision from the regions.

It is not only capital, but running costs. The Christie takes in patients from all over. Five per cent. come from Wales. The cost of that to the hospital is estimated at £300,000 because there is no provision for the transfer of resources from one region to another. No fewer than 16 per cent. of the patients come from outside the north-west area. If one calculates that on the same basis, it costs roughly £1 million. I do not say that that is an accurate figure, but it is not far off. There is also a problem of calculating the number of patients, which is done two years in arrears and which is worth perhaps another £300,000.

This is all done within South Manchester district, which is suffering from similar pressure. In 1984, it is estimated that the district alone had a net inflow of 34,000 patients from other districts and the cost is valued at £27 million. The district wants to help the Christie, but it is under extreme pressure and it cannot sustain the burden which the Christie imposes upon its general finances.

One can see that in the drugs bill. We have been trying to cut the bill by negotiating prices, but that is limited by what the DHSS will permit. I do not argue about that. There are reasons for it, but it means that the hospital has a limited ability to act alone in this respect. In 1980-81, the Christie's drugs bill was £586,000. In 1985-86, it was £1·1 million. My hon. Friend will know that the reason is that, in cancer treatment, the joint use of chemotherapy and surgery as well as the use of chemotherapy alone has developed dramatically. Some of the drugs are very expensive. Indeed, taking account of inflation, the drugs bill is an increase of £350,000 in real terms over that five-year period. We calculate that, of that sum, £100,000 has come from the region and £250,000 has had to be found from the resources of the district. The position is neither tolerable nor reasonable.

Most dramatic has been the effect upon nurses. It is now accepted that the hospital is 50 nurses short of what it needs to maintain the service at this level of patient throughput. The region has just said that it will allow 20 more nurses, but that is for 1987-88 and will not begin until April 1988——

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): April 1987.

Mr. Silvester: I am pleased to hear that. My information was that they would arrive in April 1988. We have sent people to examine the nursing problems in the hospital and the strain is intolerable. Everything that we can do to speed the provision of additional nurses is essential.

Finally, because I wish to give my hon. Friend time to give a sympathetic reply, I refer to my right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth, the former Minister for Health, who in 1985 set up the review of the RAWP formula. It covers several of the matters that I mentioned, such as cross-boundary costing, the time lag, teaching and research and development. But I was a bit put off by a letter from Victor Paige, the former manager of the Health Service, who said:

"The review will not cover sub-regional resource allocation to districts."

Such a limitation would be absurd because some of the most acute problems arise in sub-regional allocation. But I took comfort from the fact that he went on to say:

"Information on sub-regional experience . . . would be welcomed."

Too right it would. Unless we tackle the problem of dealing with centres of excellence such as the Christie within the overall funding of the Health Service, we shall get nowhere. But it will take time. The Department has asked for answers from that study by the end of this year, and it will have to chunter through the system, so it will be some time before anything is done.

May I end by explaining the present needs of the Christie? As I said, these are not moaning complaints but expressions of the urgent needs of people who are doing a fantastic job and meeting demands which are made upon them. They are not going out touting for business. They need 20 nurses immediately, and I shall be glad to hear more about that. They need a revaluaton of the drugs bill, especially the regional contribution. Why does the royal Marsden have a drugs bill twice the size of the drugs bill at the Christie? We also need some matching help on capital expenditure. After all, if the hospital raises £5·6 million and gets nothing but a smile, it is a bit depressing.

If my hon. Friend will make some helpful remarks on those three points this Christmas time, she will have made a good start in helping the Christie hospital.

9.56 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security (Mrs. Edwina Currie): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) on being successful in Mr. Speaker's ballot and on giving us the opportunity to discuss the Christie hospital. He began his remarks with four hints to Ministers: that we should not prepare all our answers before hearing the questions; that we should not quote global sums for health services nationally, which he thought were irrelevant; that we should not blather on about living within our means; and that we should not say that we have no powers to intervene locally. I would dispute all those points, but perhaps not on this occasion. May I offer him one hint; that he listens carefully this morning because my voice will not last until the end of the sitting unless I can speak more or less in a whisper. I apologise to him for that.

My hon. Friend has been a staunch advocate of health services in the region, and, indeed, in the district. Recently, he brought some members of South Manchester health authority to meet Ministers and to share with them his concern about funding. The Christie hospital is run by South Manchester health authority which, in turn, receives its funding from the regional health authority. I hope that my hon. Friend accepts that it is relevant to consider, almost as an end-of-term report, the north-west region from which the Christie draws many of its patients.

[Mrs. Edwina Currie]

During the past month or so, considerable progress has been made. On 1 December, approval was given for a £21·5 million development at Chorley general hospital. On 12 December, approval was given for a £14·7 million development at the royal Lancaster infirmary. My hon. Friend the Minister for Health laid the foundation stone for the £30 million development at Manchester royal infirmary on 12 December, the day when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister visited Christie hospital. In that sense, the north-west region has made considerable progress recently.

It is worth pointing out that, during the years of this Government, considerable change has taken place. In 1978-79, the North-West regional health authority received just under £380 million a year in revenue. This year, it has received £904 million in revenue. In addition, this year, it is receiving about £72 million in capital moneys, which is the second largest allocation in the country, the largest being to the West Midlands regional health authority. My hon. Friend's academic skills will enable him to do the calculation for himself, but he will see that there has been a considerable allocation of extra money to that part of the country—well above the extra money that has been allocated to regions in the London area, which have remained much closer to their targets for much longer.

The results can be seen in the numbers of patients treated and in the number of direct care staff. in December 1978, the north-west region was looking after 512,000 in-patients. Last year, that had risen to 614,000. The number of people attending out-patient clinics had gone up from 3·1 million to 3·6 million, and the number attending as day cases had gone up from 68,000 to 116,000. The number of direct care staff employed by the North-West regional health authority has gone up from just under 40,000 to 48,000. It is worth pointing out that some patients who might once have been treated at the Christie may now be treated in other centres simply because the first class work of cancer researchers has shown that some treatment can be delivered in more ordinary surroundings, and the same standards achieved.

There has been the £72 million provided this year for the north-west region, and 58 major capital schemes, costing over £1 million each, have been completed since 1978. Some 14 schemes are under construction, including the Manchester royal infirmary, and 18 are approved to start. This represents a total investment in hospitals in Manchester and Lancashire of more than £320 million since 1978. Whatever the local Labour party may be claiming, it could not begin to claim that any Labour Government had put that kind of money into any part of the Health Service, north or south, and that is an acknowledged record.

The South Manchester health authority, which manages the Christie hospital, is a teaching district and its hospitals are linked with Manchester university. The main hospitals are the Withington, the Wythenshawe and the Christie, which is the smallest, with 347 beds. The total funding of the health authority in 1982-83, the first year of its establishment as a district health authority—we cannot go back any further because it did not exist in that form before—was £68,757,000 and in 1985-86 it had gone up to £80 million, which is an improvement in real terms, despite the fact that one of the aims of the regional health authority is to shift money, as far as possible, to match population growth. That growth has tended to be outside Manchester rather than within it. Other districts, such as Bolton, have seen an increase in population and have a reasonable claim on the moneys of the north-west region. Nevertheless, south Manchester has still had a small increase in real terms.

The number of patients treated in south Manchester has gone up from 513,000 in 1982 to 550,000 in 1985. My hon. Friend may call that an irrelevant generality, but it refers to real patients and is worth putting on record.

Mr. Silvester: Does my hon. Friend understand that the regional plan wants the Christie to treat fewer people? It is getting more patients because doctors will not send them somewhere else, but it is not getting the funding for them.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend will realise that there is the dilemma of the hump, which is that good doctors will not send their patients somewhere else until good facilities are provided somewhere else. At the moment, we spend large sums of capital money while we are not yet able to open the facilities in places such as Bolton. I have no doubt that that is broadly the right way of going about things. It is always good to be able to point out that the number of patients treated is rising and is, I suspect, adequate.

The Christie hospital and Holt Radium Institute, with the separately administered Paterson Laboratories on the same site, serve a large part of the United Kingdom. They serve the north-west region, south Cumbria, which is in the northern region, Cheshire which is in the Mersey region and, as my hon. Friend has said, north Wales. There is an out-patients clinic in Wrexham. As my hon. Friend said, the Christie was founded in 1893 and moved on to the present site in 1932. I understand that it is one of the largest specialist cancer hospitals in Europe, but my hon. Friend has said that it is the largest, and I defer to his local knowledge. I take my hon. Friend's point about matching capital offers from the voluntary sector, but it is worth pointing out that £10·5 million comes from the Health Service, and that is a substantial contribution.

There are some 850 staff, measured in whole-time equivalents, and the number of patients treated, both discharges and deaths, in 1985, at 10,735, was 22 per cent. higher than in 1979, when fewer than 9,000 patients were treated. The waiting list is 327, but I am sure that my hon. Friend will agree that we do not mind what the number on the waiting list is as long as waiting lists have the same sort of waiting times as they do at the Christie. It takes the hospital only 12 to 14 days to clear the waiting list, which is highly commendable.

My hon. Friend mentioned recent capital developments, which are both voluntary and NHS-funded, such as the new aseptic suite, which was completed in March 1986 at a total cost of £142,000 and the new radiotherapy linear accelerator, which was also provided in March, at a cost of £450,000 and the adult leukaemia unit, which was completed in October at a cost of £817,000.

My hon. Friend's words give me the opportunity to express our heartfelt thanks and appreciation to all those who have raised such enormous sums of money. The Health Service is, and always has been, a partnership.

Voluntary funding and effort were there long before the Health Service was even thought of. It is good to see it functioning well in a hospital such as Christie, where voluntary funding can be put to such good use. I am sure that my hon. Friend will join me in giving our warm thanks to all concerned and in encouraging them to continue. He may know that I was involved in a small way in helping to set up the leukaemia research fund activity in south Birmingham when I was a councillor there, and I was involved with it for 10 years. I have always felt that we should tap into people's willing generosity in that way and encourage them to help. It would be a sad day for all of us if voluntary activity disappeared, and we were totally reliant on state funding.

The Christie has one or two activities to which we should draw attention. I was particularly interested to notice that it is treating over 350 cases of cervical cancer a year and is at the heart of the region's preventive effort on this detectable and curable cancer. It is worth noting that, by March 1988, every one of the 19 north-west districts will have a cervical cancer call and recall system. We hope that the day will come when the death toll from cervical cancer will drop sharply.

My hon. Friend raised a number of other issues. In particular, he went into detail in his comparison with the royal Marsden hospital in London. The consultants at the Christie are arguing that the hospital is underfunded and draw unfavourable comparisons with the major national hospital in London. My hon. Friend said that he felt that the Marsden was several times more expensive in its treatment of patients, and was good enough to provide some detailed examples of that. However, he will know from an answer to his parliamentary question on 26 February this year that the Marsden's costs per patient day are not several times higher but 80 per cent. higher. My predecessor was able to tell my hon. Friend that the cost per in-patient day at Christie was £76 and that for the royal Marsden £138, while the cost per in-patient case at Christie was £657 and that at the royal Marsden £1,181. Those are the figures on which we should rely.

My hon. Friend knows that these matters are under careful consideration, and broadly there are three reasons why the royal Marsden appears to be more expensive than the Christie. The first is that the royal Marsden is the national centre and receive patients from all over the country. Although the description of the work may be similar, at least some of its cases may be more complex, and may prove to be more expensive, wherever they might be treated.

The second reason is that London is more expensive. Neither my hon. Friend, who represents a northern seat, nor I probably like that, but it is a fact, and we are keen to investigate why London costs should be higher and how they can be reduced to more average levels.

The third reason seems to be that, whatever one might say about the royal Marsden, the Christie is highly efficient in its use of resources. At 89 per cent., the average occupancy rate at the Christie is very high. As I have said, the waiting list clears rapidly, the throughput of patients seems to be good, and so on. Two things come out of the comparison. First, whenever we review what is happening in London, we push hard on the question of the royal Marsden's costs and compare them with those of the Christie. We ask the royal Marsden why, if the Christie can operate at that sort of cost, the royal Marsden cannot. That is not an easy challenge for a good hospital to meet, but it is nevertheless an appropriate challenge. Secondly, as my hon. Friend will know, the north-west region has been investigating the Christie's fears about funding. In other words, these matters are taken seriously and, indeed, it has been looking at the funding of all the regional specialties.

I understand from Sir John Page, the regional health authority chairman, that the regional medical officer, Dr. Stephen Horsley, has been having discussions with the consultants at the Christie and that that should lead to an agreed workload so that the work that can be devolved to districts is so devolved, and the same high standards can be maintained while ensuring that the Christie's special qualities and talents are effectively used for more serious or difficult patients.

It has been mentioned that on Wednesday, even while the review is going on, the region agreed to provide an extra £170,000 in order to fund 20 extra nurses in the year beginning April 1987-88. That means that those nurses can be taken into consideration from April. In the intervening three months advertisements must be placed, applications will be received and interviews will be carried out, if appropriate. The staff involved may have to give notice somewhere else and so the beginning of April is probably just about as close to "at once" as one can get. That would seem to be satisfactory.

The other points raised by my hon. Friend are being taken on board in the region's broad review of what is going on. I include in that the Christie's complaint that the number of beds that it has for radiotherapy is well below national guidelines. However, I should point out that the excellent work done at the Christie may help us to revise those national guidelines and to see whether we can provide our cancer patients with a service which is both effective and efficient.

My hon. Friend mentioned charging for patients from other regions and from Wales. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State wrote to another regional Member of Parliament on this issue on 28 November 1986, and I should be glad to make a copy of that letter available. He broadly said that we were prepared to look at any system of cross-charging. However, we bear in mind that those patient flows are taken into account in the resource allocation working party programme and have been looked at again recently. We are also extremely wary of setting up yet more bureaucracy, as that may well mean that money is absorbed into administration instead of going into patient services. However, in principle we are prepared to look at any system.

I do not have time to deal with the valuation of the drugs bill or with some of the questions that my hon. Friend posed. But the very fact that those issues have been raised today will no doubt mean that they are taken into account. I am glad to have had the opportunity to join in my hon. Friend's praise for this first-class, outstanding hospital which serves the north-west and local people so very well. With my hon. Friend, I thank those local people who have raised voluntary funds. We are ensuring that the hospital has the right resources, and we are investing more in the north-west region. I hope that my hon. Friend will continue to help us in spreading that good news.

Homelessness

10.13 am

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): I wish to raise the issue of homelessness this winter. It is particularly relevant to our series of Christmas Adjournment debates, as the rigours of winter are now upon us, as we felt last night, and the exclusion of people from the security of a home and from family ties is particularly poignant at this time of the year. Indeed, the story of Christmas is in part about homelessness, and an expectant mother in Bethlehem who had no roof over her head.

That plight and that lack of shelter will affect thousands of people at the turn of the year. Later today, Shelter will hold a candlelight vigil at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, and will protest and plead for permanent, affordable and decent housing for rent. This morning, I plead for that, and for the flocks of people who do not have roofs over their heads or secure and affordable homes this winter. The number of people has shamefully increased since 1979, just as the number of those unemployed has.

Ten days ago, in a written answer, the Under-Secretary of State for the Environment gave us the figures in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher). They can be found in column 30 of Hansard for 8 December 1986. In 1979, 57,000 households — I emphasise households — were accepted as being homeless. In 1982, 75,000 households were accepted as homeless, and in 1985, 94,000 households were so accepted. In the first six months of 1986, 51,000 households had been accepted as being homeless and without shelter. Thus the figure is running at a rate of well over 100,000 a year, which is about double the level accepted as homeless in 1979.

Of course, if one includes the number of households that are homeless but are not accepted as being in a vulnerable category, the figure stands at over 200,000 a year. I have laid stress on the term households as an even greater number of people are really affected. The figure for the number of those rendered homeless each year is probably equivalent to at least the entire population of Croydon. Moreover, if one takes the slightly higher figure, it is probably equivalent to the whole population of Bristol being made homeless during the course of 12 months.

Many more people could be added to those statistics. I am talking about single people who may be too desperate or hopeless to figure in the statistics. They may sleep rough or in wholly unsatisfactory accommodation. They are commonly called down and outs, because they are down the social and economic scale, and out of the statistics. They seek temporary refuge, even at the entrances to our tube stations, in order to have the benefit of some of the warm air that comes up, or they may sleep on the embankment because they prefer that to staying at common lodging houses. Of course, that is the extreme, and it is not the plight of many of those who become homeless, and who are accepted as such by the local authorities. However, those people still tell us something about the nature of the problem that we face.

Some of those at the extreme of homelessness, who are single and rootless , would prefer at this time of year to go to prison for a month for committing a petty offence than to endure the rigours of the open air or the problems of a common lodging house. It is not unknown for such people to plead in the magistrates' court that they should be put in prison. That is what they want when faced with the choice of going behind bars or sleeping under the stars. It is extraordinary that people should have to end up preferring the consequences of petty crime to the alternatives facing them.

Even in the mainstream of homelessness, there have been recent cases of ordinary, respectable families who have never been involved in any kind of petty crime—I do not wish to give the impression for one moment that all single homeless people are involved in crime—having to be accommodated overnight in police stations and police cells because no other shelter was available for them. Many of those who are accepted as being homeless are not immediately and quickly allocated a home. They are put up in bed and breakfast accommodation. But bed and breakfast accommodation is a continuing form of homelessness. It is often overcrowded and insanitary and has insufficient cooking facilities. It removes people from their natural ties with the community. A minority of bed and breakfast accommodation, which is the lot of many who are accepted as being homeless, is a death trap.

I have received a note from the Home Office adjusting the figures that were given to me in a parliamentary answer on 23 June 1986. I am now told that 90 people died in fires in bed and breakfast hotels, hostels and multiple occupied properly in 1984, which is the latest year for which figures are available.

This Christmas, in Hounslow 1,000 homeless people will spend Christmas in a hotel that has been classified by environmental health officers as below minimum standards. Nevertheless, it is used by some local authorities for the placement of the homeless. In Greater London alone, on the latest available statistics for September 1986, supplied by the Association of London Authorities, 13,000 homeless households were living in temporary accommodation. Of those, 1,773 households were living in hostels, 4,128 were living in short-life accommodation, and an amazing 6,142 households were living in bed and breakfast accommodation. The total number of people would fill an empty Wembley arena three times, yet, over these winter months, they will live in another form of homelessness, in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Not all these statistics are for the hard-pressed London boroughs. Recently, I went to a Labour party meeting in Carshalton. Carshalton and affluence almost seem to go together. I discovered that, in the London borough of Sutton, about 90 families were living in bed and breakfast accommodation or temporary accommodation. Incidentally, that number is about three times higher than the number of starts of rental housing accommodation in that London borough which certainly is not deprived.

I found that, in many other parts of the country, bed and breakfast homelessness would have been unthought of a few years ago. Now, for the first time, because of the policy of cuts in housing allocations, against their better judgment, and certainly against their will, local authorities have to place homeless families in bed and breakfast accommodation. Bed and breakfast homelessness destroys, sometimes literally when children die in accidents on stairs or when people die in fires. It also destroys in another sense. It destroys the personality of the people involved. The absence of possessions brings about a different attitude towards society. There is resentment.

Recently the magazine, "Roof" quoted two examples of the effect of homelessness on children. One research worker said:

"Hotel children were often late walkers, late talkers and slow in keeping themselves clean. You often see children still walking around in nappies at three years old."

Another research worker found that there was a link between speech delays and the lack of play experience. She said:

"When children begin to get mobile they develop their motor skills. Lack of play opportunities plus a depressed mother leads to an understimulated child who is slow to develop."

Homelessness also destroys in that manner. One sees the consequences of it sometimes only 10 or 15 years later. In Bayswater, there is a hotel in which 100 people are reported to share five cooking rings and one oven, and in which a 13-year-old child, instead of eating food cooked in the hotel, has taken to eating the cockroaches off the floor. In Streatham, in my constituency, there are 35 homeless people in the Gleneldon hotel. That hotel has no toilet seats, the wash basins are cracked, and bannister struts are nissing, causing danger. In another hotel, two or three people share rooms as a result of the depressed rates of payment made by the DHSS. The Campaign for the Homeless and Rootless has informed me of a hotel in Lambeth which is now sleeping four people to a room. They are the only three hotels in Lambeth known to the Threshold Advice Service with accommodation within the new board and lodging limits.

Bed and breakfast homelessness is exploding. It is not a static figure. It is as expensive as it is debilitating. Of course, the costs paid by local authorities vary from one place to another. The Department of Health and Social Security estimates the cost of keeping families in bed and breakfast accommodation at £136 a week. That is an extraordinarily high amount being spent on the consequences of homelessness. I was provided with figures on the net revenue expenditure on bed and breakfast hotels for the homeless in London. One can get some idea of how these figures are escalating. In 1981, in Greater London, the cost of this phenomenon was £4·3 million. By 1984-85, the latest date for which I was able to obtain figures for the whole of London, that expense had risen to £12·4 million. This winter, bed and breakfast homelessness will make a bonfire of public funds, while some people will freeze because of the lack of shelter.

The 16 members of the Association of London Authorities maintain that that experience is enormously expensive and a scandalalous waste of public money, when one could engage on a programme of home purchasingve and repairs. They calculate that such a programme would bring about a cumulative saving of £45 million of public money by the financial year 1988-89. They estimate that that amount would cumulatively be saved by providing the homeless, who now go to bed and breakfast accomodation, with permanent secure homes.

This winter, the lack of shelter that will engulf so many people mainly in London, but also in other parts of the country, is a direct result of the cuts in funds that were made available for local authorities to invest in their housing programmes. That is an overall cut of about 70 per cent. in housing investment since the Government came to office. A comparison for Greater London between the cuts that took place between 1979-80 and 1984-85, adjusted for inflation, show in real terms a reduction of expenditure on housing that was permitted by the Government in Greater London of £1·48 billion in 1978-79 to £58 million in 1984-85. That is a considerable cut.

That is not a natural disaster or something beyond our control. It is a disaster manufactured by the policies of 10 and 11 Downing street, abetted by the Department of the Environment. The cuts will be continued next year. It is no good the Government telling us there will be an increase in housing expenditure next year. The basic housing investment programme will suffer a further cut. The Government are only dressing up the figures with the increased receipts that will be available to some authorities to spend on housing, but only 20 per cent. of the capital receipts will be from the sale of homes. This does not help the homeless, first, because big capital receipts do not arise in the hardest-pressed boroughs; secondly, because even if receipts became available for those boroughs—such as Lambeth, Southwark and Camden—little land can be used to provide additional homes; and, thirdly, because there is generally an overall loss on rented accomodation because of the exercise of the right to buy in London where the housing is not being replaced.

The Government recently announced two initiatives which have been concentrated on London and the homeless. I shall not quibble or be resentful about those programmes. One involves the Housing Corporation—in the jargon, the 30 per cent. HAG scheme—and a combination of public and private money. That will not be enough. It will provide 500 temporary—I emphasise the word temporary—dwellings by 1987-88. The homes will not be of the right type. Permanent homes are needed for people to rent.

The other initiative is the urban renewal housing unit scheme — the estate action unit — which will be concentrated on London boroughs. But, in most of the London boroughs where there have not been acceptances of the scheme, there has been a history of indecision and refusal. I believe that only Greenwich has been able to take advantage of the scheme.

If the Government are not keen on these measures, why do they not give a direction to the London Docklands development corporation to provide homes to rent? The one large vacant space in London is being disgracefully misused in housing terms by inadequate provision of homes to rent which could deal with some of central London's problems. We demand a reversal of the escalating pattern of homelessness. The difficulties will be only slightly ameliorated by the present crumbs from the Treasury table. We demand a programme of affordable homes to rent — some by new building, some by modernisation and some by repair. We must set local authorities with these problems free with the resources and the powers to provide the homes needed to cope with the enormous and rising tide of homelessness.

We must give new rights to bring empty properties into use, whether public or private. I hold no brief for any home that can be adapted for living which is unnecessarily left vacant. That is why, during consideration of the recent Housing and Planning Bill, the Opposition proposed a form of right to rent even of public dwellings left empty for more than six months. The Government resisted that proposal. We need an initiative that is applied in empty homes, whether in the public or the private sectors.

It is an obscenity day after day as I drive through London to see homes that have been empty not just for a few months, because of a change of hands, but for years.

[Mr. John Fraser]

There should be power of requisition to make those homes available to a local authority, to a private individual or to a housing association to provide housing to rent. We need new rights that will make more homes available for renting.

We need a strategy for London and the other conurbations. It is no good expecting each London borough or each hard-pressed district outside London to cope entirely with its problems. If we did, the problem of dealing with homelessness would be like a number of people trying to chip their way out of their prison cells without a concerted effort to bring them liberty. The greatest contribution would be for the Government to give way to those who have the political will to deal with the appalling problem of homelessness. That is what counts and what will bring results.

This might be an appropriate time at the turn of the year for the Government at least to resolve that they will allow the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless to embrace Britain. The Government talk about that year as though, somehow, homelessness and lack of shelter were matters unknown in Britain but simply matters to be dealt with beyond this country's shores. I hope that the Government will take seriously in the forthcoming year their responsibilities to their citizens, because the numbers of homeless are growing rapidly. They deserve at least the token of Government care and compassion. However, we want not just tokens, but a new effort to provide decent, affordable housing for rent which will eliminate the problem and enormous cost of homelessness.

What is so wrong with housing for people at the extremes? It is not as though we lack the people to work on homes or the money. The building societies, the City and some local authorities are awash with funds. Sometimes, the funds of local authorities are in the wrong place, but, in the aggregate, there is not a shortage of resources and materials. With some training we can find the necessary skills. What is lacking is the political will. The Opposition resolve that the political will will be translated to deal with homelessness. It is a pity that that vigour and commitment are lacking from the Government.

10.37 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Richard Tracey): The hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) has given me a good opportunity to spell out the Government's deep and detailed concern for the homeless. At this time of the year, homelessness is a subject that is particularly on our minds, although it is on the Government's mind at all times. The details will become apparent as I continue my speech. Topically, outside we have the activities of Crisis at Christmas and a candlelight vigil outside St. Martin-in-the-Fields this afternoon, as the hon. Gentleman said. The vigil will attract press, television and radio attention and will focus the attention of the public as well as hon. Members on homelessness. It is natural that those with roofs over their heads should think particularly of those less fortunate during this festive season.

The cold is another reason why we should be particularly concerned about people sleeping out in the winter months. But some people evidently prefer the freedom of sleeping out to the restrictions which have often in the past been imposed in emergency accommodation—dislike of available accommodation was the most commonly noted factor associated with sleeping rough in a 1984 central London report. The aim must be therefore to see there is enough acceptable emergency accommodation to meet people's needs. I welcome the progress that is being made in many areas towards this goal, assisted by the impetus being given by the proposals to close DHSS resettlement units and the Government funding being made available in that context. In so far as limited periods of particularly cold weather make temporary extra provision desirable, it is open to local authorities and the voluntary sector to consider what can be done by opening up churches, schools and other public buildings as a temporary measure if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

More generally, homelessness as a continuing and increasing problem is a matter of deep and serious concern. Not having a roof over one's head is obviously one of the most traumatic things that can happen to anyone. But it is no good Labour Members or anyone else saying that it is all the Government's fault or that the remedies lie in the Government's hands. Much of the reason for homelessness being such an intractable problem is that it reflects social factors. Of those accepted by local authorities as homeless, for instance, the proportion becoming homeless as a result of marital dispute has risen by 25 per cent. in the past seven years. To give a basis for action to help deal with this aspect we as a Government are planning to commission research on the housing consequences of breakdowns in relationships. We will also be setting up a working party with the local authority associations to consider the implications for housing management in the public sector. Young people are also, it seems, continuing to leave home without fully appreciating the difficulties of finding other accommodation. Here, as a preventive measure, the Government are helping to fund the production of a leaflet by the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless Trust for wide distribution in schools and youth clubs advising young people thinking of leaving home on other accommodation prospects.

Mortgage arrears as a proportion of homeless acceptances have also doubled over the past seven years. This is another area where preventive work can help. Mortgage arrears problems arise for a number of reasons, but whatever the cause the answer is fundamentally the same—go to the lender as soon as possible to explain the circumstances in which one finds oneself. Respectable lenders take most seriously the need to try to resolve these problems early and in the right way. They are often willing, for example, to reschedule the loan or allow interest-only payments until the borrower can afford the full repayment again. For our part we have given a grant to the Birmingham settlement money advice centre to set up a national telephone counselling service to advise people in difficulties with debt repayment problems.

We also give a good deal of support to other organisations concerned with preventing people becoming homeless. Our overall budget for funding those projects and other housing advice services provided by voluntary bodies to the general public or to particular sectors, for example, prisoners, or young people leaving care, has been increased by over 50 per cent. in the past year or so and is now in excess of £500,000 per year. Prevention of homelessness is an important area and it may be that some local authorities would find that greater attention to it —by counselling and in other appropriate ways—would represent good value for money.

As hon. Members will be aware, it is on local authorities that the primary responsibility for helping homeless people rests. Homelessness is a factor in our allocation of resources to individual authorities and for 1986-87 this was altered to give a better measure of homelessness problems in each area. It is for authorities to decide for themselves their priorities for investment, but we have asked them to concentrate their resources on the homeless and other groups in special need.

Given the inevitable limitations on resources, it is essential to see that good use is made of existing property. Authorities must of course look carefully first at how efficiently they are managing their own resources. Can they do more to reduce the number of their empty dwellings and to speed up relets? There were—in some ways it is unbelievable — 113,300 empty council dwellings at 1 April 1986 including 27,100 which have been empty for over a year. We have taken a number of steps over the past year or so to encourage greater use of empty properties. We issued advice on this in July last year and extended grant to properties awaiting major repairs. We are currently consulting the local authority associations about a proposed general consent to authorities disposing to housing associations of an interest in such properties by way of leases of up to five years. And we help fund the empty property unit which gives advice on the use of empty housing.

Our most substantial recent measure has clearly been our offer of direct help through the estate action unit for authorities with the most acute homelessness problems. Extra resources as well as the unit's knowledge and expertise, which are considerable, have been offered to authorities which can take immediate advantage of them to bring empty dwellings back into use for homeless families. We have already announced approval of projects in London in Newham, Greenwich and Islington, and today I am happy to make the first announcement that we have now also approved projects for five authorities outside London—South Tyneside, York, Woodspring, Rushmoor and Milton Keynes. In all, this involves extra resources of £1·25 million with 130 dwellings being brought into use for the homeless. I hope that other authorities with similar problems will also now be able to take advantage of our offer.

Increasing the use of existing housing to benefit homeless people is an area where a number of authorities are beginning to show imagination. Bromley, Brent and Croydon, for instance, are providing financial incentives to encourage existing council tenants to move out and buy in the private sector. We are watching these schemes closely to see what lessons may emerge. Brent has had some success in persuading owners to lease empty flats above shops to provide interim accommodation for the homeless. Bexley has, with our financial support, launched a campaign to encourage owner occupiers to take in lodgers. Other councils perhaps need to consider more imaginative ways of encouraging futher use of their properties and of concentrating tenancies on those in the greatest need.

At the same time we are discussing with the Housing Corporation how to target its resources more on homelessness both inside and outside its housing stress areas. We are also taking action to make its resources go further by bringing in private finance. In particular, by using the new provisions on assured tenancies in the Housing and Planning Act 1986, grant at no more than 30 per cent. and private finance for the rest, housing associations will be able to provide decent accommodation for homeless families until permanent housing can be found. An additional £20 million of resources has been allocated for schemes in conjunction with the private sector and, together with the £10 million previously allocated, this will permit additional expenditure of about £100 million. This is an important breakthrough and the main beneficiaries will be young people moving to take up jobs and homeless families currently in bed and breakfast accommodation. The growing use of bed and breakfast——

Mr. John Fraser: The Minister has used the phrase additional resources more than once in relation to the estate action project and the Housing Corporation scheme. Am I right in thinking that both these initiatives are simply funded by monies which have been subtracted or transferred from other parts of each programme and do not represent additional new resources? In one case the funds have been subtracted from the total housing investment programme and in the other from the total of funds to the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Tracey: The resources are being specially targeted in a particular way and will use the expertise and knowledge of our housing experts. The hon. Gentleman is correct about such resources. Those resources are now being directed by the Government in a much more useful and valuable way than was previously the case.

The growing problem of bed and breakfast is a matter of serious concern to the Government. Our code of guidance to authorities on the homelessness legislation, now part III of the Housing Act 1985, regards the use of bed and breakfast as very much a last resort as interim accommodation. It is clearly unsuitable for families for any considerable period and is also usually the most expensive form of accommodation, as a recent Audit Commission report has made clear. The continuing increase in the number of homeless households being placed in bed and breakfast by authorities—5,400 in England at the end of June 1986, including 3,820 in London—and the reported increase in length of stay, with one or two London authorities warning new applicants that they would face a three-year stay in bed and breakfast, is alarming by any standards.

As you probably know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, my Department is undertaking a programme of research on homelessness. This will cover in particular how authorities operate the homelessness legislation and their use of temporary accommodation, including bed and breakfast. It is certainly not clear to me why, for example, some authorities make so much more use of bed and breakfast than others in what look like relatively similar situations. Our research involves a postal survey of all authorities in England and Wales, case studies of individual authorities, interviews with people in bed and breakfast and other forms of temporary accommodation and an appraisal of standards. We expect to receive the report of the postal survey in February and the rest of the research results in late 1987 or early 1988.

While on this point, it is worth emphasising how important it is that authorities should co-operate in such research and in completing our quarterly statistical returns on homelessness. We are considering what we can do to improve authorities' response and it was gratifying to have the support of the hon. Member for Norwood when he said:

[Mr. Tracey]

"I have no hesitation in saying that there should be an absolute duty on local authorities to supply the information that is essential for us to make policy decisions, irrespective of political control".—[Official Report, 3 November 1986; Vol. 103, c. 745.]

I note that the hon. Gentleman said "us" and we join across the House in that point. It beats me how authorities can imagine it is in their own interest to deny us such information.

I mentioned earlier what some authorities were doing to reduce reliance on bed and breakfast and I have referred to our initiatives through the estate action unit and the Housing Corporation to target additional resources on homeless families with the same goal. Permanent accommodation is of course, as our code makes clear, the aim for the homeless just as it is the wish of people in general. We have done a lot to help those who wish to buy their own homes and have taken some steps — for example, on shorthold and on assured tenancies — to encourage the provision of rented accommodation in the private sector, but we fully accept that for others, including the large majority of those accepted by authorities as homeless, renting from a local auhority or from a housing association is, at the moment at least, the only answer. How authorities allocate their housing is basically a matter for each authority to decide, taking into account their duties to the homeless and other statutory obligations.

Finally, the House will, I am sure, expect me to say something about housing resources. This year we increased the planned level of public sector investment in housing to £3,253 million — £200 million above the 1985-86 figure. For 1987-88 we are making a further increase to £3,661 million — £451 million higher than previously planned. But, whatever the level of housing investment, we can be sure that it will always fall short of the ideal as in so many other areas of life. Therefore, it will remain important to make the best use of the public sector resources that are available and to augment those as far as possible with private sector resources. Our break-through with housing association schemes is a good sign of this.

It is no good hon. Members saying that this is all a matter of resources. It is not. There is no panacea. It is important to do what we can to prevent homelessness. I hope that I have pinpointed that very clearly. In an era of perpetually rising expectations, prevention of homeless-ness is difficult enough, but it is also important to look carefully at the large number of relatively small measures —for example, those initiatives being taken by some of the London boroughs to encourage greater use of existing dwellings — which can improve flexibility and remove unnecessary obstacles. This is an essential area for effort, enterprise and good ideas. That brings far more dividends than any striking of political attitudes by Opposition

Mrs. Kuldip Kaur

10.56 am

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): I wish to bring to the attention of the House the problems facing a constituent of mine and his wife who is being held in prison by the Indian Government. In those circumstances, some background information may be of use.

Mr. Paul Bedi and his wife are both British subjects and are respected in the Asian community, not only in my constituency in Hayes, but throughout Britain. I have letters which prove their status in and value to the community. Indeed, one of those letters is from the Prime Minister and is dated 3 June 1985.

Mr. Bedi is a Sikh leader. He is a teacher of mentally handicapped children in Ealing and he is, for how long we cannot now be sure, chairman of the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society.

Earlier this year, in May, Mr. Bedi's wife undertook a trip to India to make arrangements for her daughter's dowry. When she arrived in New Delhi she was met by the eldest son of the Minister for Home Affairs in Delhi, a Mr. Buta Singh. The son arrived at the airport and quickly took Mrs. Bedi — who is also known as Mrs. Kaur — through immigration and customs. She was driven to where she was staying and subsequently during that visit she dined twice with the Home Affairs Minister. Indeed, she received VIP treatment on a surprising scale.

While Mrs. Bedi was there, she attempted, at the request of friends in Britain, to meet someone who had been detained by the Indian Government merely because he had lost his passport. She made an effort to see that person but because the arrangements took place in another part of India she was unable to do so. After making arrangements for the dowry and having had those social meetings with the Home Affairs Minister, she returned to the United Kingdom. That was a fairly uneventful visit.

I should add that the brother of Mr. Buta Singh, the Home Affairs Minister, who is the equivalent to our Home Secretary, also lives in my constituency, and is a friend and supporter of Mr. Bedi and his wife.

When Mrs. Bedi returned to the United Kingdom her eldest daughter's wedding took place and she received good wishes from the Prime Minister, the Lord Chancellor and the Speaker of the House of Commons. I have copies of the letters sent by them to Mr. Bedi and his wife.

During that time there was an election for the post of chairman of the Anglo-Asian Conservative society and, like the good politician he is, and we all try to be, Mr. Bedi decided he would do his best to ensure that he became chairman. He was successful on 18 August. I have to say that there is a great deal of anger among the people he defeated, in particular a Mr. Saroop, who has managed the organisation for some time. He took it upon himself to say some rather angry things about Mr. Bedi and to him because of the result. I make no comment about democracy within that society. All I can say is that it seems good politics to ensure, if one wants to win something, that one has friends who will vote in one's favour and out vote one's opponents. That is the story of the events that occurred between Mrs. Bedi's first visit to India and the second visit.

She went to India again on 27 August to see her father who was sick and to show the family some pictures of the wedding and other information. She took with her the cutting from an Asian newspaper printed in this country which showed pictures of the wedding. Unfortunately for her, instead of photocopying one side of the paper, she took the newspaper with her. On the reverse side of the details of the wedding and the support from the Prime Minister and others, there was an advertisement regarding Sikh extremist leaders. That will become significant.

As I have said, she arrived to see her father and relatives and had quite a long stay in India. On 18 October she was on her way to the airport with somebody from the British high commission in New Delhi who was seeing her off. As she was about to board the aeroplane in the early hours of the morning she was taken off by the police for questioning. One of the things they held against her was the cutting that shows the details of the wedding on the front and on the back details of the extreme Sikh movement.

She was questioned for a considerable time but no charges were made against her. Her passport was taken away and she was told to make frequent appearances at the police station in New Delhi. Throughout the 14 days from the time of her arrest I made contact with the Foreign Office and the Minister responsible for consular matters. I had several phone calls and actually met him to discuss the situation. In fact, I took Mrs. Bedi's husband with me on one occasion. It seemed impossible for the Foreign Office and the high commission in India to get very far. They were thwarted and were not told what the likely charges would be. They were not told whether she was to be released.

It was generally suggested that the Anglo-Indian situation is a bit delicate at the moment and that India is concerned about Britain being friends of Sikhs and not deporting Sikh extremists — people whom the Indians think are Sikh extremists. It was said that the matter should be kept low key because the Government do not want to exacerbate the situation.

After 12 days of getting nowhere fast, at the request of Mr. Bedi and some of his colleagues I decided to fly to New Delhi to see whether I could intervene on behalf of Mrs. Bedi, who was not allowed to come home. When I arrived on 31 October the high commission had been unable to arrange for me to see anyone. The authorities concerned flatly refused to see any representatives of Mrs. Bedi, despite the fact that she was my constituent and I had flown from the United Kingdom to try to influence the situation.

Because of the inability of our high commission to arrange a meeting for me with Mrs. Bedi, who was able to move freely around Delhi, I met a local politician who put me in touch with the Speaker of the Indian House of Commons. Within five minutes of meeting that man he had picked up the telephone, got through to Mr. Buta Singh, the Home Affairs Minister, and a meeting was arranged for me the next morning, Monday 3 November, at Mr. Buta Singh's office. I was made to feel as if I had asked to have an audience with, if I may use the expression, our Lord. I was made to feel that I was lucky to have the opportunity to meet such a man.

I arrived at 11 o'clock that morning and was ushered into his office. After the usual niceties he said, "Have you something for me — a gift?" In my usual ignorance of such affairs I pretended that I did not know what he was talking about and, effectively, the interview ended. He told me that he knew nothing of the family or of the case. He said that he would have to take advice from his officials. I have a reference from the same Mr. Buta Singh dated 31 October 1965 which he gave on behalf of Paul Bedi. It says that he is a social worker and the reference goes on:

> "I have known him for long past. He has impressed me with his devotion towards the national integration movement of India."

In spite of that, he sat there and told me he knew nothing of the family or the case. I asked him whether he had had a phone call from his own brother who lives in my constituency on behalf of the lady. He did not answer. I asked him whether he had had a phone call from Mr. Bedi direct and he did not answer. He then said that he had an important Cabinet meeting to attend and we had to end the meeting. He said that he would ring at 5 o'clock that evening, 3 November, to tell me what had happened and what views he might have after looking into the case. I am still waiting for that telephone call.

The next day through the high commission I attempted to obtain an audience — I suppose that is the correct word to use for the Prime Minister of India these days in view of the way he lords it around the world — to see whether I could raise the matter at that level. I was told by the high commission through the Prime Minister's private office that he would be ringing me later that day. Again, I am still waiting for that phone call. In the meantime, I went with Mrs. Bedi to the police headquarters in New Delhi. I cannot find words to describe the conditions at the so-called police headquarters. If the prisons of India are anything like the police headquarters, I have great concern for the people of that country who might be interned within them.

I arrived at police headquarters for a meeting with the deputy commissioner of police who was again to interrogate this lady at 1 o'clock. We were still sitting there at 3 o'clock although she and her lawyer had been separated from me. At 3 o'clock that afternoon I was asked to leave. I said that I was not prepared to leave until I had heard what they were saying and what they were going to do to my constituent. My constituent's lawyer then advised me to go because they said I might be locked up. There may be some people in this country, perhaps in my own party, who would prefer that. However, I decided to take the lawyer's advice and I left.

It was 9.40 that evening, after nine hours, that that lady was allowed to leave. Again, they did not tell her whether she was to be charged. She left in a very distraught state. In my submission, she was in no fit state to be treated in that way. I am not qualified in the medical profession, but one could see that she was on the point of a breakdown and that she needed help, support and understanding. I would add that that was given by the high commission. Miss Docherty, who was responsible for consular affairs, performed an excellent job, doing all she could to support the lady.

I came back and reported to the Foreign Office on this matter. While I was in India I was told quite clearly by the high commission staff that, "The British Government are very concerned about Anglo-Indian relations. We must not give the impression that we are treating this lady differently from any other consular case because the Indian Government might say that we are treating her specially because she is a Sikh and they might say that the British Government are treating Sikhs specially and harbouring potential terrorists."

I find all of that rather amazing bearing in mind the long friendship that Mr. Bedi and his wife had — perhaps still have, I do not know—with the Minister for Home Affairs. I asked the Foreign Office if it could tell me in how many other consular cases the prisoner involved was a personal friend of somebody the equivalent of our Home Secretary, had been welcomed by him in his official car, taken to his home and dined with him twice. Indeed, I forgot to mention that when Mrs. Bedi was lifted from the plane she had gifts from Mr. Buta Singh, the Home Affairs Minister, for his brother in this country. I have never heard of a similar case in which such circumstances have taken place.

[Mr. Terry Dicks]

The other interesting thing is that some time after my return Mr. Bedi had a personal telephone call from the Indian high commissioner in this country, saying: "Have you heard the good news?" Mr. Bedi said "No, what is it?" The reply was, "Your wife is to be released, and she is coming home." One can imagine the delight in the husband's heart when he heard that. He told his children, and they were thrilled to hear that at last their mother would be coming home. An hour later Mr. Bedi had a telephone call from his wife's lawyer, saying, "She is being charged and she is moving from the place where she is staying outside the police headquarters to a cell in the police headquarters."

What sort of country is it that can tell the high commissioner in this country to pass on personally to a man the message that his wife is being released and within the hour tell him the opposite? It is appalling for a so-called liberal, civilised Government to behave in that way. However, when I was asked for a bribe by the Home Affairs Minister, I should not have been surprised by such an attitude. I understand that we give about £114 million in various sorts of overseas aid to India. I do not know why. If that is the sort of Government who run that country, I reckon that we could almost double the Christmas bonus that we give to our old-age pensioners by redirecting India's money to them. That is a personal view, but it shows how strongly I feel about the disgusting treatment meted out by the Indian Government to my constituent, and about their attitude.

A newspaper cutting dated 30 November this year states:

> "The investigating agency admits that so far there is no concrete evidence against Mrs. Kaur."

I say to our Foreign Office that it is no good sitting down and playing the waiting game, saying, "Let's see what happens. Let's keep it quiet." That is not the way in which to treat this situation. If we could intervene at the top level with the Iranian Government to get the release of a British subject in Iran, why on earth are we not intervening at the top level to get Mrs. Bedi released, when she is being held on what I consider to be trumped-up charges?

We must discuss the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society. I understand from a newspaper today that is likely to be disbanded after a meeting in Conservative Central Office this morning, although, on checking with Central Office, I was told that it is not likely to happen. In the newspapers and elsewhere it has been suggested that there has been a secret takeover of the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society. Before the election took place, Sikh representation on the society was low. We are told that the Sikhs have taken over, and that is one of the reasons why Central Office has taken such action.

Let me tell the House what the breakdown of the society's executive committee is since the election in August. There are five Moslems, five Sikhs, three Hindus, one Bengali and one Englishman. Does that sound like a Sikh takeover? Does that sound like an organisation that has a one-sided view of what is needed to help our party win the next election? It does not seem so to me.

Mr. Saroop, who has manipulated and managed the society for many years—he has been chairman for six years out of a possible 12—was annoyed about this allegation. It is alleged—I say "alleged" advisedly—that he has contacts in India. It is not surprising to hear that when pressure was put on Mrs. Bedi, when she was in India, that was just after the election of her husband to the position of chairman. She was vulnerable to pressure in India by those over there who hate the thought of a genuine Sikh, who represents the community, and who has the support of the Hindu and Moslem groups in this country, running what the Indian Government consider to be an influential organisation.

It is not difficult to believe that pressure has been brought upon Mrs. Bedi so as to get Mr. Bedi to resign from his post over here, but, judging by the newspaper reports, the information that I am beginning to get is that he will have to resign or he will be kicked out. The organisation has been in existence for 11 years, and it is strange that the first time a Sikh takes the chair democratically the society has to be re-examined to make it more representative. The figures that I have given show how representative the society is.

The general feeling among correspondents in India to whom I spoke when I was there, and this is shown in the press coverage since then, is that Mrs. Bedi might be being held out there on trumped-up charges as a result of the political situation in this country. I often think that the Foreign Office always looks to the Foreign Office's interests first and the British interests afterwards. Again, that is a personal view, although I know that it is held by other colleagues, too. Yet again the Foreign Office wants to treat this as a consular matter when I believe that it is more important than that.

In the first stages, when the Foreign Office was short of information, it was doing all that it could. I praised it at the time, as well as the high commission in India, but the circumstances have changed. Mrs. Bedi is being held in prison. The police authorities have said that they can find nothing against her. Do they release her? Not on your life, Mr. Deputy Speaker. They have passed the facts to the intelligence agency so that the agency can take up the case. It is strange that Mr. Buta Singh, the man who is so keen on gifts before he does anything, is the very person who is in charge of the police and who arranged for Mrs. Bedi to be arrested and have the case passed on to the intelligence agency.

The Indian Government's behaviour is nothing short of appalling. It should be understood to be that and put on the public record. That is the reason why I have raised the case today. I want our Foreign Office to take a high profile. We know how important diplomacy is, and we also know the failures of diplomacy, but sometimes it demands that this country stands up for its subjects, no matter where they are and where they are being abused. It is not good enough to whisper in the corridors of power, "Don't worry. Things will work out all right if we play a low profile. Don't forget, Mr. Dicks, when you speak about your constituent, we have to concern ourselves with Anglo-Indian relations."

Mr. Bedi has the support of Asians throughout the community — not just Sikhs. The whole Asian community is watching what is happening. A strange turn of events is that Asians are saying, "Is it because Mrs. Bedi happens to be Asian that things are not being done on her behalf by our Foreign Office?" I have my suspicions about why things are not happening. I have a firmly held belief that the Indian Government want the case to die quietly, and if they do, so does our Foreign Office. I could believe that some progress was being made were Mrs. Bedi still being questioned and free to move around Delhi, but now she has been arrested. She is in a state of mental torture, if nothing else. Yet, after the police said that there was no evidence on which they could charge her so far, she has now been passed over to the security forces.

What will our Foreign Office do about that? Will it just sit back and let that lady languish in a cell? In the previous debate we heard about the needs of the homeless at Christmas time. What about the needs of Mrs. Bedi? I know that she is not a Christian, but her family living in this country enjoys Christmas as Christians do. While we are celebrating, that lady is likely to be languishing in a prison in India because of a corrupt Government. I say that advisedly. The legal advice that I received out there was that that lady and others there can be locked away pending police inquiries for 10, 15, or 20 years. The deputy commissioner told my constituent's lawyer out there, "You should feel yourself lucky that I happened to look at her case twice in a fortnight. I have some cases on my desk that I do not look at for as long as six months." Between the police examining those cases and saying, "Shall we question somebody else?" the people involved are left in prison cells or kept under house arrest. Is that the way in which the biggest democracy in the world should operate? I do not believe so.

I want our Foreign Office to take action and to adopt a high profile. I want it to be said, almost at Prime Ministerial level, that British citizens will not be treated in that way, as happened with Iran. We ought not to go crawling to the Indian Government, who do not know how to behave in a humanitarian way. The next time the Indian Prime Minister starts lecturing this country on our foreign policy towards South Africa or anywhere else, he should remember the British adage, "People in glass houses should not throw stones."

11.19am

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mrs. Lynda Chalker): I understand the anxiety of my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) for the well-being of his constituent and for the distress suffered by her family in the United Kingdom. I pass on to my hon. Friend the apologies of the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), who is away on Foreign Office business. That is why I am present this morning in his stead. However, we have spoken to my hon. Friend the Minister on the telephone and he was made aware of what my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington was likely to say this morning. I have taken specific advice.

I greatly regret some of the language that my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington has seen fit to use in referring to the Indian Government and the legal processes in that Commonwealth country. I firmly reject his suggestion that this Government or the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are unsympathetic to the welfare of their citizens abroad, or of the hard-working Sikh community in the United Kingdom, which contributes a great deal in its areas.

I am sorry that my hon. Friend has made some unpleasant and unjustified remarks about members of the diplomatic service this morning. In all my inquiries into this case, I cannot fault those members for having tried to help as best they can under the circumstances. I think that we must face what has happened by considering the facts. I am sure that that is exactly what my hon. Friend would wish, even though his information has led him down a path which I cannot follow.

My hon. Friend knows, as he described—and I have the papers containing the dates before me—that Mrs. Kaur was formally charged on 6 November 1986 under two sections of the Indian Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act 1985. That is the law of India. Her case must be heard by the Indian courts, but it has yet to be heard. I am sure that hon. Members will understand that, when such a case is before the court of a land, the circumstances make it very difficult for me to comment on the substance of the case.

We do not know the specific details of the charges beyond the formal statement to which I have already referred. Mrs. Kaur's case has been handled in a manner which is fully in accordance with the legal procedures of the Republic of India. They may not be exactly the same as ours, but we cannot enforce our system on the Indian Government. They have their system. There is legal provision for the police to prevent departure from the country of people whom they wish to question in connection with possible criminal charges. That is a provision within Indian law.

Mrs. Kaur was free to move within Delhi while holding herself ready for questioning. Charges were laid against her on 6 November. By the order of the chief metropolitan magistrate, she was remanded in police custody until 12 November. On 10 November the magistrate gave permission for our consul to visit Mrs. Kaur. On 12 November the magistrate ruled against the police application for an extension of police remand and directed that Mrs. Kaur be remanded in judicial custody.

According to the Indian code of criminal procedure, the accused must be produced at not more than 15-day intervals before a magistrate who can then remand the accused for a maximum of 60 days. Mrs. Kaur was remanded on 27 November and 6 December.

Legal proceedings are, as my hon. Friend will know, normally the preserve of state Governments. Under the Indian Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act the central Government may, after consultation with the state Government, directly exercise all the powers conferred by the Act. We do not know why the central authorities have taken over Mrs. Kaur's case. We cannot therefore confirm press speculation that this relates to the nature of the evidence against her. Had I other information for my hon. Friend, I would give it to him. However, I simply do not have any.

Visits by consular staff to Mrs. Kaur have occurred on several occasions. My hon. Friend will know that the rights of access due under the Vienna convention on consular relations, of which both we and India are signatories, have been granted. I also understand that hearings for Mrs. Kaur's application for bail have been postponed several times. Two of the postponements were for legal reasons and, on one occasion, there was a strike throughout Delhi, which made a hearing impossible. However, on three occasions the postponement was at the request of Mrs. Kaur's lawyer, Mr. Jethmalani, who works out of Bombay. Those dates on which the hearings of bail were adjourned at the request of Mrs. Kaur's lawyer were 17, 26 and 28 November.

[Mrs. Lynda Chalker]

Although I understand the anxieties of my hon. Friend and of Professor Bedi, the criticisms of the slow handling of the case are unfounded. I do not believe that under the legal system operating in India matters could have progressed faster given that there have been three adjournments at the request of Mrs. Kaur's lawyers.

I want to bring the House up to date with the latest legal position. The hearing on Mrs. Kaur's bail application was held on 17 December. Having heard it, the special magistrate reserved his position until today. We have no information at the moment as we have yet to hear his ruling. However, under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities (Prevention) Act 1985, the court can remand cases at 60-day intervals up to one year before trial. That is the law in India.

Hon. Members will understand from my account that we have sought to give Mrs Kaur, as a United Kingdom citizen, all the normal consular assistance in India. The high commission was in constant touch with her from the moment in mid-October — the night of 17 October — when she was prevented from leaving India until she was formally arrested and charged three weeks later. Since then she has been visited regularly by consular staff. I assure my hon. Friend that the high commission is continuing to monitor Mrs. Kaur's case, just as it monitors those cases of other British nationals detained in India regardless of colour or creed. I must refute my hon. Friend's comments with regard to Mrs. Kaur's Indian origin. She is a British citizen and she is being treated as such by our high commission.

It might be helpful if I made a few general comments about consular assistance abroad. Last year we produced a most useful booklet explaining what our consuls abroad can and cannot do for British nationals in trouble. Any British national living, working or travelling abroad is subject to the laws of that country. Our consuls cannot intervene in the due process of law in another country. If British nationals are detained our consul will visit them, ensure that they know their rights under local laws, tell them how to obtain legal representation and ensure that they are not discriminated against by reason of their foreign nationality.

It might be informative for the House to know that so far this year 2,106 arrests have been notified to us by our posts overseas, and that at any one time we reckon to have approximately 1,300 British nationals in prison abroad. That is the background. However, my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington believes that this case is different. Quite honestly, publicity does not always pay off. We have been accused this morning — as we are accused sometimes in other cases — of doing nothing. We very often find that a low-key approach has resolved a problem when public acrimony has only aggravated it. I am concerned that we should use words with great care in this case and be extremely judicious in the way in which we deal with sensitive matters concerning the freedom of a British citizen held in India. Before making any intemperate statement, it is worth reflecting very hard as to whether it will help or damage her position. The legal process must be used and we have sought to ensure that that is the case.

Any suggestion that Mrs. Kaur may have been discriminated against on racial grounds is for the Indian Government to answer, but in our experience of cases in India over a long period there are no grounds for believing that to be true. My hon. Friend's comments about the resources spent helping hundreds of thousands of Indians through our aid programme were unworthy of him. That help goes to many poor and needy people in India and we have a responsibility in that respect.

Referring to his visit to India, my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington made some comments about Indian Ministers similar to those that he made in New Delhi. I must tell him that his comments have, indeed, caused grave offence within the Indian Government. As I was not present, I do not know the meaning intended by the words that were used. It is possible that there was a total misunderstanding.

Mr. Dicks: There was no chance of that.

Mrs. Chalker: I well know, however, that such comments will not help the cause of my hon. Friend's constituent or of the hundreds of thousands of moderate Sikhs in Britain. That is why I say this, with great regret, to my hon. Friend: how does he think that we would react if an Indian Member of Parliament came to London and referred to British Ministers in similar terms? I believe that there would be as much anger in this House as there has been in India.

Mr. Dicks: I did not create the situation. The suggestion that I mentioned came from the other party and it is unfair to suggest that I might have misunderstood. I did not misunderstand. I am sure that no Indian Member of Parliament visiting my hon. Friend the Minister or my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary in this country would find himself in that kind of embarrassment.

Mrs. Chalker: I note my hon. Friend's comments.

When the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex, visited India last week the visit by my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington was a matter for discussion. I should make it absolutely clear, however, that my hon. Friend the Minister of State went to New Delhi for talks on a wide range of issues related to the battle against terrorism and Sikh extremism — we all know that some exists — including the possibility of an extradition treaty. My hon. Friend the Minister of State discussed the case of Mrs. Kaur very thoroughly with the high commission and was satisfied, as I have explained, that everything possible was being done to help her. It was not the purpose of the visit of my hon. Friend the Minister of State to raise consular cases. We ensure that the Indian Government are well aware of our consular interests at all times.

There are concerns among the Government of India that we should rightly note. My hon. Friend the Minister of State affirmed to the Indian Government the desire of the British Government to deal effectively with a problem that afflicts both our countries and he recalled the British Government's firm commitment to the territorial integrity and unity of India. Both Governments have strongly reiterated that the encouragement of violence and the stirring up of racial and religious prejudice have no place in our democratic countries. India has a serious problem with terrorism. As in the Community of Twelve, and now much more widely, it is agreed that we must all stand firmly against terrorism. There must be a strong co-operative effort. We know how difficult it is to deal with problems of terrorism and the Indian Government have great worries in this respect, so it is not surprising that they should seek to deal with them. We should in no way seek to undermine their efforts to combat terrorism.

That is why the case of Mrs. Kaur must remain within the Indian legal system. It must go through the full legal process and not be drawn out from it, because only in that way can the Indian judiciary continue to be independent. After all, it is based on a British system of law. In the case of any British citizen, Mrs. Kaur or anyone else, we seek to ensure that the person concerned is fully represented. Ministers within and outside the Foreign Office have taken a considerable interest in this case and we have listened carefully to everything that my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington has said as well as to representations from Professor Bedi. The case has also been monitored closely in New Delhi and I cannot go along with the complaint of my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington about the way in which the case is being handled. There are no grounds for political intervention. I very much hope that the case will be heard soon. Indeed, I hope that we shall hear from the magistrates later today.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington suggested at one point that Mrs. Kaur might have been detained for political reasons. That is a very serious allegation. I am confident that truth and justice will prevail. We know that in addition to Mrs. Jaimalla, the junior lawyer, Professor Bedi has also employed Mr. Jethmalani, so Mrs. Kaur is well represented as the case comes to court.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington also suggested that the Government in general and the Foreign Office in particular were overly concerned about Indo-British relations. Of course we should be concerned about the totality of our relations with India, but that is in no way incompatible with our active and proven concern for the well-being of all British citizens abroad and, indeed, the Sikh community in this country, which has a great contribution to make. With regard to tracing links between the member of the Sikh community concerned and her husband in relation to private letters between members of the Cabinet and Professor Bedi, I should point out that Cabinet members frequently write to people whom they know on the occasion of a wedding, especially when those people have been particularly active in seeking to help in this country, so I do not regard any of the comments that were made as particularly unusual or out of the ordinary.

I should like to make one further point about the visit of my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington to New Delhi. In line with his other comments, he sought to cast doubt on whether the high commission was doing all that should be done in such a case.

Mr. Dicks: With great respect, I praised the people out there for the efforts that they had made and told them personally how grateful I was for their help and kindness while I was there. That is clearly on record.

Mrs. Chalker: I am delighted to hear it. Nevertheless, my hon. Friend made comments about how we were dealing with the case. I should make it clear that the high commissioner, in seeking to deal with my hon. Friend as fairly and openly as possible, said that it was up to my hon. Friend whether to seek publicity but that there was a risk that the Indians, who are very sensitive to criticism, especially from the British, would act unhelpfully. He went on to say that before my hon. Friend's departure he would want to think carefully about the effect on Mrs. Kaur's prospects of a public personal attack by my hon. Friend on the Home Affairs Minister there. In our judgment, such an attack on a legal Minister by a British Member of Parliament would make those authorities close ranks and delay, rather than expedite, the decision. I understand that my hon. Friend and his constituents want a quick, thorough and just decision more than anything.

My hon. Friend made a charge against the Home Affairs Minister in India and sought to imply that the attitude towards Mrs. Kaur may have changed after Professor Bedi was elected to the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society. I cannot answer for the attitudes or actions of the Government of India. There are unexplained aspects of the case, but I cannot say that the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society has all the influence that my hon. Friend seems to think it has.

My hon. Friend suggested that Mrs. Kaur's detention and charge under the Act may in some way be bound up with the affairs of the Anglo-Asian Conservative Society. My hon. Friend will well appreciate that such party matters are not for the Foreign Office to delve into. As a member of my party of nearly 30 years' standing, I have made inquiries, particularly of the national union—the voluntary side of the party—on which I served for many years before coming to this House, to find out what is going on. I understand that it is meeting this morning. If this debate had not been held, I am sure that Professor Bedi would have been at that meeting because he is certainly entitled to attend it and give his view.

Those matters are not for the House. My hon. Friend should make his representations to the chairman of the Conservative party and the chairman of the national union in whose area these decisions lie. I cannot answer for them here, but my hon. Friend's words, which will be recounted widely, are for those people, not for me.

My hon. Friend sought to imply that I could answer for the Government of India in respect of any linkage, but I cannot do that. He seemed to say that only Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers are concerned about the need for good relations between Britain and India, but he is wrong. All Government Ministers share those concerns. India is an important place in the world. It has its own democracy and works under its own laws. We are not seeking to have a great row and misunderstanding. We want to ensure that Mrs. Kaur is taken fairly and justly through the processes of law in India. That is why his wish that this case should be treated differently from any other is not a sound way of proceeding.

I have already told my hon. Friend of the interest and concern of all Ministers in this particular case. However, all cases in other countries are not the same as Mrs. Bedi's.

[Mrs. Chalker]

When there is a case, such as the one mentioned by my hon. Friend in Iran, where there is no consular access and no charge at the time of protest, that is different. But in this case the charge was made, there is full consular access and, indeed, the point is different.

We shall continue to monitor the case of Mrs. Kaur. I am confident that the Government of India are well aware of the wish in the United Kingdom that all cases before Indian courts should be handled properly and in full accordance with local legal procedures. We shall not know the full nature of the charges until the case comes to court. Naturally, we hope that that will be soon, that a fair trial will take place and that as a result of the efforts of Mrs. Kaur's lawyers everybody will be satisfied with the result of this lengthy and painful process which Professor Bedi and his wife have been going through. The greatest care is being taken over the case within Indian law.

London Residuary Body

11.45 am

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): You will notice, Mr. Deputy Speaker, a humble Back-Bench Member advancing to the Dispatch Box for the debate. I am emboldened to do so because I understand that there is a perfectly adequate precedent that you set as a Back-Bench Member. Obviously, I have a future to look to. Because the debate may degenerate, may I take this opportunity to wish you a most happy and peaceful Christmas.

My subject for the debate is the work of the London residuary body. I last raised the topic on 23 May 1986 and I make no apologies for bringing it back again. The LRB is an unelected, unaccountable body whose members were hand-picked by the Government. It is chaired by a Thatcherite Conservative—a former local government leader—who, it would appear, is finding it a little too much for him. I understand that he physically assaulted Mr. George Nicholson, the ex-planning chair of the Greater London council, in his office recently. Clearly, the man is under some pressure and I hope that in some small way I may add to that pressure today. Obviously, I hope not to bump into him outside if that is how he deals with his political opponents. However, one should not say too much about that because my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition was having his own difficulties in a curry restaurant the other night. Clearly, this muscular approach to politics is catching, but we shall try to remember that it is Christmas and be peaceful today.

Sir Godfrey Taylor's reward for asset stripping London local government and physically assaulting Labour politicians is a salary of £51,700 a year. The other members of the London residuary body board are paid at the rate of £6,246 a year for one day's work a week. That is a good job, if one can get it, but to do so it appears that one needs to be a good friend of the Tory party and Tory Ministers. When it comes to finding jobs for the boys and the girls, no one can touch the Government. I trust that we in the Labour party will learn from that.

I should like the debate to be as constructive as possible, so throughout my speech I shall direct questions to the Minister. I hope that he can answer them, but I shall understand if he cannot do so today and will give me answers subsequently. On the composition of the London residuary body, why are there no obvious Labour politicians? Why has Margaret Hodge, for example, the chair of the Association of Local Authorities, not been appointed? I understand that she was approached earlier. Why, for example, is councillor Peter Bowness still there, bearing in mind that he was appointed because of his position as chair of the London co-ordinating committee which has ceased to exist? Do the Government intend to appoint any new members to the London residuary body board in the next six months?

Last month the House received the annual report of the London residuary body. It is a slim document, in size and in information content. The report covers only the period from August 1985 to 31 March 1986. That is the period when the GLC was in existence. The House did not receive the report until November 1986. The next report will cover the period—very important for us—from April 1986 to March 1987. On past record, it would seem that we shall not receive the next report of the London residuary body until November 1987, which will probably be after the next general election—which of course the Labour party will win—when the LRB will be packing its bags to go.

Will the Minister undertake to present the next annual report of the LRB to the House before the summer recess of 1987? There are Adjournment debates on the activities of bodies such as the LRB, but other residuary bodies exist and we shall not be given an opportunity to debate any of them in the House.

I have a letter from the Leader of the House dated 30 October which is a point-blank refusal of my request that there should be debates in Government time on the activities of those residuary bodies. That refusal highlights the Government's contempt for democratic accountability. In 1986-87, the LRB, for example, handled a budget of £480 million. It makes decisions on behalf of 7 million Londoners and is responsible for a wide range of services and public assets. Indeed, the services for which it is responsible are somewhat greater than the Government originally designed because, of course, the shambles of abolition has taken much longer to clear than the Government thought, although we told them that that would be the case.

All of the proceedings of the LRB, which are very important to Londoners, are held in secret. It is under no obligation to make information available to the public and the press and positively resists doing so. The LRB has replaced a directly elected and open council—the Greater London council. The GLC would not have wished to conduct its business behind closed doors and in secret, nor, indeed, would it have been allowed to do so. The terms of the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960—an early piece of activity by the Prime Minister—do not apply to the London residuary body, or do they? I do not know.

Why did the Government table Statutory Instrument No. 1929, with the catchy title of the Local Government Reorganisation (Miscellaneous Provisions) (No. 6) Order 1986 that trips easily off the tongue? Was it tabled because the LRB and all the residuary bodies should have held their proceedings in public with admission for interested parties from the press and from the local area? I should be interested to know the real reason for tabling the statutory instrument. We are told in the House that the LRB is accountable to Parliament through Ministers. There are ways in which we can try to drag information out of Ministers, but it is a difficult job.

In my speech on 23 May, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment referred to answering 50 parliamentary questions from me on the LRB. I am sure that the number of questions from me has gone up somewhat, but the amount of information coming from the Government has not moved very much from its general level of unwilling co-operation with a Member of Parliament who has some political and personal interests in what is going on in county hall.

When I asked whether the LRB would hold its meetings in public or issue minutes or agendas to London Members or Members generally, the answer in each case was no. One can imagine the outcry that there would be if a directly elected public authority attempted to do likewise but, as I have said already, most of them would not want to do so and any of them who did would fall foul of the 1960 Act.

Clearly, information is the lifeblood of democracy, but information is a scarce commodity in the LRB. During the debate in May I was told that the LRB would be answering the points that I had made in the debate. But it took a series of letters and further parliamentary questions from me before the chairman of the LRB deigned to supply that information in a letter dated 24 October 1986. It took five months before I could get the information that was promised to me by the Minister in the House last May. No wonder I was less than impressed by the Minister's answer to my question on 21 October when he said:

"I am confident that the residuary bodies are providing information in response to all reasonable queries." — [Official Report, 21 October 1986; Vol. 102, c. 831.]

All my queries were certainly reasonable, but the response was not a ready one. I trust that if the Minister promises me answers from the LRB when he replies, I shall not have to wait five months before I receive them.

On the issue of county hall, we know that the LRB is out to sell county hall. Indeed, it is spending £350,000 of ratepayers' money to encourage bids. The preferred option is a hotel and of course, with the Waterloo terminal for the Channel tunnel being located very close to county hall, that would make some sense to the hotel business. Office units are another possibility—perhaps preferred by the Prime Minister who undoubtedly would like to see county hall broken up in such a way as to make it exceedingly difficult for a Labour Government to take it back into public ownership.

At the moment, the Inner London education authority is the major user of county hall and it has been told that it must get out by 31 March 1988. In December 1985 and then in January 1986, the chair of the LRB told ILEA that if the authority was requested to move from county hall it would be provided with a capital equivalent asset at no cost to itself. That was the promise that was given by the chair of the LRB, but in summer 1986 that promise was withdrawn.

I ask the Minister whether the Government influenced the decision of the LRB to withdraw the promise to ILEA. ILEA has been in county hall since it was officially opened in 1922. The ILEA covers the same London county council boroughs that built and paid for county hall, so county hall belongs to the inner London ratepayers. Indeed, it is possible that it was paid for by those inner London ratepayers before the LCC was abolished. I should be interested to know whether the Minister has any information on that.

It is monstrous that the owners of county hall—the inner London ratepayers and the Inner London education authority—should be evicted. There is no guarantee even that the Prime Minister would allow it to purchase its own property if it could afford it. If I was advising ILEA, I would tell it to go for a judicial review and to challenge its eviction in the courts. It would have a good case. It is certainly a good case on moral grounds, even if not in law. Sometimes morality and the law do not coincide.

One can imagine the outcry if a Government took over ICI, Unilever, the clearing banks, British Gas and British Telecom and offered those enterprises back to the shareholders for sale. But that is precisely what the Government are doing with county hall and with much of the property that belongs to the London boroughs. The LRB is saying, "If you want it, you can buy it back." They are being offered their own property. It is monstrous, but it is something that we have come to expect from the Government. Why can public property be disposed of as though it belonged to no one while private property is always sacrosanct? The ratepayers of London are being robbed by the sale of county hall as the British taxpayers are being robbed by the privatisation of our public enterprises.

I have more specific questions about county hall. Will the Minister say how many offers the LRB has received for county hall? What are the preferred uses for the building? What is the current asking price for county hall? When will the announcement of the successful offer or offers be made? The Inner London education authority's consultants have estimated that if the authority is forced to find alternative accommodation, it will cost between £100 million and £200 million. Of course, ILEA will be strappped to find such resources. Will the Secretary of State allow ILEA to stay in county hall? I realise that the Minister will have to refer that question to the Secretary of State.

The Labour leadership has made it abundantly clear that, whatever happens, county hall will be compulsorily purchased by the next Labour Government if it is disposed of to the private sector. Therefore, all prospective purchasers have been warned—not by me, but by the leader of the Labour party and the shadow Secretary of State for the Environment, my hon. Friend the Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham).

I deal now with the 3,500 seaside and country homes. As late as 21 November, the Minister was assuring me that negotiations were on course to transfer the homes from the LRB to Anchor housing association. But, on 12 December, the LRB announced that the deal was off and that negotiations would start afresh with several housing associations. What is happening in respect of those seaside and country homes? Why did the transfer to Anchor housing association fall through? What discussions took place between the Department and the LRB on the decision to dump Anchor? Will the Minister guarantee that London will continue to enjoy 100 per cent. nomination rights for its pensioners going to those GLC seaside and country homes? Will he give a guarantee, as his predecessor did on 20 February 1986, that, on transfer, the housing associations will broadly maintain GLC levels of rent, management and maintenance expenditure? That is important. He must tell the occupants of those 3,500 properties that their rents and the standard of maintenance will remain broadly as they are now. He must tell the House that soon so that the elderly people who live in those houses and who are worried by the confusion surrounding the transfer can have their minds put at rest. Finally, when does he expect the transfers to be effected?

[Mr. Tony Banks]

I now turn to mortgages since I am receiving a growing number of letters from the holders of GLC mortgages. Because of my position as the last chair of the GLC, I tend to attract much extra constituency work in respect of abolition matters. The letters that I have received—the Minister must know of similar letters coming into his Department—show that people believe that they are being harassed by the LRB, which wants to get rid of the mortgages to building societies. But at least 60 per cent. of the mortgage loans are at fixed interest rates, so new arrangements could cost the mortgagors money in the long run. We must also add the cost of making the transfer arrangements, which will run into hundreds of pounds in legal and valuation fees for each mortgage holder.

Will the Minister direct the LRB to pay the costs associated with the transfer of mortgages to building societies? Will he confirm that no mortgagor is obliged to transfer to a building society? We know that to be true, but it would be helpful if the Minister would underline it. What will happen to the mortgages when the LRB is wound up in four years' time, assuming that it has that amount of time left? Will those mortgages be compulsorily transferred to a nominated building society at the mortgagor's cost, or will yet another successor body be set up to handle those mortgages? How many mortgages are currently held by the LRB? Thousands of former GLC mortgage holders want to hear the Minister's answers, and I hope that he will give us some this afternoon.

I now come to the matter of Thamesmead. As a member of the Committee that considered the GLC abolition Bill, I well remember the claim of the former Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), that Thamesmead would be transferred "within days" of the GLC's abolition. Nine months later we are still waiting for that transfer to take place. On 17 November, the Minister told me that the transfer of Thamesmead from the LRB to Thamesmead Town would take place on 1 January 1987. Does the Minister stand by that reply of 17 November? Will the transfer take place on 1 January 1987?

I am open to correction, but I have heard that the Government have been putting pressure on the LRB to hand Thamesmead over to the trust with a subsidy. But the LRB says that it is under an obligation under the 1985 Act to secure the price put on Thamesmead by the district valuer. Of course, it cannot do anything else unless the Government issue a directive to the LRB. Is it, therefore, the Government's intention to issue such a directive to the LRB in respect of Thamesmead, allowing the LRB to transfer the property to the trust at less than the district valuer's price? If so, why did not the Minister issue a similar directive to the LRB in respect of the 3,500 seaside and country homes? The same problem was confronted by the LRB in its negotiations with Anchor.

I turn now to something a little more personal, which relates to the matter of the GLC's heritage collection. I wish to put something on the record. There have been some good humoured exchanges and some very bad humoured exchanges over the GLC's family silver, as it has come to be known. As chairman of the GLC, I was responsible for having the GLC's entire collection catalogued for the first time in nearly 100 years. That collection of artefacts and documents represents the history of London local government since the middle of the 19th century. I wanted it catalogued and transferred to the Museum of London in order to keep it out of the LRB's preying hands. The decision to take that action was taken by the GLC on 17 March 1986.

As chairman of the council, I heard nothing more and assumed that all was OK. On 31 March, I removed the contents of the chairman's office from county hall, as I believed that all the items in the office belonged to the Museum of London. I was safeguarding those items for the Museum of London. I have all the documents here, although I shall not bore the House by reading them all out. However, they are here if the Minister or anyone else is interested.

On 4 April, a few days after abolition, I wrote to Max Hebditch, the director of the Museum of London, enclosing a list of the items that I had, and asking him what arrangements he would make to have them collected, or to tell me how I could deliver them. I received an acknowledgement on 7 April, and heard nothing more until I was written to, on 27 May, by a Mrs. Wendy West of the LRB. She said that she was acting on behalf of Mr. Hebditch, and offered to collect the items.

At that point, I was deeply suspicious. What was an employee of the LRB doing writing to me, saying that she was acting on behalf of the Museum of London? If the Museum of London owned all the items, why was it not writing to me saying it would come and collect those items, just as I had asked it to do on 4 April? Consequently, I started to make inquiries, and I made it clear that I was not prepared at that stage to hand over those items to the LRB, and that I wished only to hand them over to the Museum of London. Again, I heard nothing more until Sir Godfrey Taylor wrote to me on 9 July, informing me that the LRB owned the collection. That came as something of a shock to me, as I thought that I had speedily arranged the transfer of all the items to the Museum of London.

I asked for clarification from Sir Godfrey on 31 July. Dates are important. On 9 September, Sir Godfrey wrote again, laying claim to the collection. I now know that the instructions of the GLC to transfer the collection to the Museum of London were never carried out, and that they were blocked by the late, unlamented Secretary of State. Unfortunately, no one saw fit to inform me, as chairman of the GLC.

Under threat of High Court action, I handed over the catalogue of items to the LRB. I did not hand them back, because it had never had them. However, I have not handed over the catalogue itself. I had three copies made, and I asked for one for myself because I wanted to make sure that there was at least someone with a record of all the items who could be relied on to preserve their integrity as a collection. When I made that request, no one challenged it. The LRB has secured two of those catalogues and is now after the third, which is in my possession. I have offered, through my solicitors, to place that catalogue in the Library of the House of Commons, because I have now heard that senior LRB officials have been told verbally that the GLC heritage collection will be broken up, and that items will be sold if they cannot be transferred or are refused by museums. If that is true, it is a scandal, and it justifies and vindicates all that I have said and done since 31 March. I want that collection to stay in one piece. It represents an important account of London's local government history, and it would be monstrous if the Government allowed the LRB to sell it off.

Will the Minister direct the LRB to maintain the integrity of the entire collection by transfering it to the Museum of London? If not, will he direct the LRB not to sell off any items? Will he allow me to place my catalogue in the Library of the House of Commons for the benefit of students of London local government and to preserve an independent record of the GLC's collection? The LRB has two catalogues. If it gets a third, no one will know what represents the entire collection, and what I feared back in April will then take place. Those items could start to disappear and if they do not go legally, they might go illegally.

I want to finish with a few quickies. Has the Minister received the LRB's recommendations about Hampstead heath, and if he has not, when does he expect to receive them? What will happen to the research and intelligence unit at county hall? What will happen to the scientific services, the computing service and the welfare benefit service? These are all small matters at the end of a speech but major items when one is considering the impact of the abolition of the GLC on a whole range of services vital to Londoners.

I know that I have directed many questions to the Minister, and he does not have a great deal of time to answer them, but I shall not rush him. I am happy for him to think about these questions over the Christmas period in between his turkey and his Christmas pudding, and jot down a few notes and come back to the House and let me know whether he is able to answer them. They are important questions. Let me give him some more.

Will the LRB distribute to the London boroughs all the money that it now has available? I understand that it has about £20 million in capital receipts. When will that money be distributed? It also has £300 million of notional receipts. These are very important—everything is about creative accounting and notional receipts these days. If those receipts could be transferred to the boroughs, it would relieve them of a number of capital problems. Why is it that, with all its resources, the LRB still seems intent on setting a levy for next year? I am informed that the LRB has sufficient funds to enable it to set a zero levy for 1987-88. That, of course, would mean transferring real resources to the boroughs.

Why is the LRB allowed to build up assets and resources that it clearly does not need? After all, we were told that the work and function of the LRB were all about redistributing the spoils from the GLC to the London boroughs. It would be wrong and improper for the LRB to hold on to the money that the hard-pressed ratepayers of Greater London could use during the arcane discussions about the rate support grant settlement for 1987-88.

I am obliged to the House for giving me the opportunity to raise a series of points and matters relating to the work of the London residuary body. It will be a late body when the next Labour Government is elected. I look forward to that day. Until that day arrives and the LRB is despatched, it will be up to people like me to raise the important matters about its activities.

12.15 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Christopher Chope): I join the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) in wishing you seasonal greetings, Mr. Deputy Speaker. However, I regret that many of the hon. Gentleman's comments were not made in the spirit of Christmas. It was particularly unfair of him to make an unwarranted attack on the chairman of the London residuary body. The chairman has done much to steer the procedures forward and to overcome all the difficulties that he inherited from the GLC largely because of the behaviour of some elected GLC members in the last months of the life of that organisation.

It is particularly inapposite that the hon. Gentleman should attack the chairman of the residuary body, when I understand from an extract from the 19 November edition of The London Evening Standard that he himself made threats against officials of the LRB because of his concern about what happened to the so-called GLC treasure. I understand that he said bitterly that clearly the people who were working both for the GLC and the LRB "felt it was in their career interests to thwart the wishes and instructions of the GLC.

"'I won't forget that, and I won't forget the names of the persons either. If that sounds like a threat it is meant to be'."

Mr. Tony Banks: Yes.

Mr. Chope: I hear the hon. Gentleman confirm that he intended to make that threat. I do not know whether he intends to carry it out.

Mr. Banks: I hope that I can.

Mr. Chope: The hon. Gentleman hopes that he can carry out his threat. That is a sad reflection on what should be a time of Christmas cheer.

Luckily, last night's issue of The London Evening Standard was able to put into context the abolition of the GLC and its inability to provide good quality services at reasonable cost to London. Under a leader headed "A Christmas Bonus", The London Evening Standard recorded:

"It will be particularly galling to supporters of the late unlamented Greater London Council that the one area in which it most prided itself on its service to ratepayers—public transport—has prospered even more mightily under the successor authority. Ratepayers' subsidy to London's tube and bus network has been dropping steadily since London Regional Transport took over from the GLC. This Christmas they are being given a further bonus of £36 million in lowered contributions, giving boroughs room to cut their rates, should they wish to. LRT has achieved this by carrying more passengers more efficiently. We wish them an even happier New Year!"

It is significant that the hon. Gentleman spent two thirds of the time available for this debate dealing mainly with more detailed matters. He spent little time commenting on the major achievements of the abolition of the GLC and the major achievements of the London residuary body.

Mr. Banks: That is not my job.

Mr. Chope: The hon. Gentleman said that that is not his job. Hon. Members must bear in mind what he said before the abolition of the GLC. He predicted doom and disaster. He was sceptical about the savings that could or would be made and suggested that the LRB would cost more money and be less efficient. It is worth pointing out exactly what has been achieved so far. Far from the problems worsening and the predictions of doom and gloom being fulfilled, matters are much better. Tasks assigned to the London boroughs are being carried out without many effects, except beneficial ones, on consumers. It is worth paying tribute to the boroughs for the way in which they have taken over new and enhanced functions.

[Mr. Chope]

I do not think that any reasonable Labour politician really believes that a Labour Government — in the unlikely event of there ever being another — would wish to reinstitute the Greater London council. The GLC was attacked privately by Labour party members while it existed, and now it is not lamented at all. Only the hon. Member for Newham, North-West and one or two of his hon. Friends seem to have a sentimental attachment to the GLC.

It will not be long before the GLC is completely forgotten but the savings which will have resulted from abolition will not be forgotten. The manpower savings which were expected to result, and which my right hon. Friend the former Secretary of State for the Environment predicted, are being implemented. In London there has been a net reduction of 4,600 full-time posts because of abolition. This will bring a continuing annual saving to London ratepayers. In the first year following abolition, the saving net of one-off redundancy payments and of detriment payments will be about £30 million. In subsequent years, savings will rise to an estimated £52 million a year. Further significant savings will come as the LRB winds down its activities.

The hon. Member for Newham, North-West raised many detailed issues. I shall try my best to answer some and reply by letter to those which I cannot answer. I hope that those questions which are for the LRB will be answered faster than in the past. I do not seek to defend the position where the LRB has apparently overlooked replying to letters. The hon. Gentleman, by raising many questions to which he already knows the answers, causes a certain scepticism to develop in the minds of members of the LRB.

Those members were appointed by the Secretary of State under section 57 of the Local Government Act 1985, including a member of the co-ordinating committee as provided under section 57(4). My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State sees no need at present to make further appointments to the LRB. It is well on the way to fulfilling its objective of doing itself out of a job. There seems to be no reason to change its membership.

The hon. Gentleman asked about the report and accounts of the LRB and referred to those for 1985-86. Obviously, no annual report and accounts can be laid before the House until they are received, so I cannot give any guarantees. I take the hon. Gentleman's point that he wishes the LRB's activities to be subject to debate. By raising the matter, the hon. Gentleman has been able to achieve that objective. I am sure that he will not be slow in coming forward to raise issues of concern to him.

The Government have always accepted that residuary bodies need to be accountable. That is why the 1985 Act imposed on them an audit regime giving public access to their accounts, with the provision that they should produce annual reports. That is an appropriate regime of accountability for such bodies, but for the public to have the right to come to their formal sessions is inappropriate and unnecessary. It would be wrong to impose such a burden on bodies which are largely administrative with a limited life and no powers to initiate policies. That is why the Public Bodies (Admission to Meetings) Act 1960 was not applied to residuary bodies. The order to which the hon. Gentleman referred was laid to avoid any doubt that the 1960 Act does not apply.

The future of county hall is a matter for the London residuary body. The building has been put on the market and, in answer to the question of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West, so far there have been some 250 enquiries. Perhaps those enquiries are further evidence of the view held outside the House that the Labour party has no hope whatever of being elected to Government. In view of the background of threats to compulsorily purchase county hall — that apparently is Labour party policy — there would be little interest within the private sector in purchasing it if it was believed that those threats could ever be implemented. Those 250 enquiries speak for themselves.

As a former member of the Inner London education authority, I am aware of that authority's interest in county hall and its continuing need for headquarters accommodation. The LRB has given ILEA notice to quit by 31 March 1988 but ILEA has asked the Government to direct the LRB to make a proposal for the free transfer of the building to ILEA. That request is receiving careful consideration. I must emphasise, however, that we have always taken the view that ILEA's continued occupation of county hall and the question of alternative accommodation are matters for negotiation between ILEA and the LRB.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Chope: I will not give way as I have only four minutes left. This is a 45 minute debate and the hon. Gentleman took up half an hour.

The LRB has also submitted planning applications to Lambeth, but it would not be right for me to comment on those matters as they may well come before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in due course.

With regard to ILEA, it is worth reminding ourselves that it employs around seven administrative staff for every 1,000 pupils or students and that is against an average in England of three administrative staff. Even after allowing for London weighting, ILEA spends twice as much on administration per pupil as the average.

Mr. Spearing: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chope: It spends 30 per cent. more per pupil than the inner city authorities of Manchester, Liverpool and Newcastle and 60 per cent. more than the Labour authority in Birmingham. Last year, ILEA kept nearly 500 teachers supernumerary to its own generous establishment. ILEA's finances should be considered in that context and especially as it employs many more administrative staff than would seem to be necessary.

The matter of mortgages has been causing concern to a number of people. I would like to respond to the comments of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West in some detail. The fact is that no one who has a former GLC mortgage would be compelled to pay any charge for the transfer of his or her mortgage. The letter from the LRB was an invitation to borrowers to refinance their mortgages through one of five building societies. The offer is entirely voluntary. The letter did say that anyone who took advantage of it would have to pay certain charges, but there is no obligation on any borrower to refinance his mortgage through this initiative.

When the LRB is wound up any mortgages remaining with it must be transferred to the successor body. I assure the House that, whatever arrangements are made, they will take full account of borrowers interests. I give the categorical assurance that there will be no question of any fee being charged to borrowers for the transfer. It is not yet possible to say what those arrangements will be. It is for the LRB to propose a scheme for the disposal of any properties, rights and liabilities remaining with it when it is wound up. In due course my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider carefully the scheme brought forward by the LRB and will take appropriate steps to see that mortgages are transferred to a reputable successor and that borrowers' interests are fully protected.

With regard to seaside and country homes, I understand that the LRB is now inviting offers from six or seven housing associations. After discussions with the Housing Corporation, a decision will be made on those housing associations which can fulfil the responsibilities. That offer has been made following the breakdown in negotiations with the Anchor housing association. It is a matter for the LRB. There have been problems in making progress because of a wide difference of view on the valuation of the homes. That is why those negotiations are now being widened. But, given that the LRB has a duty to London's ratepayers to secure the best price reasonably obtainable in the circumstances, it is understandable that it should now wish to pursue those alternative options. I hope that satisfactory arrangements will shortly be concluded for the future of those homes. It is not fair to alarm the residents in the way in which the hon. Gentleman sought to do. The residents of those homes have nothing to fear.

I do not have time, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to deal with the other points that were raised, but, as I said earlier, I

A420 (South-West Oxfordshire)

12.30 pm

Mr. Robert Jackson (Wantage): There is a story of a politician campaigning in an African election who pledges the people at a meeting that he will bring them roads and bridges. A call comes from the back of the room, "We have no rivers", to which the politician replies, "I shall bring you rivers also." Thank heavens that nobody can come before the House in the spirit of that African politician. Road construction in Britain, or, at least, the detail of road construction, is not a party-political matter.

It is of course true that the amount of money overall that is allocated for road construction is, in a sense, a political matter, because it involves a choice of priorities. And here the Government's record on that stands up well. In 1985-86 the capital spend on roads increased by 20 per cent. in real terms over the level in 1978-9. And in the coming year, 1986-87, the capital spend will be no less than 30 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979. We should pay tribute to the Government for that fact. The Government have made the right political decisions to allocate resources for road construction on a generous and rising basis.

Nevertheless, the point that I was making about the African politician remains. In this country the procedures for designating priorities for roads and for designing those roads are not political in character. The system is designed to reflect objective factors and to deal as dispassionately as possible with the costs and benefits of different choices.

I say all that to show my hon. Friend the Minister that in raising today the future of the A420 in Oxfordshire I am fully conscious of the fact that this is only one among many trunk roads with problems which he has under his responsibility. I want to make that clear from the start. Nevertheless, the A420, as it runs from east to west—or west to east, depending on where one starts—through my constituency from Swindon to Oxford, is a trunk road with problems, as I hope to demonstrate in the course of my remarks. I am glad, on behalf of my constituents, to have this opportunity to draw my hon. Friend's personal attention to these problems.

I invite the House and my hon. Friend to come with me along this road on what the Beatles called a "Magical Mystery Tour". Let us start out from the dreaming spires of Oxford, or at any rate from the dreaming spire of Hartwell's garage at Botley. The first stretch runs from Botley to the Cumnor Hill bypass. That seems to work well, although we notice, as we drive along this stretch of the road, that the traffic is moving fast in both directions. Indeed, if the police are not watching, many people exceed the speed limit.

That is what causes the problems which we find when we hit the second stretch of the road, from the end of the Cumnor Hill bypass to the beginning of the dual carriageway at Tubney Wood. Here we will find a problem that comes up again and again along the A420. Having moved extremely fast along the earlier bit of the road, we have to slow down dramatically as we come to the single carriageway. We begin to see a build-up of frustration in the motorists travelling on that road.

The result is that when we come to a short stretch of dual carriageway at Tubney Wood drivers speed up tremendously as they try to break out of the log-jam, and there is a lot of overtaking as people try to get ahead before the next stretch of single carriageway between Tubney Wood and Kingston Bagpuize where, again, there is more slowing down, more frustration, and more people waiting for the next opportunity to push ahead.

[Mr. Robert Jackson]

When we reach Kingston Bagpuize we come across our first major problem on the road. There is an urgent need for the bypass at Kingston Bagpuize. It is the only settlement along the A420 that has not yet been bypassed and it faces serious problems. Those problems are well illustrated by the latest figures — the road is being surveyed at present — which show that 16 per cent. of the traffic at Kingston Bagpuize is constituted of heavy goods vehicles above 3 tonnes in weight. That compares with a national average on trunk roads of about 10 per cent. Furthermore, there has been a dramatic growth in all traffic of 15·6 per cent. over the past three years, compared with the national average growth of 9·5 per cent.

I have to say to the Minister about the Kingston Bagpuize bypass that there really must not be any further delay in its construction. I draw the Minister's attention to the petition I sent to him in the summer.

My constituents at Kingston Bagpuize see that the Oxfordshire county council, when it was responsible for the road, completed the Shrivenham and Faringdon bypasses before the road was trunked. They see that since the A420 has been trunked there has been a considerable delay building up in the work on the Kingston Bagpuize bypass. Not unnaturally, they are putting these points together and are reaching conclusions that should make my hon. Friend the Minister and his Department feel uncomfortable. That is why I would like to bring, if I may, a delegation from the community at Kingston Bagpuize to meet my hon. Friend the Minister to discuss the future programme and how we can speed it up. I would be grateful if my hon. Friend will confirm his willingness to do that at a mutually convenient time.

It is not for me to comment on the details of the design of the Kingston Bagpuize bypass. Under our system that is a matter for expert judgment. However, I am concerned about three points. First, there is the line of the road. The petition to which I referred suggests that a substantial majority of the local people want to press ahead with the preferred northern route, although I have to say to my hon. Friend that it was a psychological error in October 1984 not to consult on both routes, the one running south as well as that running north.

A second point concerns access from Longworth. The Minister will have to strike a difficult balance between the interests of Longworth residents gaining access to the A420 and to Southmoor and the interests of residents at the Draycott Wood estate in not having their environment further damaged by the construction of a bridge. I do not envy the task that my hon. Friend and the inspector face in this matter. My hope is that he will seek to minimise the damage to the environment for people on the Draycott Wood estate.

Third, there is the question of the A415 crossing on the A420. It would be deeply unsatisfactory if this were not to be resolved at the same time as the construction of the bypass. We must not allow an essentially bureaucratic factor, which is that the Department of Transport is responsible for the A420 while the Oxfordshire county council is responsible for the A415, to produce what will be a bungle if this issue is not properly addressed. It is my belief that the Department of Transport must recognise that what it is going to do on the A420 is bound to have an effect on the A415 at that point, and that these limitations must be resolved together.

Let us return to our drive along the A420. We come next to the single carriageway leading from Kingston Baguize to the Faringdon bypass. Here we find a continuation of the problem I described earlier of traffic build-up, blockage and frustration. And this leads us to the next major problem we encounter on our drive—the Faringdon bypass. There is no doubt that that is an accident black spot. There have been nine serious accidents in the past three years, a number of them fatal. Town councillor Donald Barber has conducted a useful house-to-house survey involving quite a large sample. This has shown that 27 per cent. of those polled in Faringdon believe the junction to be unsafe and a further 48 per cent. believe it to be positively dangerous.

The basic cause of the situation is not seriously in doubt. We are getting frustrated drivers building up on the single carriageway stretches. They see something that looks a bit like a dual carriageway at the bypass, and they accelerate to overtake after the bottlenecks—and then they smash into cars that have been pulled into the ghost islands in the centre waiting to turn towards Faringdon.

I believe that the proposal to deal with this problem by improving delineation is not good enough. The Department of Transport will have to accept that there must be a roundabout. I know that that will slow down traffic on the trunk road, but there are roundabouts, for example, on the A34 — a trunk road — between Woodstock and Oxford. They have been found to be necessary there, as I believe one to be necessary at Faringdon.

Let us continue along the road: we are near the end of our journey. The next stretch lies between Faringdon and the Shrivenham bypass. Once again, traffic is building up, leading to problems at the Shrivenham bypass that are similar to those at Faringdon, although they are less serious. On this matter, I am grateful to my distinguished constituent, Professor Charlesby, for the work that he has done. The bypass at Shrivenham should have been built as a dual carriageway, and I believe that it will have to be dualled eventually. So we come to the final stretch of the A420 in Oxfordshire, between Shrivenham and the county boundary, where, once again, we have the problem of a single carriageway on an increasingly intensively used road.

Before I draw some general conclusions from this journey through my constituency, I should like to say a word about the problem of service facilities. There is no doubt that we need at least one more service facility on the A420 in Oxfordshire. There are current applications at Faringdom, at Buckland and at Kingston Bagpuize. The latter two are currently the subject of an inquiry, and we are waiting to hear from the inspector.

The only comment that I wish to make, which is a point of general application, is that I should like to draw the attention of my hon. Friend the Minister to the serious inconveniences—I put it mildly when I use that word—that are caused by the apparent lack of a Department of Transport policy on the provision of services on trunk roads. It cannot be a matter just of highway safety. Other interests have to be taken into account, among them, for example, the optimal spacing between facilities. The Minister's Department must grasp this issue so as to relieve pressures that my constituents at Buckland have been facing because of an application which is probably unsuitable.

Having taken the House and my hon. Friend on this journey through "leafy Oxfordshire", I should like to leave three main points in his mind. I should like him to recognise the growing pressure on this road. It is one of the principal axes of communication in what is now called the M4 corridor, an area of fast and growing economic development which is important to the national interest. This development is reflected in the traffic figures that I cited: I draw particular attention to the percentage and growth of HGV traffic. We must welcome such an event, but I shudder to think of the consequences for the A420 if and when Honda expands its operations at Swindon, linked to its partner, Austin Rover, at Cowley. The amount of heavy traffic passing between these two facilities is already considerable, and there is every prospect of it growing substantially in future.

The Minister must, I think, accept that the whole road will have to be dualled. I understand that the forecasts of traffic growth over the next 15 years show increases that are well in excess of the criteria currently used for justifying the construction of dual carriageways.

Second, I should like my hon. Friend to recognise that the whole of the A420 requires attention, not just the bits between the bypasses or, for that matter, the bypasses themselves. I very much welcome the news of the decision to review the A420 in Oxfordshire, but I should like my hon. Friend's assurance that no solutions will be precluded by the terms of reference of the review that will be conducted. I am thinking particularly of the necessary improvements of the Faringdon and Shrivenham bypasses.

Finally, I should like my hon. Friend's assurance that, notwithstanding the overall review of the problems of the A420 in my constituency, it will not be allowed to inflict any additional delay on work on the bypass which is necessary to relieve the problems of the unfortunate inhabitants of Kingston Bagpuize. The situation there is bad and continues to become worse. Only on Wednesday there was a serious accident outside "Fallowfields", in the same place where someone was killed last year. Reports of such events—and of dangerous near misses which are not reflected in the statistics, but which are real nonetheless — come to me almost every week. The planning routines of my hon. Friend's Department are no doubt very important, but, for God's sake, let those necessary routines not be leisurely—let them be urgent.

12.44 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): My hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) has done a service to his constituents by raising issues about the A420 and associated roads. My hon. Friend's contribution reminds me of the importance of having single-Member constituencies. He has taken us on a tour of the A420 and he has also disclosed his age because I suspect that many people would not immediately understand the reference to the Beatles' "Magical Mystery Tour." My hon. Friend has shown such expertise that that is either a full qualification or a total disqualification for taking my job if ever there is an unexpected vacancy. I sometimes wonder, if there were multi-Member constituencies, whether such issues would be raised in the way in which my hon. Friend has raised them.

At the beginning of his speech my hon. Friend referred to the road building programme. I am sure that he will be pleased to note that last year we spent within 0·5 per cent. of the capital funds allocated. If he and I had had a debate at any time between 1974 and 1979 I would have had to have said that the national roads programme was being cut. We have managed to increase it, as my hon. Friend has said. More than that, we have achieved better value for money, more miles per million pounds, and that has meant more relief, more bypasses and more accident investigation and prevention work, otherwise known as low-cost engineering. That is the kind of approach to dangerous road situations to which my hon. Friend has referred. Sometimes these can be solved by ghost islands, by roundabouts or by grade separation. All the money is used to advantage.

The Department recognises the importance of the A420 as the main route linking Swindon and the M4 with the A34 at Oxford and from there with main routes to the east midlands, M1 and the north.

My hon. Friend has helpfully outlined the background. The A420 was until recently the responsibility of the appropriate local authorities—Wiltshire at the western end and formerly Berkshire and more recently Oxfordshire to the east. In the 1970s the Oxfordshire county council built a bypass and new interchange at Cumnor, with financial help from the taxpayer through the Government.

In 1978 the then Secretary of State announced his intention to improve conditions on the A420 with bypasses for Shrivenham, Faringdon, and Kingston Bagpuize. The Faringdon and Shrivenham bypasses which were opened in 1979 and 1984, respectively, were financed by 100 per cent. grant from the Department in recognition of the importance of the route and the benefit of removing traffic from rural towns. We are now preparing a bypass for Kingston Bagpuize and I will return to this in a moment.

The Government subsequently announced that the A420 would be taken into the national trunk road network following the completion of the Shrivenham bypass. The necessary orders to achieve this positive step were made in December 1985.

On a more general point, often, when a road is trunked, that means a change in possible timing because that takes the control of preparation work out of the hands of the county highway authority acting as principal and puts it into the hands of the Government, although often the local highway authority acts as the agent for the Department.

My hon. Friend is understandably concerned about the proposed bypass of Kingston Bagpuize with Southmoor which is the only major settlement on the A420 without a bypass. In the autumn of 1984 we consulted the public on a proposed route to the north of the village. Often when we consult on one route people say that we should have consulted on others. On other occasions people claim that it would be faster if we consulted only on one route so that a bypass might be provided without unnecessary delay. I am willing to accept that on occasions we may take the wrong course. I am not sure that we did that on this occasion. However, I understand my hon. Friend's point about consultation with local people on alternatives rather than having to wait for the inquiry process to have the opportunity to put forward alternatives.

[Mr. Peter Bottomley]

After careful consideration of the views expressed by the public, local authorities and interested organisations and after weighing the various factors involved, we announced in May this year that a northern route would be adopted. This route is generally within or very close to the corridor protected for the bypass since 1966, first by Berkshire county council and then by Oxfordshire county council.

We are continuing the necessary preparations for the publication of draft orders under the Highways Act by about the middle of next year. The actual start will, of course, depend on the outcome of the remaining statutory procedures. We also have to allow time for completion of the detailed design, preparation of contract documents and tendering procedures. I cannot give an assurance on timing, but my hon. Friend may like to know that, on the basis of experience elsewhere, I would hope that construction would start within the next three years or so. I know that the scheme is important to my hon. Friend's constituency and more widely, and if we can improve upon that timetable we shall do so.

I know that some of my hon. Friend's constituents would prefer a route to the south of the village. We did not offer this for public consultation as it seemed not to give good value for money, but when the orders are published next year the public will be able to object. If there is a public inquiry, which seems likely, members of the public will be able to put their views to the independent inspector. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his comments about that process. As he said, it is not party political. The procedures for any individual road scheme mean that objections come before an impartial inspector and I think that people have confidence in that system. Our procedures provide for such an inquiry and we regard it as important for people with genuine concerns to be able to state those objections and, if they wish, to propose alternative routes.

Part of Kingston Bagpuize is a conservation area and provision of a trunk road bypass will accord well with our policy of getting traffic out of towns and villages and facilitating the flow of traffic to and from industrial centres to aid economic recovery.

I know that my hon. Friend and his constituents would also like an A415 bypass. As he said, that road is the responsibility of Oxfordshire county council and he knows that I cannot provide trunk roads for it. Nevertheless, it would be surprising if there were not co-ordination, as those concerned know that road travellers are not particularly interested in whether they are travelling on a national road or a county road.

My hon. Friend has rightly drawn attention to the increase in use of the A420. We recognise that it carries a relatively high proportion of heavy goods vehicles and that this may increase slightly as a result of the facilities being constructed by Honda at Swindon. In recognition of the increased traffic, I hope that we shall be able to justify constructing the Kingston Bagpuize bypass as a dual carriageway. I note my hon. Friend's comments about the standard of previous bypasses. It is clear that roads have to be constructed according to the standards applying at the time. It is also clear that if we can keep road spending to what is justified at present, with a reasonable look forward, it will be possible to bring more bypasses into the programme. We have completed 60 or 70 since 1979 and many more have been added or taken back off the shelf because funds were available. That in itself requires the exercise of some consistency in standards.

My hon. Friend referred to accidents on the A420 and I was sorry to hear of the fatality near Faringdon on 11 December and of other recent accidents and near misses. Like my hon. Friend, I extend my sympathy to the bereaved and the injured. In fact, the overall accident rate is lower than the national rate for this type of road and the Faringdon bypass has halved the accident rate that would otherwise have been expected. Nevertheless, I will ensure that my hon. Friend's observations about individual junctions are properly considered.

We are very conscious of the importance of the trunk road network in Oxfordshire. The A34 is being progressively improved from Oxford southwards to provide a high-standard route to Southampton and Portsmouth. Northwards, good progress is being made with the planning of two schemes — the A43/A421 improvement from Peartree hill to Wendlebury and the M40 extension, which will provide a vastly improved route between Oxford and the midlands. We are also improving the A43 between Wendlebury and the M1.

My hon. Friend asked whether it might be suitable to meet him and representatives of his constituents. I know that he had a meeting with my predecessor, now the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and I am sure that it would be possible and, perhaps, helpful to have a meeting. However, I would not wish people to think that by having a meeting they could accelerate the process faster than it can naturally be taken. Nothing would be worse than for us to make an unnecessary mistake in our preparation work. That may be more damaging than trying to take the proposed bypass properly through the procedures.

My hon. Friend asked about service facilities. Plainly, the old tradition of relying on what happens to be at the side of the road may have worked when there were only on-line improvements. Then the hotels, service stations and telephones may have been sufficient, but we have moved on from that. In general our policy is right. The location of such facilities should be determined by market forces so long as they are subject to normal planning procedures and the need to maintain highway safety and the flow of traffic. The acceleration of the road programme in recent years may have left the provision of facilities behind. As we move towards getting facilities on our motorway network, we hope that the private sector and planning authorities will consider what is most appropriate and provide the conveniences that people expect on our trunk roads.

The A420 will provide an important connection to those routes. Indeed, it already does as the exceptional growth of traffic has demonstrated. My hon. Friend quoted figures to show that in recent years traffic has been growing about 50 per cent. faster than in average years.

In case those listening to the debate or those who read it later think that road spending is being concentrated on the south-east, let me say that having an integral road network is advantageous to people all over the country. If people from the south-west, for example, are trying to take goods to the east coast, they will find roads such as the A420 an advantage. Even the completion of the M25 has advantages in terms of employment prospects in Lancashire, the north-east and the north-west because it provides access to the Channel ports. It does not matter where the improvements take place so long as they help commerce to have reliable deliveries. I am in no sense arguing for traffic to travel faster in terms of miles per hour, but I am arguing for reliable deliveries to make commercial connections which help all areas.

In view of the importance of the A420 as part of our normal ongoing process of reviewing the needs of the trunk road network, we have recently agreed to a wide ranging study to cover the A420 between the county boundary and Botley interchange. It will be undertaken by our agents, the Oxfordshire county council, and will involve the collection of data on accidents, delays, layout standards, traffic volumes and movements. When complete, the study will enable us to decide whether any further improvements are needed on this road, in addition to the bypasses I have already mentioned. We shall also be able to get a good idea of what form those improvements should take.

My hon. Friend will forgive me if I reiterate that safety on the roads depends in part on traffic engineering—road layout, having bypasses, being able partially to exclude traffic, and through roads for through traffic—but in 95 per cent. of accidents a human factor is involved. It may be a misperception or misreading of the road, such as the ghost island problem, to which my hon. Friend referred. But the greatest contributor is drink.

One fatal accident in four involves drink. Each year we could fill the Royal Albert hall with dead bodies from our roads and one seat in four would be occupied by a victim of mixing drinking and driving. The campaign against drink-driving is not just before Christmas. It continues through every month of the year. About 120 people a month die on our roads through the mixture of drinking and driving.

I assure my hon. Friend that in terms of road casualty reduction and trying to increase our economic opportunities, the Department of Transport will continue to do what it can to bring relief, not only in my hon. Friend's constituency, but throughout the country, so that without covering the countryside with concrete or tarmacadam we shall provide the transport mobility that people should be able to expect.

Homelessness (Wandsworth)

12.59 pm

Mr. Alfred Dubs (Battersea): Homelessness is becoming an increasing problem in Tory Britain. At present, there are estimated to be 100,000 homeless families. In London, the problem is more acute. I am especially worried about those homeless people and homeless familites in bed and breakfast accommodation. The estimates are somewhat uncertain, but the generally accepted figure for March of this year was 4,382 people in bed and breakfast accommodation in London. That figure is expected to rise to about 6,000 by March 1987. We all know that those figures are the tip of the iceberg of the homelessness problem in Britain.

In July of this year, a letter was written to The Guardian on behalf of 17 directors of housing in London boroughs, which said that they wished to express "our concern at the rising tide of homelessness sweeping across the city."

The letter continued:

"Some councils are having to use accommodation which is neither safe nor reasonable . . . The amount of public money being wasted on bed-and-breakfast is scandalous . . . The Government is well aware of the action necessary. Little is being done, and we are no longer prepared to stand by and say nothing."

In Wandsworth, 185 families are in bed and breakfast accommodation. There are perhaps a further 70 in the next stage of homeless families accommodation; a few may also be in property provided by a housing association; and some are in short-life property. We all know that whether families are accepted into this accommodation depends on whether the local authority says that they are intentionally or unintentionally homeless. Wandsworth council especially has told many families and individuals threatened with homelessness, or who are homeless, that it will do little for them because it says that the families or individuals are intentionally homeless. People cannot fight against that. That is the position if the council defines it as such.

The council sent a letter to me a few weeks ago about a woman with a child who was in bed and breakfast accommodation. The letter said that the woman, who does not want her name mentioned,

"has been in our temporary bed and breakfast accommodation since 5th February 1986. She was due to move to Nightingale Square—" which is where the second-stage homeless families move—

"on 10th September 1986 but unfortunately it was discovered that she had not in fact been using the bed and breakfast accommodation for a period of several weekends which raised the question of whether in fact she was homeless."

I discussed this matter with the woman and discovered that she had not been in the bed and breakfast accommodation all the time because the cooking facilities were inadequate for herself and for her baby. So, during the day, she went to a friend's house and used the cooking facilities there. It seems that, for that reason, the council questioned whether the women was homeless. The council went on to say in the letter that the woman

"was informed that, were she to stay consistently at the hotel for another four weeks, she would be eligible to move into Nightingale Square."

It is almost as though the local authority treats bed and breakfast accommodation as a punishment, and people must serve their time there before they can move to better and more appropriate accommodation. We know that the cost of this accommodation is prohibitively high. It has been estimated that it costs £14,500 to accommodate a family of four in bed and breakfast accommodation. That is roughly double the cost of keeping the same family in local authority accommodation, if such accommodation was available.

[Mr. Alfred Dubs]

Why is there so much homelessness and why is it increasing? There are two reasons. First, there is a sheer lack of adequate property — houses or flats — to rent. The second reason is the poverty of many homeless people, especially in our inner cities. As for the supply of accommodation to rent, Wandsworth council has acted exactly as the Government wished. In Wandsworth, we see the full effects of Conservative housing policies as wished by central Government and by the Prime Minister's favourite local authority. Since 1979, the Government have said that housing must bear the brunt of public expenditure cuts. In Wandsworth, no new council housing has been started since the Conservatives took control of the council in 1978. I do not complain about the right of council tenants to buy their homes, but Wandsworth council has a policy of designating flats and houses in desirable areas and saying that when they become empty they should be sold. They are not made available to people on the waiting list, the homeless or people in desperate need of accommodation.

Moreover, the council has sold whole blocks and council estates to speculators. Some had to be cleared because of asbestos and were then sold to speculators which, in turn, sell them at prices ranging up to £120,000 for a two-bedroomed flat. Wandsworth council has sold about 1,000 properties to people not on the waiting list and not even living in Wandsworth. That excludes the property sold to speculators, which has often been sold in turn to people from outside Wandsworth.

The result is that the housing pressures are becoming intolerable. Families which have a good case for transfer but which are not necessarily homeless are not being offered alternative accommodation, because there is none, and homeless people are even further down the queue for the chance of getting a decent home.

It might be appropriate to show what the council's priorities are. A family — I have permission to use the name — called Mr. and Mrs. Meredith, who have two children, live in my constituency. Their 18-month-old son is extremely handicapped with cerebral palsy. They desperately need larger accommodation, and they are 65th on the list for transfer. Yet within a few hundred yards of where they live is an empty council property that would be perfectly suitable for them. It has been empty since June this year and it has not even been valued for sale. It is awaiting a purchaser. Is that not disgraceful?

I quote the example of a family of seven — two adults with five children — who live in a two-bedroomed flat. The flat is very damp — I have visited it — and they are desperately overcrowded. But they will be offered nothing in the foreseeable future because they are too far down the list. What chance do homeless people have?

Occasionally, there are glimmers of hope. On 10 December, in the other place, Lord Skelmersdale said:

"But for those who cannot afford to buy their homes the range of choice in the rented sector, public and private, is much more restricted. It is this that needs our concentration now."

—[Official Report, House of Lords, 10 December 1986; Vol. 482, c.1180.]

It may need the Government's concentration, but there is precious little sign that the Government are doing anything about it.

In Wandsworth, about 7,700 people are on the waiting list and about 5,700 families are on the transfer list. They and the families who live in bed and breakfast accommodation are too poor to buy the properties that Wandsworth has for sale. On the Government's own figures, quoted earlier this year, mortgage default is increasingly a reason for people becoming homeless. I am not saying that that is the main reason for people becoming homeless in Wandsworth, but it must be an element when 10 per cent. of people become homeless as a result of court orders for mortgage default. Perhaps such people are not all the families who become homeless in Wandsworth. Their poverty may be such that they have never had the chance to buy in the first place.

We should consider for a moment what it is like being in bed and breakfast accommodation, because that is what we are sentencing so many of our people to live in for such a long time. I wish that the Minister, tonight or on any Friday evening I have one, would come to an advice session and listen to the cries of desperation and to people who burst into tears because they are so distressed about their inadequate housing or homelessness, and their unwillingness to have another night with their children in bed and breakfast accommodation. There is a real sense of bitterness, and I wish that the Minister would listen directly to what they have to say.

It is understandable that people should feel so desperate. Often, they are moved into bed and breakfast accommodation outside the borough and are isolated from their families who might give them support. If children are of school age, they have to be moved to another school. We all know how poor are the amenities in these bed and breakfast places. There may be poor or no facilities for washing clothes, which for a mother with a baby can be difficult, and there may be inadequate or no cooking facilities. We know from figures that two thirds of homeless families tend to be single parent families. Only recently, the Minister said:

"We recognise, however, that there is a need to get homeless families out of bed-and-breakfast accommodation as quickly as possible, not only because we are concerned at the size of the bill to the public purse . . . but because such accommodation is generally unsuitable for families with children."—[Official Report, 5 December 1986; Vol. 106, c. 1256.]

That is the understatement of the year.

I was approached by a woman with a child who found conditions so intolerable that she managed to find friends who would temporarily put her up until the council would move her to the next stage of bed-and-breakfast accommodation. "Not so," said the council when it found out. "You are not in the bed-and-breakfast place, so you are not eligible to move on to the next stage. Take your chance on the transfer list." She would never have got far on that. This is another example of the council treating bed-and-breakfast accommodation as punishment, for which people have to serve time.

I have another of these horror stories of the deprivation that people feel. I can read a letter, although I am not permitted to mention the individual's name. The letter comes from a woman in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, who says:

"I am now registered as disabled and I receive Invalidity Benefit amounting to £81·15 per week, I pay £50 for my room and £5 to a Catalogue firm. I spend the remaining money on food which is limited to most cheap cafes, as cooking facilities are available if you have utensils which I have not. If it was not for close friends and common sense I would not be able to eat 1 or 2 decent meals a week, but I am sure a lot of people in this type of accommodation do not eat regular cooked meals. Most people . . . live off the breakfast we receive, which is a small bowl of corn flakes, two slices of toast and a cup of tea or coffee and they make do for the rest of the day. The system is an absolute disgrace for people who got into a situation which is often no fault of their own choosing.

We are not all layabouts who just like living off the state."

That woman had been the victim of a serious criminal attack some time before. The manager of the hotel wrote a letter in which he said that because of her medical condition, it was impossible to look after her adequately. She has severe asthma. In another letter to me she says:

"I have to climb 60 stairs to my room at present and this is extremely difficult due to my Asthma."

She requires constant medical attention during the night for her asthma. Before she moved into the accommodation,

"one of my family takes it in turns to stay overnight in case I need a Nebulizer. I have my own machine by my bed but I need help to operate it. This is impossible while I am in B & B as they cannot stay overnight."

There are countless examples of people in the same desperate situation. I do not think that the cost argument is the main argument, but whether one argues about the cost or, more importantly, about the human lives involved, that is no way to treat our fellow citizens. I appreciate that Wandsworth council, aided and abetted by the Minister and his Government friends, want the council to have a policy that says that as long as the council looks after most of the people in the borough, who can buy their houses on the open market, it need not worry about those who cannot afford to buy, or who become homeless.

I like to think that Britain may once again become a decent and civilised society. Consequently, I believe that we have a great responsibility for the, say, 20 per cent. of our fellow citizens who are badly housed and for that smaller but important minority who are homeless. We have no right to turn our backs on them, because they face a gloomy and desperate Christmas and a bitter new year.

1.15 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Richard Tracey): The hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) has chosen to exemplify the problem of homelessness by reference to his borough of Wandsworth. I am glad that he did so, because it gives me a fine opportunity to demonstrate how a sensible housing strategy, coupled with effective housing management, can make a significant contribution to coping in a real way with the problem of homelessness.

The facts of the case speak for themselves. First, the number of homelessness households in Wandsworth, standing at 982, is well below the average for Inner London boroughs at 1,586 and is around the average for London boroughs as a whole, standing at 965. During the financial year 1985-86 the Inner London boroughs accepted an average of 1,586 households as homeless. Acceptance in Wandsworth was 40 per cent. below that level.

Secondly, if we look at the most recently available figures for the numbers of homeless households placed in bed and breakfast accommodation by the London boroughs, we find that on average the figures for the end of September 1986 were 20 per cent. higher than those for the end of June 1986. However, in Wandsworth there was actually a 16 per cent. reduction in the number of households placed in bed and breakfast by that borough. In Ealing, where the Leader of the Opposition chooses to make his home, the numbers placed in bed and breakfast by that borough increased, by contrast, almost threefold, from 117 to 325.

Some may try to argue that the level of homelessness in Wandsworth is the reverse side of the coin of that council's extremely successful sales policy. Indeed, the hon. Gentleman almost made that point. But hon. Members must be aware that since 1978 Wandsworth has pursued a vigorous policy of council house sales, involving both right to buy, voluntary sales and sales to other than sitting tenants. Over 8,500 dwellings have been sold, 4,000 of them to sitting tenants. Again, the facts speak otherwise. The level of homelessness is significantly higher in those London boroughs whose only sales policy is a rather grudging recognition of the right to buy.

To those who say that Wandsworth's sales policy is in flagrant disregard of the existence of homelessness in the borough, I point out that, in the financial year 1985-86, 47 per cent. of all Wandsworth's new lettings went to homeless families compared, interestingly enough, with only 36 per cent. in Tower Hamlets, 38 per cent. in Southwark and 41 per cent. in Hackney.

Wandsworth's policy is to get those homeless households that are in bed and breakfast hotel accommodation into permanent homes as quickly as possible. Wandsworth is able to do that by securing the rapid re-letting of its housing stock. The number of dwellings awaiting reletting in Wandsworth accounts for less than 1 per cent. of the borough's total stock of 38,000 dwellings, but in Hackney it accounts for 7 per cent. and in Tower Hamlets for 8 per cent. The result is that Wandsworth puts far fewer households into bed and breakfast accommodation than either Hackney or Tower Hamlets and, indeed, far fewer than many other boroughs, including Brent, Camden, Haringey, Newham and the Leader of the Opposition's Ealing.

The efficiency of Wandsworth's housing reletting programme is reflected in the relatively small size of the waiting list for council accommodation. Figures submitted to the Department by local authorities show that, at 1 April 1986, Wandsworth had the smallest housing waiting list of any inner London borough. This would seem to suggest that Wandsworth has been rather more successful in providing housing than have some other local authorities whose approach to the management of their housing stock is less than efficient and who have failed to appreciate that responding to housing needs means more than just providing for those who need to rent but also facilitating home ownership. It is indicative of the position that in the borough of Wandsworth there are nearly three times as many people on the special waiting list for those wishing to buy council dwellings—15,000 to 20,000—a list which gives priority to existing council tenants, as there are on the waiting list for those wishing to rent, of whom there are 6,981.

But Wandsworth's sales are not just the other dimension of a more comprehensive approach to meeting housing needs in the locality. They are also about releasing additional resources to supplement the borough's HIP allocation to assist major capital repairs and improvements to the existing stock and to provide capital for lending to housing associations. In 1985-86, for example,

[Mr. Richard Tracey]

Wandsworth spent £45 million on its own housing stock, using some £28 million of receipts on top of a basic HIP allocation of £17 million. No other inner London borough has generated such a high ratio of capital receipts to basic allocation. The availability of these additional resources has helped to reduce the need to have dwellings standing empty for long periods awaiting repairs. In some other London boroughs properties have been lying empty awaiting repairs for two years or more. Altogether, there is in London a total of nearly 7,000 council-owned dwellings awaiting repair or improvement.

At the same time, the council, although it does not itself build new dwellings, is an active supporter of housing associations whose new building and renovation programmes form a major plank of its housing strategy. In the financial year 1985-86, Wandsworth spent over £5 million through its lending programme in support of housing association schemes, many of which will accommodate households that might otherwise have been homeless.

The lessons to be learnt from the Wandsworth case are that, by the effective management of housing resources, a local authority can be successful in containing the problem of homelessness. Although the primary responsibility for dealing with the problem of homelessness rests with the local authorities, I should make it clear that the Government do not propose to let local authorities face this problem alone. As I have said on previous occasions —in fact, earlier this morning—the Government fully recognise the problem of homelessness and are taking action on a number of fronts to deal with it.

Let me illustrate this action by briefly listing some of the initiatives that the Government have put in train. First, there has been a £390 million increase in the total resources available for local authorities' capital spending on housing for 1987-88. Secondly, there has been approval in principle of an additional £14 million of housing capital resources for London boroughs in the current financial year through the Department's urban housing renewal unit, now rechristened Estate Action. Of this sum, £8 million has already been allocated to schemes now under way. Essentially, these resources are to support the necessary capital investment to under-pin measures to improve the standards and effectiveness of management. Wandsworth has received £1·6 million from Estate Action in the current financial year as a contribution to a major scheme of works at the 900-unit Doddington estate—an area well known by the hon. Member for Battersea — an investment which will help homeless families by releasing more accommodation to let. The Government are increasing the amount of funding available to Estate Action from £50 million in the current financial year to £75 million in 1987-88.

We are making additional resources available from this year's Estate Action budget to help local authorities with homelessness problems bring back into use in the current financial year empty dwellings on their estates. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing has already given approval in principle to the funding of three schemes in Newham, Greenwich and Islington at a total estimated cost of nearly £700,000. Wandsworth is among the London boroughs that have been invited to submit a bid for these resources and an initial bid has been received and is now under consideration by my Department.

We are allocating an additional £20 million to the Housing Corporation next year to generate an additional £45 million to £50 million from private sources for priority works aimed at getting homeless families out of bed and breakfast hotels and at providing accommodation for young people moving to cities to take up jobs in areas where there is a shortage of rented housing. As one of the Housing Corporation's priority areas for funding, Wandsworth stands to benefit from a significant share of these resources which we expect to make a major contribution to getting homeless households out of bed and breakfast accommodation. We have increased to £500,000 the amount of grant aid to the voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness to £500,000. Our grant aiding of the Greater London mobility scheme is designed to enable people to be housed as and where accommodation is available.

We have invited local authorities to put forward for consideration on their merits requests to acquire buildings suitable for use as temporary hostel accommodation for homeless families. Although, to date, only a few local authorities have come forward with proposals, consent has already been given to acquisitions which at any one time will afford temporary accommodation to at least 100 homeless people, and we now await further applications.

The desired effect of all these measures is to bring about a significant reduction in the number of homeless households placed in bed and breakfast hotels by local authorities, particularly in London. Such accommodation is generally quite unsuitable for families with children, yet, despite the fact that the Department's code of guidance to local authorities on this matter makes it crystal clear that bed and breakfast accommodation is to be used only in the last resort, London boroughs spent some £26 million on it in 1985-86.

The Government, in discussion with the local authorities, will go on searching for and exploring new ways of approaching the problem of homelessness. Indeed, my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction will be meeting representatives of the local authority associations early in January to discuss a number of matters relating to the problem of homelessness and to follow up some of the issues that emerged at a meeting between Ministers and local authority representatives earlier this year.

The Government are also looking closely at the measures that the local authorities are implementing, including incentive schemes to encourage council tenants to buy in the private sector, thus releasing their former council accommodation for those who most need to rent, and at the short-term leasing of private sector properties.

I should like to conclude by emphasising that there is no single or, indeed, simple solution to the problem of homelessness. Not all the solutions are in the Government's hands—far from it. We shall continue our dialogue with the local authorities with a view to pressing forward on this issue. There is a great deal of scope for local enterprise and initiative and a will to act, such as that demonstrated by the local authorities that are giving incentives to council tenants to buy in the private sector and to the type of enterprise so well demonstrated by the borough of Wandsworth.

Hotel Classification and Registration

1.29 pm

Mr. Conal Gregory (York): It seems appropriate at this festive time that the House should debate a key element of the tourism industry — the difficult and sometimes thorny subject of hotel classification and registration.

I recognise the energy that the Government have devoted to maximising employment and other opportunities in tourism since responsibility for it has moved to the Department of Employment, and the determination of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to remove obstacles to its efficient management.

I declare an interest. In addition to being the elected secretary of the all-party parliamentary tourism committee and vice-chairman of the Conservative parliamentary tourism committee, I am consultant to Consort Hotels, which is Britain's largest consortium of independent hotels. Both locally and nationally, hoteliers contribute substantially to the economy. Indeed, it is Britain's fastest growth industry. It is expanding at a rate of over 50,000 new jobs each year. However, it is primarily the consumer aspect of the hotel industry that I wish to discuss today.

It may be helpful to consider the origin of that building in which are provided lodgings, meals and other services for the travelling public. The derivation from the French hotel or the old French hostel or ostel takes us to the Latin hospitâle—a clear reference to an apartment for guests. The hotel has, and continues to take, many forms. It includes properties for travellers who expect superior amenities. That reminds me of Smollett's remarks in 1765:

"The expense of living at an hotel is enormous."

The term encompasses simple hotels or boarding houses that supply breakfast known as hotel garni. In a letter in 1858 George Eliot considered this form of hotel to be rather spartan:

"He took us to two Hotels Garni—places where you get lodgings and attendance and coffee and nothing else"

In 1774 Horace Walpole expressed fear of such a location:

"I now live in dread of my biennial gout, and should die of it in an hotel garni"

Yet another form is the hotel academia — effectively a "hostel" in a university which is regarded today as part of the important world of the university conference market.

We have a tremendous range of accommodation and related services. The hostelries of the Roman era, sited principally along their roads, took on a commercial revival in the Middle Ages with the development of inns and hostels. Many were operated by religious foundations. Even in 13th century China, Marco Polo found in existence an extensive system of relay houses that provided accommodation for travellers. With the industrial revolution, innkeeping set a standard for the world in cleanliness, comfort and good food. The American innkeepers set a standard for size.

With Thomas Cook's development of travel for pleasure, the expanding hotel trade of the 20th century can look back on a history that has led to a tourist industry that has outgrown national boundaries and become truly international.

Today's consumer has a right to expect accurate and objective information. Such information about the hotel world is a minefield. There is a plethora of choice. The Automobile Association and the Royal Automobile Club have undertaken hotel classification for many years and their one to five star rating system is well understood. To a lesser extent, their system of "approving" accommodation other than of hotel status is also understood. However, it is a voluntary rather than a comprehensive scheme, the hotelier can opt to be considered or he may decide not to be included in the publications of the motoring associations. The criteria adopted by the AA and the RAC also differ.

The consumer can consult Michelin, or the Consumers Association's "Good Hotel Guide", the "Ashley Courtenay Recommended" or Egon Ronay. There is no shortage of published material—it is almost bewildering. Then, dependent upon the location, the traveller may encounter regional symbols—the hearts of the Heart of England board and the sea-horses of the Isle of Wight. Just imagine the size of the information board that my hon. Friend may encounter during his Christmas break — assuming permission is granted to the hotelier who wishes to inform the public of his hotel since we still do not have deemed consent — with RAC stars, AA stars, rosettes, crossed forks. The symbolism could be endless.

Mandatory hotel registration and classification is surely the answer. The Government have skirted around the issue for far too long. Yet the United Kingdom already has compulsory registration. Northern Ireland has managed such a system since 1948 and has no procedural problems. As each new hotel is built the relevant inspector is invited in and the information so published gives confidence to the traveller, respect to the Ulster hotel trade and a firm foundation for marketing the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

In Britain there is a shabby mess. Eugene O'Neill, in "The Iceman Cometh", wrote:

"You know how it is, travelling around. The damned hotel rooms."

I wonder how much better informed the visitor will be by the development of yet another symbol — the crown. That was devised by the Scottish Tourist Board and subsequently taken up by the national boards of England and Wales.

The new system consists basically of judging hotels on a one-to-five-crown basis. That will be seen by the public when it is revealed next month as a Government scheme. In essence it is, since the taxpayer is by far the major source of funding for the boards. It is incredible that a new scheme is to be introduced which has no market research foundation, lacks proper consultation with consumer and trade bodies, is inconsistent in its criteria, is late for the 1987 season and will have damaging consequences on our overseas visitor market.

The public will erroneously equate crowns with stars. There is no such equality. The Green Park hotel in Harrogate, with 44 bedrooms, has two stars but four-crown status. The Belvedere hotel in Bournemouth is AA two-star but has four crowns. The Terraces in Stirling has 14 rooms and two stars, but four crowns. The Fern Bank hotel, Shanklin, Isle of Wight, has two stars but four crowns.

Furthermore, some unstarred hotels now have several crowns. Consider the Mapleton hotel in Torquay. It is AA listed but has three crowns. The Kingswood hotel in Sidmouth, again AA listed, has four crowns!

Then there are the five crown properties. The Park Way hotel in Kirkcaldy has 40 rooms and three stars, yet it has that elevated status. The Crown hotel in Carlisle has 52 rooms and three stars, and the New Continental in Plymouth, to go to a different part of the country, has 76 rooms and three stars.

[Mr Conal Gregory]

The overseas traveller will expect the facilities of a hotel with five crowns, such as the Inn on the Park, to be mirrored elsewhere. Unless corrected, this is a time-bomb. After problems beyond our control earlier this year when international terrorism knocked the United States visitor market, this ill-conceived scheme is of our own making.

Not surprisingly, many large hotel groups are refusing to put their hotels forward for crown classification. Crest, Rank and Trust House Forte have fundamental objections and Thistle has such strong reservations that it may well withdraw. Therefore, the giants of the hotel trade do not back the scheme.

Since qualitative assessment is so important in selecting a venue, Scotland intends to introduce a three-tier grading to add to its range of crowns—approved, commended and highly commended. The English Tourist Board has said that it will not go down that path — another inconsistency—although it no doubt keeps that option open for the future. Instead, aware that far too many hotels have been awarded five-crown status—over 200 in England alone compared with only 21 five-star hotels in the whole of England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland—it intends to add gold topping. Like the cream on milk, the board will award a gold crown, no bronze or silver awards — but perhaps those symbols, too, will come later — but five gold crowns which means six different variations. One can recall Trollope's comment:

"It is because we put up with bad things that hotel-keepers continue to give them to us."

It is essential that the small operators have just as fair a chance as the large establishments as they are the backbone of the industry. The tourist boards must develop a national scheme where the criteria are uniform throughout the United Kingdom, recognise improvements and are understood by the public. Grading is wanted by the industry and will be of immense benefit when it is introduced as it will give the customer a greater degree of confidence and help to improve standards generally. In spite of that, there is grading only in Scotland with a full-time inspectorate.

Already the regional boards have identified problems — and that is before the scheme is launched. Many consider that a tier needs to be introduced between listed and one crown and that standards at four and five crown level should move towards the four and five star ratings of the motoring organisations. The provision of meals and the introduction of en-suite facilities for two crown upwards will bring the crown classification much more into line with the star system.

I hope that the Department of Employment will ensure better co-ordination between the various Departments of State that have a direct interest in tourism. We were led to believe that that was taking place but at the very first test, registration and classification, it has failed. The answer is to introduce a joint industry-tourist board working committee that will review the situation and report directly to the Government with recommendations on how to implement a national system as originally planned. That would work to unite a system rather than continue the political football game between the tourist boards.

The scheme is now published in all tourist board literature but a delay in the public launch could be beneficial so that problems in the different schemes could be resolved. After such a review it can be announced to the public with a good public relations campaign. It is important that the English Tourist Board, which has by far the vast bulk of the United Kingdom bed stock, is not forced to accept the requirements of the other two national boards. There is not even a commonality of approach. Even the rates charged to the hoteliers differ between the national boards.

The aim should be to inform the public accurately and to effect a general raising of accommodation standards. If that is to be achieved, the unified voice of the industry needs to be harnessed and I hope that the Government's response will be a stimulating one in recognising the damage that can be done, halting it in time and turning their involvement to positive advantage through national criteria which truly help the visitor and assist the development of this great industry.

1.42 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. David Trippier): My hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) has been ingenious in raising this matter on the Floor of the House on a number of occasions. The issue of classification of hotel and other accommodation is one that has commanded wide attention both inside and outside the industry over the past few years. Therefore, as the Minister with responsibility for tourism in England, I am pleased to have the opportunity of describing the progress that has been made.

Tourism, as my hon. Friend suggested, is one of the most important sectors of the economy in the United Kingdom and is a major source of employment. My hon. Friend and I believe that the potential to increase employment within the sector will gather momentum and we have no doubt that that potential is within the tourist industry.

There are about 1·2 million people currently employed in the industry and the prospects for growth are enormous. The providers of hotel and other forms of accommodation have an essential role to play in ensuring the success of tourism—after all, more people will come here if they have somewhere suitable to stay. There are in England nearly 17,000 hotels and motels and nearly 13,000 bed and breakfast and farmhouse establishments. In addition, England and Wales together have over 4,000 licensed private hotels and guest houses. In Britain the industry employs some 250,000 people and indications are that that number is set to increase significantly, as I have already suggested. It is essential that we provide a product that matches in quantity and in quality what the customer wants and expects. To that end, the tourist boards are laying great store on the need to improve and upgrade the standards of accommodation offered to meet the requirements of today's market.

An essential prerequisite of a successful sale is that the customer shall know in advance what he or she is buying. Hence the Government very much welcome and fully support the initiative by the tourist boards to introduce a standardised classification system throughout the country. A further recent development has been the proposal by the European Commission for standardised information on hotels to be used in official hotel guides throughout the European Community. That measure has been extensively discussed by HOTREC, the body representing the hotel industry across the whole of Europe and on which the British Hotels, Restaurants and Caterers Association is represented. The Commission has proposed a series of self-explanatory symbols, which show the facilities that are available at hotels and which it is hoped can be understood by all. In agreeing those symbols HOTREC has also consulted representatives of the United States and Scandinavian industries. We hope to be able to put that measure to the Industry Council on 22 December, next week, for ratification that will lead to its introduction throughout the Community. That of course is not a classification system, but one that we hope will be a valuable aid to the promotion of tourism within the Community. My hon. Friend will recall, when we had the opportunity to debate that and similar matters only a few weeks ago on the Floor of the House, there was some misunderstanding—not in the mind of my hon. Friend but perhaps in the mind of some of our colleagues—about what the new Community system would do. I hope that we have now cleared up that matter.

As my hon. Friend said, the new crown classification scheme is to be launched by the English Tourist Board to the public in the new year through a media campaign and mail drop to several million households. The objective of the public awareness campaign will be not only to acquaint as many people as possible with the existence of the scheme but to make people familiar with the details of the classification system used. The scheme will apply to hotels and other serviced accommodation. It will be administered in England by the English Tourist Board with the help and support of the non-statutory regional tourist boards. In Scotland and Wales the scheme is being administered by the respective national tourist boards. Each national tourist board has adopted the same criteria for hotel classification, although the scheme in Scotland includes a qualitative grading of establishments, as my hon. Friend said. Although the charging mechanisms may vary among the national tourist boards, in each case the charges are designed only to enable the boards to break even on the costs of running the classification scheme.

The scheme allows each hotel to be placed into one of six categories, ranging from that of "listed" for establishments providing a more basic style accommodation, to five crowns for establishments catering for the top of the market. Under the scheme, managements are required to undertake to follow a specified code of conduct that lays down minimum standards of cleanliness, courtesy and information available to visitors. Establishments are classified according to the range and quality of facilities offered. The previous sytem operated by the English Tourist Board had not shown itself as fulfilling the needs of either the industry or the customer. It was complicated and not easily understood by the user, and it had become apparent that there was a need for something better.

I am sorry to have to say to my hon. Friend that the Government wish to make clear their view that we want a voluntary system of hotel classification. We have always believed, as my hon. Friend knows well, that compulsion and Government regulation would be wrong. My hon. Friend kindly said in his opening remarks that I had tried personally, whenever I could in the Department of Employment, to deregulate to ensure that those who were enterprising, not just in tourism but in small firms, had the air to breathe and were able to expand and develop. That is the Government's main policy.

Mr. Gregory: I am exceptionally grateful to my hon. Friend for giving way and I will interrupt only for a moment. In view of his enthusiasm for the open market in that respect, do the Government intend to withdraw, after so many years, the Northern Ireland scheme that has worked so successfully since 1948?

Mr. Trippier: My difficulty, as my hon. Friend will know, is that I am not responsible for Northern Ireland. I appreciate that that is the reply that my hon. Friend might have expected. I made it clear at the outset—as my hon. Friend will recall—that I am the Minister responsible for tourism in England. The less said about that, the better.

I was grateful to my hon. Friend for his earlier remarks about deregulation responsibility within the Department of Employment. That sits uneasily with the stance that my hon. Friend has adopted, which would impose compulsion and increase regulation. Regulation would be more costly to the industry and hence to the consumer. It would certainly be more rigid and bureaucratic and would require significant resources for its operation and administration. It would also be inflexible and unresponsive to changing needs and would have no advantage over a voluntary scheme in encouraging the upgrading of standards.

In an attempt to bring my hon. Friend and myself together on this point, he would be the first to admit that the Government try desperately hard to listen to the voice of industry. That is the major plank of my platform in addressing the debate today. I want to try to convince my hon. Friend that we have listened to the tourism industry. We did not want to introduce a proposal which the industry did not want.

The view that I have expressed is shared by the majority in the tourism industry in this country. I do not say this in an unkind manner because I know of the great enthusiasm that my hon. Friend has for the tourism industry and his particular interest and involvement not least in his constituency, yet he would be the first to admit and acknowledge that in the debate on the European regulations on 26 November there was no support expressed on the Conservative Benches for a compulsory system—that is, for his proposals.

The current crown classification scheme is the result of lengthy and detailed consultations between the national tourist boards and trade, local authority and consumer interests. Organisations representing the industry as well as individual hotel operators were given the opportunity to make their views known either directly to the English Tourist Board, or at meetings organised by the regional tourist boards. I am confident that adequate opportunity was given to all concerned to contribute to the debate, but of course it was up to the industry to take full advantage of the opportunity offered. Account was also taken of the lessons learnt in operating the old scheme and of suggestions received from members of the public as to how the system could be improved. The scheme is designed to ensure that the customer knows what he or she will be getting when booking accommodation and to help in deciding whether what is being offered represents value for money. It will also provide a yardstick to hoteliers who wish to improve the facilities offered and an incentive to upgrade the quality of the accommodation stock to meet rising customer expectations. In addition, membership of the scheme will give hotel operators a marketing advantage over their competitors who have not opted for classification. The classification categories are designed to help both British and overseas visitors to select with confidence establishments that meet their needs. I believe that such a system is necessary if this country is to compete successfully in the international tourism market.

[Mr. Trippier]

Since the announcement of the scheme in October 1985, over 12,000 establishments in England, Scotland and Wales have applied for registration under the scheme. That compares with an estimated 10,000 establishments participating in one or both schemes operated by the motoring organisations. I am aware that initially some parts of the industry expressed concern about aspects of the scheme, but I believe that the degree of positive interest so far shown in the scheme indicates that it is favourably regarded by a broad cross-section of the industry. A breakdown of establishments that have so far registered shows that the scheme is receiving support from all types of hotel. The number of establishments so far registered with the scheme in England falls only just short of the target numbers for the launch date.

As I have already mentioned, the three national tourist boards employ exactly the same criteria in classifying hotels, although the Scottish Tourist Board goes further and also grades establishments according to an assessment of the quality of facilities offered. I am aware that some siren voices south of the border would also welcome qualitative grading. I can see that there may be a case for suggesting that it would be advantageous if exactly the same scheme operated throughout Great Britain, but certain sectors of the industry have expressed strong reservations about grading and these have led to the English Tourist Board's decision to restrict the scheme only to classification of facilities for the present. However, the introduction of grading remains under active consideration — and so it should. The English Tourist Board is of the view that if there are sufficient indications of support from within the industry it will consider introducing qualitative assessment. I understand that the Wales Tourist Board is soon to begin an exercise to seek the views of the industry in Wales on the principle of quality grading.

Other voices have suggested that the public will be confused by the existence of the new crown classification scheme alongside other schemes such as those run by the motoring organisations. The AA and RAC have set up schemes designed to meet the needs of their members, which may not necessarily be the same as the requirements of the population generally. Additionally, they do not cover the full range of the types of hotel and other accommodation offered. The Government therefore believe that there is a need for a scheme to be set up which has national applicability and which provides a fully objective assessment of the facilities offered. The public awareness campaign to which I have referred should make everyone familiar with the crown system and avoid any confusion which might otherwise arise.

As I have said, it is now just over two years since the English Tourist Board originally began consultations on the form of classification. It has been an illuminating experience for the board and, I suspect, for many within the industry. Progress has not always been easy, but I believe that we now have the basis of a system which meets the needs of both the industry and its customers. At the request of the Government, the English Tourist Board is reviewing the classification scheme to see what lessons there are to be learnt in the light of the experience gained so far. I assure my hon. Friend that full account will be taken of all comments and criticisms in any future amendments made to the scheme and the English Tourist Board will give ample notice of any significant changes proposed to the classification criteria to give interested parties time to make their views known. The view has been expressed by some that the board's willingness to hold a review at this stage suggests a lack of confidence in the scheme, but needs change and we learn by experience. Indeed, since the inception of the scheme, a review was planned during its first year of operation, along with a continuous assessment of performance. In this context, a consumer research project will be carried out during 1987 to establish the public's reaction to and perception of the scheme. Any modifications will have the aim of improving standards and enhancing consumer confidence.

An example of the boards' responsiveness to comment from the industry is the recent decision by the English Tourist Board to introduce an additional superior or five gold crown classification category. This was agreed in response to reservations expressed by the industry that too many hotels were meriting inclusion in the top five crown category — the very point that my hon. Friend made. The five gold crowns will be awarded to those few hotels which offer the highest levels of service and facilities. It is expected that not more than 35 hotels in England will attain that classification, compared with more than 200 which have to date been awarded five crowns.

The country has long needed a national classification system which applies to all serviced accommodation, one which is not aimed at a particular section of the market but satisfies the needs of the whole industry and of all potential customers. The true test of the scheme will only come with experience of its operation and this is not to begin until the new year. We must await the verdict of the user, but I am confident that the scheme will be welcomed by all concerned.

Herstmonceux Castle

2 pm

Mr. Charles Wardle (Bexhill and Battle): I am grateful for the opportunity to speak in this Adjournment debate which comes at the 11th hour of parliamentary business for 1986. During the year I have raised the subject of Herstmonceux castle on several occasions, each time in the context of the proposal to move the Royal Greenwich Observatory away from it in 1990. I have done so in questions to my right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Education and Science and in a speech on tourism on 9 July. However, the opportunity has not previously arisen to express in any detail for the parliamentary record the extent of my anxiety and that of many others about the plans of the Science and Engineering Research Council to remove the observatory and thereby radically to alter the use to which the castle has been put so successfully for almost 40 years.

Obviously, there have been other ways in which my parlimanetary colleagues and I have been able to voice our anxieties during the past months. Many meetings have taken place since the SERC made its initial announcement in March about moving the observatory. There has also been a considerable volume of correspondence with my hon. Friend the Paliamentary Under-Secretary of State, other Ministers and representatives of SERC. However, despite all that activity, which brought to light widespread and fundamental reservations about SERC's proposals on the part of many eminent astronomers and scientists, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced that he is not willing to interfere with the judgment that the SERC says is made on scientific grounds.

It should be made absolutely clear that, contrary to some rumours about Rayner initiatives over the castle some years ago, the decision to move the observatory was not Government inspired. In fairness to the Secretary of State, I must say that no Government have ever challenged a decision by the SERC on its scientific merits. Therefore, the observatory is due to move to Cambridge in 1990 and the castle is to be sold.

There is, perhaps, an irony in the choice of year in which the castle is to be vacated. 1990 will also be the 550th anniversary of the year when a licence was granted to crenellate the castle. The anniversary will focus attention on the span of five and a half centuries since the castle's early significance was officially recognosed. Yet under the SERC's proposals its importance is now being overlooked. It is in danger of being seen merely as an asset to be divested by the SERC for a target sum. It is a balance sheet item with a hypothetical valuation to satisfy the Treasury that the cost of rebuilding the observatory in Cambridge can be afforded.

No guidelines have yet been set either by the SERC or, to the best of my knowledge, by my hon. Friend for the most suitable type of buyer to be approached, or for the ways in which the castle should continue to be enjoyed as a public amenity of major historic interest after is has changed hands.

The irony becomes more evident when one bears in mind the fact that the castle has been attracting over 60,000 tourists a year to the observatory and has generated revenue for the SERC. It has created local employment opportunities in tourism — a field of endeavour specifically highlighted by the Department of Employment as having special growth potential for jobs. Yet, when I asked the chairman of the SERC, Professor Mitchell, about the tourist potential of the observatory while it is maintained at the castle, he said that tourism simply was not part of his brief.

The castle is an outstanding example of early 15th century brickwork in elegantly symmetrical design. In the Sussex volume of their well-known series, "The Buildings of England", Pevsner and Nairn describe it as "a splendid sight"

and

"the most striking proof of the extent which all-round symmetry had reached in England three generations before the Renaissance."

They say that, despite

"its moat, battlements and turrets, it is a mansion rather than a castle."

In the 18th and 19th centuries it fell into decay, but it was brilliantly restored in the early part of this century, first by Colonel Lowther and then by Sir Paul Latham, with the architect, Walter Godfrey. As a result, the Royal Greenwich Observatory, prompted by observational difficulties at its original site in Greenwich, was pleased to move to the castle in 1948.

The Royal Greenwich Observatory occupied the castle, added new buildings on the west side and installed the six telescopes of the equatorial group in a carefully landscaped position on the east side of the castle park. Over a period of nearly 40 years thereafter, the Royal Greenwich Observatory's international status has grown and its contribution at Herstmonceux to advances in ground-based astronomy has been recognised throughout the world.

In recent years, responsibility for the Royal Greenwich Observatory has been transferred from the Admiralty to the SERC. Operational responsibility is now delegated to the council's Astronomy, Space and Radio Board, which supports the range of observational astronomy from radio to gamma-rays, using ground-based facilities and other systems deployed in space. The search for better quality ground-based observations has led to developments of new, larger and technologically more sophisticated telescopes which have been established on mountain top sites at Hawaii and La Palma where they benefit from the greater transparency of the earth's atmosphere.

The Royal Greenwich Observatory has been made responsible for commissioning the three optical telescopes in the Isaac Newton group at La Palma, the third and largest of which, the 4·2 m William Herschel telescope, was completed this year. Its commissioning programme has been scheduled to run until 1990. Inevitably, the shift of emphasis in observational facilities from Herstmonceux to La Palma has led to a changed but nevertheless a continuing vital role at the Royal Greenwich Observatory. Efforts are now concentrated at Herstmonceux on La Palma's behalf on the development of instrumentation, control equipment and related software, new optical and spectroscopic systems, the upkeep of photographic and digital data banks and the important liaison function with universities and astronomical societies in this country and elsewhere.

As a result of that shift in emphasis, the SERC decided to vacate Herstmonceux castle and move to a university site. It would not be an exaggeration to say that the announcement made by the SERC in March that the Royal Greenwich Observatory would definitely be moved in 1990 caused something of an uproar.

[Mr. Charles Wardle]

By then it was well known that the report prepared by a working party led by Professor Kingman which the SERC had considered just two months earlier had failed to point to any overriding reasons for moving the Royal Greenwich Observatory. Indeed, the Kingman report concluded that staying at Herstmonceux was a definite and positive option. Therefore, when the SERC appeared to rule out that option in March, with no reason given for its exclusion, the protests began in earnest. In the months that followed, a great many astronomers, ranging from university professors to the well-known television presenter of "The Sky at Night", Mr. Patrick Moore, asked why the Royal Greenwich Observatory needed to be moved, even allowing for the changed role in support of the Isaac Newton group of telescopes at La Palma.

The protesters were joined by worried members of the Royal Greenwich Observatory staff, notably by Dr. Penston and Janet Dudley, by the indefatigable Mary Smith, who presented to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science a petition with 17,000 signatures in support of retention of the observatory at Herstmonceux, by my parliamentary colleagues in East Sussex, by the East Sussex county council, the Weald and District council, and by the Herstmonceux parish council.

Because of the constraints on my time in the debate, I shall simply quote the opinions of three leading astronomers. The first is Professor Rees, who is Professor of Astronomy at Cambridge. On 21 April, he said:

"I think much the best solution would be for the RGO to remain at Herstmonceux, on its magnificent site, and to be maintained as an outstanding institution for atronomical research and development, as well as a storehouse for the important archives."

Professor Rees has also made a powerful argument why the Royal Greenwich Observatory would do well to be located in Cambridge if it must be moved. Nevertheless, at the outset, he said that it would be better for the observatory to remain where it is.

Dr. Lynden-Bell, the president of the Royal Astronomical Society, said:

"Any policy to dismember, destroy or merge the Royal Greenwich Observatory as an institution will be strongly resisted by a wide body of astronomers."

He said that the way forward is

"to build up the scientific side of the RGO at the expense of the engineering and facilities side."

On 2 June, Dr. P. A. Charles, the university lecturer in astronomy at the University of Oxford, wrote to me:

"SERC is seen spending an enormous sum of money on a move that nobody has called for and in order to solve problems they can neither specify nor quantify. The long-term effects of this can only be negative."

That is the extent of the evidence that I produce from the astronomical community—from those who thought that the observatory should stay where it is and be developed on site.

The main thrust of the argument against the decision to vacate Herstmonceux came from three directions. The first was criticism about the lack of proper consultation. It must be said that that was because other members of the astronomical community who were interested in what the Kingman report said had no sight of it. The SERC eventually embarked upon fairly extensive consultation with the staff at the Royal Greenwich Observatory, but only after complaints had been made in March and April about the lack of consultation until that time. But there is no question that the lack of communication in the early stages of the decision-making process caused much unhappiness.

The second area of criticism concerns the inadequate scientific justification for the move. Only the most generalised arguments emerge from the minutes of the SERC's March meeting. If the Royal Greenwich Observatory was to be combined with the royal observatory in Edinburgh, the benefits were no more specific than a "larger operational unit with the increased flexibility, efficiency and opportunity to co-operate" and the

"interaction of background activities, e.g. information technology, computing, microelectronics."

Moving to a university site such as Cambridge or Manchester, which was also contemplated, would avail

"an infrastructure with strength in astronomy and related disciplines."

At Cambridge, there would be

"good engineering, computing and physics departments,"

while Manchester offered

"one of the best astronomy centres renowned for its radio work at Jodrell Bank," with

"strength in optical astronomy"

and

"a good background in other relevant disciplines."

No doubt every point was a worthy reference for the other university sites, but it is hardly the overwhelming scientific evidence that one would have expected the Science and Engineering Research Council to have cited in support of a move that would cost — by way of disposal of Herstmonceux castle—more than £3 million.

The third criticism concerned the absence of proper financial justification for the move. It has been suggested that the disposal of Herstmonceux castle looks like asset-stripping, and several questions have been asked about the detailed ongoing financial calculations which seem to suggest that operational savings will be made when the staff move to Cambridge. It must also be borne in mind that by the time for which the move is scheduled—1990—the Royal Greenwich Observatory staff is expected to number no more than 120 or 130. Therefore, I suspect that some of the savings would have been made whether the Royal Greenwich Observatory stays at Herstmonceux castle or whether it goes to Cambridge or elsewhere. Nevertheless, the financial justification has been called in question by a number of my parliamentary colleagues and other people concerned by the move.

There is then the question of other services at Herstmonceux for which the future has not been clearly demarcated. The first concerns the satellite laser ranger, which I shall describe as briefly as possible. It is a system whereby a laser bounces off a large lens and shoots some 5,000 miles in the sky, rebounds off a satellite which it locates in the sky and comes back down to Herstmonceux so that a computer at the satellite laser ranger can identify within an accuracy of 2 in. the spatial relationship between Herstmonceux castle and the satellite 5,000 miles in space. The moment that that satellite ranger is moved, even if it is moved only a mile, all the valuable work and reference computations will have to be altered, and that will be an enormous waste. The SERC has admitted that it does not yet have the solution to such a move.

Another service of the Royal Greenwich Observatory is the time service, in which my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Boscawen) has taken an interest, on behalf of the Worshipful Company of Clockmakers. It has made these observations:

"The SERC has given as a reason for terminating the Greenwich time service that the money to replace the electric tubes and other equipment is not available. Yet Concerned American Institutions and Companies have offered to replace all the equipment at the cost of £500,000 free of charge."

That is another uncertainty.

I have one general criticism. We should be building up our existing bases of technological and scientific excellence, not allowing a contraction on to fewer sites. Bearing in mind the importance of new technology to this nation's wealth and future jobs, we should adopt an enterprising approach to a site of excellence such as the Royal Greenwich Observatory, rather than seeing it moved to Cambridge where, inevitably, to some extent it will be merged into the university's community.

I do not believe that such a move would have been contemplated if this were in the United States, Germany, Japan or Switzerland. I suspect that one of the reasons is that, worthy as is all the work done by the SERC, it is predominantly led by academics. It has some business men on it, but relatively few. I suspect that if those few business men were to be a little more forceful about adopting an enterprising approach to our sites of technological excellence, the outcome would be different in future when other such cases arise.

I am pleased to say that there is some good news as a result of the SERC's recent concessions. Those staff at the Royal Greenwich Observatory who are still employed in 1990 will all be offered jobs at Cambridge, and concessions have been made over tourism. The astronomy exhibition centre is to stay open in the park at Herstmonceux and the equatorial group of telescopes will continue working. I emphasise to my hon. Friend the Minister that we need to do even more if we are to fulfill the potential of Herstmonceux castle. Discussions have already taken place with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment who has responsibility for tourism, and with the chairman of English Heritage, Lord Montagu.

It is perfectly clear that, if the castle is to be sold, we need to embark on a feasibility study now that gauges what the castle's full tourist potential will be when the Royal Greenwich Observatory moves. Perhaps we should talk to the likes of the owners of Madame Tussauds, the Pearson Group, or to, say, the British Tourist Authority, the English Tourist Board or to anyone with expertise in tourism who can suggest how the castle's future potential may be realised. If we do that, I am sure that the best possible price will be realised for the SERC when the castle is sold, which can be no bad thing, and that after that the interested purchaser will no doubt consider a conference centre, a hotel development, a planetarium or a scientific museum that could be combined with the astronomy exhibition centre so that the tourist potential could be maximised.

I said that I believe that the move of the Royal Greenwich Observatory from Herstmonceux castle is a matter of regret. However, given the decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, I accept that the move in 1990 is inevitable. However, I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to make sure that that study of the castle's tourist potential is commissioned so that, after 550 years, the castle can embark on a further exciting and enterprising period.

2.21 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. George Walden): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle) on being successful in the ballot and on raising the subject of the future of Herstmonceux castle this afternoon. It is clearly one of importance to his constituency. I should also like to pay tribute to his tireless advocacy on behalf of his constituents, including the staff of the Royal Greenwich Observatory, who will be affected in some way by the observatory's move from Herstmonceux.

We have also received several representations and, one might almost say, earnest entreaties from my hon. Friends the Members for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) and for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow). I believe that what my hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle said about his researches into the architectural history of Herstmonceux illustrates the depth of his interest in the whole environment. Now that a decision has been taken on the future of the RGO he is understandably focusing the same energy on encouraging the SERC, the local authorities and the tourist boards to explore ways of minimising the impact of the move on the locality.

I have recently met the leader of the East Sussex county council and representatives of other local interests, and I should like to take this opportunity to express my sympathy to those adversely affected directly or indirectly over the decision to move the observatory. Nevertheless, I believe that the SERC has taken the correct decision. I should also point out that there have been a number of other moves and mergers of research council institutes over the past few years, as a response to the changing requirements of scientific research. My hon. Friend the Member for Bexhill and Battle quoted a number of eminent opinions against movement from Herstmonceux, but I do not need to remind him that many of the decisions that the SERC has to take inevitably provoke public discussion and disagreement among academics.

The Royal Greenwich Observatory is a component part of the SERC, whose prime responsibility is to promote the highest quality of British science in United Kingdom universities and polytechnics. The standing of British astronomy is very high, due in no small part to the magnificent facilities that the SERC has provided; the optical telescopes at La Palma in the Canary islands, in collaboration with the Netherlands and Spain; the Anglo-Australian and United Kingdom Schmidt telescopes for observing the southern skies; infra-red and submillimetre wave telescopes in Hawaii, in collaboration with the University of Hawaii and the Netherlands; and experiments on a number of satellites, including the Giotto mission to Halley's comet and the infra-red satellite, IRAS. In 1985-86, the council's Astronomy, Space and Radio Board had a budget of £50 million, which is 17 per cent. of the SERC's total expenditure.

The council has to support research in many other areas of science and engineering, and therefore has a duty to ensure that its activities in large basic sciences, such as astronomy, are carried out in the most cost effective way. If it does not do so, other areas of science, of more short-term applicability, will suffer. It has therefore examined carefully the support required for its ground-based astronomy facilities in the 1990s and beyond.

[Mr. George Walden]

The RGO has a glorious past of which we can all be proud, and there is no reason to fear for its future at Cambridge. Indeed, its standing would be likely to decline if it remained as an isolated unit at Herstmonceux. In terms of its 300 or more years of existence, the period in Sussex has been fruitful, but relatively short; it moved there from Greenwich in only 1948 in order to take advantage of the clearer Sussex air. Since then, advances in astronomy have completely transformed the subject, with the exploitation of other types of telescopes, such as the radio-telescopes at Jodrell Bank and Cambridge, and, with the advent of space facilities, telescopes in the X-ray, ultra-violet and infra-red regions of the spectrum.

The council believes that an isolated establishment will not be able to provide the level of support that would be required into the next century without a significant increase in planned staffing levels, and the council is unwilling to reallocate funds to astronomy for this from elsewhere in its activities. On the other hand, the council believes that the RGO could provide the required service if it were closely associated with relevant university departments, and, in particular, a university with an active experimental optical astronomy group and also a wide range of other astronomy interests, and — just as important — departments with expertise in the enabling technologies of micro-electronics, computing and communications, which are required for the development of instrumentation and remote operation facilities at La Palma. In the council's view, the most appropriate environment for the RGO would be associated with the Institute of Astronomy at Cambridge, where it could also benefit from the expertise available in, for example, the departments of radioastronomy, engineering and physics.

I stress that the decision was a scientific one, and one that the council believes to be in the best interests of the RGO and the university community that it serves.

A new building is to be provided for the RGO on the university campus, and all of the observatory's activities presently at Herstmonceux can be accommodated there, with the exception of the Equatorial Group of telescopes, which I shall mention later. The observatory will remain a council establishment and retain its integrity and identity.

In order to fund the construction of the new RGO building at Cambridge, the council plans to sell the Herstmonceux estate and has been given the necessary approvals to retain the receipts for this purpose. My hon. Friend rightly addressed the potential of the Herstmonceux estate. I note his remarks on the necessity of a feasibility study.

The SERC is, of course, very much aware of the significant part played by the RGO in the economy of East Sussex and in particular its contribution to tourism in the area. Access to the castle has in the past been limited, but there is no doubt that the grounds and the astronomy exhibition in the Equatorial Group are a major tourism asset to the community. The council understands and is sympathetic to the local concern to remove the uncertainty over future public access to the grounds and castle. It is therefore making a considerable effort to discuss with the interested local and national bodies ways in which the castle can be retained as a tourist attraction.

I can report that the SERC has had two meetings with the English tourist board, the South East England tourist board, and representatives of the East Sussex county council and the Wealden district council to consider various options. My hon. Friend kindly alluded to those meetings. The possibility of these bodies jointly commissioning a pre-feasibility study to examine these options, as my hon. Friend also mentioned, is being discussed, and I welcome such co-ordinated initiatives. There are a number of possibilities open. These range from bringing in a purchaser to develop the whole site as a tourist attraction—including the castle itself—to finding an owner who would simply allow public access to the footpaths in the grounds.

It is very much hoped that any future sale arrangements will allow the astronomy exhibition and the Equatorial Group of telescopes to remain in the castle grounds where they can form part of an integrated attraction. Nevertheless, if the SERC is not successful in finding a suitable owner who is willing to exploit the exhibition and telescopes, the council is willing to exclude this area from the sale. It has set up a joint working party with the National Maritime museum to consider the practicalities of the museum taking over the day-to-day operation of this part of the site. The museum is already responsible for the Old Greenwich observatory and has expressed an interest in the Equatorial Group. This would provide the possibility of developing public access to these telescopes.

I hope that my hon. Friend will understand from what I have said that the potential of Herstmonceux has not been overlooked by the Government or the SERC. I assure the House that I shall continue to take an interest in this aspect of the move of the Royal Greenwich Observatory, although this does not directly fall within my responsibility.

My hon. Friend mentioned the satellite laser ranger. He is technically astute on these matters, as I know from discussions with him. I again assure him that discussions on the future of the satellite laser ranger are continuing with other sponsors and users of that facility.

I congratulate my hon. Friend again on his highly informed and impressive advocacy on behalf of his constituency.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY DOCUMENTS

Motion made, and Question put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 102(5) (Standing Committees on European Community documents.)

TRANSPORT INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS

That this House takes note of the proposal by the Commission of the European communities for a Council Regulation on the granting of financial support to transport infrastructure projects as set out in the Department of Transport's unnumbered Explanatory Memorandum of 1st December 1986; and welcomes the Government's intention to work for a structured approach to the European Community's future role in transport infrastructure, based on the co-ordination of infrastructure projects in the Member States.—[Mr. Malone.]

Asbestos

That this House takes note of European Community Document No. 11216/85 on the prevention of environmental pollution by asbestos; and agrees that the draft Directive, while controlling the emissions of asbestos from manufacturing industry, should not prevent the safe use of asbestos materials.—[Mr. Malone.]

Question agreed to.

Prisons

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Malone.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Tom Cox (Tooting): Events in prisons this year have clearly shown how delicate is the day-to-day atmosphere in our prison system. Just under the surface in every prison lie the tensions and bitternesses of prison life. We hear repeatedly of the ever-increasing number of people in prison. I understand that a Home Office report shows that, early in the 1990s, the prison population could be 55,000 to 60,000. There are already about 48,000 people in our prisons.

Many prisons are old, overcrowded and lack the modern basic facilities to provide reasonable living and working conditions and opportunities. They are degrading and unhygienic for inmates and officers. Vast numbers of people are sent to prison who should never be there. They often need some kind of care, but certainly not prison. We have made little progress in finding alternatives to prison. The Minister should go to any prison to see the people who should not be there—the drug addicts and the mentally ill.

Keeping someone in prison costs an enormous amount. We must start to ask what that achieves. It certainly keeps out of society some people who, I readily accept, should be kept out, but what of the majority who are in and out of prisons most of their lives and face short sentences? What does the system achieve with them? They spend hours on end locked up in cells. On 14 November this year, Wandsworth prison in my constituency locked up 1,548 inmates, and there was work for 720. I suggest that that happens in prison after prison.

It is proposed that prison workshops should be closed. What will happen if they do close? What other activities will be introduced, or is this solely a money-saving exercise? If it is, there will be problems. I readily accept that we spend vast sums of money on prisons, but much of it is wasted. The whizz-kids of the management teams put the information down on paper and, at times, it looks wonderful, but prisons do not work like that. The people who run the system — the governors and the prison officers — may be consulted, but I wonder whether the authorities ever listen to their views, which are based on experience, and whether their ideas are ever put into practice.

I am sure that the Minister will tell me about the prison building programme and obviously that has a role. But let us look at the existing record. Are prison numbers going down? Are conditions improving? Is life better in prisons? Are officers or governors happier? Does the system work better? There is no indication of that whatsoever.

There have been a number of prison disturbances this year and it would be interesting to know what kind of survey the Home Office intends to carry out into that problem. It is a fact that conditions in prisons are worse today than they were 20 years ago. We have more life sentence prisoners, more terrorist prisoners and more violent offenders in prison than ever before. There is more violence occurring in prisons between prisoners, more violence against staff and less recreation in prisons.

More prisoners spend more time locked up in their cells than ever before. The drug problem in prisons increases. Time and time again the Home Office has been told of those problems, but where is the evidence that it has done anything about it? If the Minister doubts what I say he should read the annual reports of prison boards of visitors. Take any six reports from anywhere in this country and discover what is said by many men and women not connected with the prison service or the Home Office. In their reports, they spell out the complaints, the despair and the "do the best you can" attitude that is so often adopted. Where is the long term programme? Where is the vision of prison reform that will show how the system will be working in this country in the year 2000? I see nothing that gives me any hope.

[Mr. Tom Cox]

I should like to discuss the Home Office policy statement "A Fresh Start". Prison officers all over the country have rejected it. From time to time I am sure that the Minister must read the Prison Officers Association journal, "Gatelodge". I hope that he has read the October edition because I would like to quote three or four brief summaries of local branch reports that commented on "A Fresh Start."

The monthly report from Buckley Hall stated:

"By now I am sure everyone will have seen the latest propaganda from the Prison Department. We have all received, I'm sure, the booklet, "A Fresh Start". . . Without being too unkind, at the time of writing, they haven't even sorted out this year's problems, never mind inventing new ones. . . it contains one of the most retrogressive ideas yet put to this Association. For 'contracted hours' read 'compulsory overtime'. No matter how you read it, that's what they are talking about."

Let us consider what the report from Frankland, a major prison, said about the statement:

"Let us all hope that we are not dragged back to the Dickensian days and that our representatives remember that we are working in conditions that warrant a reduction in working hours and as such the last thing we deserve is to be committed to an increase in conditioned hours. The proposed 'New Start' has all the signs of a Department Confidence Trick."

Lowdham Grange's report stated:

"We have, since I last wrote a branch news item for the magazine, been confronted with a document known as 'A Fresh Start'. I don't wish to say much on this matter as I'm sure we will hear plenty in the next few months. It suffices to say that the booklet now hangs on a piece of string for use in the staff toilet".

It is sad that that is the officers' attitude to this particular document. The final quote I shall use comes from the report from Shrewsbury prison which states.:

"the Department has issued us all with a pamphlet entitled 'A Fresh Start,' hooray, at last, things are moving — but where? Goodness knows! There has never been a less inspiring, more empty set of proposals put to Prison Officers in the history of the Prison Service. We certainly need a fresh start or rather should we say we need some fresh starters at the top, people competent to run an organisation the size of this Service."

Those are the views of long-serving officers in our prison system about the Home Office document, "A Fresh Start". There is bitterness and a feeling of being let down. Many prison officers have little confidence for their future. At this moment the fresh start scheme has little chance of being accepted by prison officers. The Minister can think or say what he likes, but it has little chance of being accepted. I beg him not to try to force an agreement on the Prison Officers Association. It would be far better for him and the Home Secretary to invite a group of officers from prisons around Britain to their Department to hear what they are saying. With their support there is a chance, if their views are heard and listened to, of achievements being made.

I could quote many examples, but I shall quote just two. A letter sent to the Home Secretary by the Brixton Prison Officers Association in October this year says:

"Dear Mr. Hurd, I have been instructed by the Branch Committee to inform you of the very grave concern of the staff shortage here at Brixton. The Governor and C.O. have done all within their power to help, but there is a lot more that can be done by the 'Higher Ups'"

The branch secretary of Wandsworth prison in my constituency is a man called Steve Spratling. I know him and he has been in the prison service for many years. He is a dedicated officer. In Prison Service News in October this year, he said:

"As everyone is aware, the Prison Service is suffering drastically from the effects of financial restraints. This in turn has brought to a head differences in relation to negotiating rights for safe manning levels.

Prison officers cost too much! That is what the Home Office Prison Department would have everyone believe. But what of the real cost? The real cost is met by prison officers, their wives and families.

We work sometimes long hours, exhausting our reserves of tolerance dealing with some of the most difficult elements society can throw at us. We are subjected to verbal and more often physical attacks by simply doing our job. At the end of the day, there is little or nothing left when we return home exhausted and tired, and often nothing left to offer as a husband and father. Our wives and families suffer too."

That comes from the branch secretary of Wandsworth prison in my constituency—a man who has been in the service for a long time. In that letter he conveys the feeling of himself and his fellow officers. They are the views of prison officers and they are ably supported by David Evans, the general secretary of the Prison Officers Association, and the executive committee.

In this Adjournment debate I have not sought to make this a political issue. I speak of what I know and of what I am told. Recently, during a visit that I made to Wormwood Scrubs prison, bulletin 4 of "A Fresh Start" was being given out to officers. Their view, in the general discussion that I had with them for a couple of hours or so, was that they could in no way accept it. I could give many examples of what they bitterly complain about, but I shall give just two.

The prison service needs a proper salary structure without the conditions that would be imposed by the fresh start scheme. Such propaganda from the Home Office is in no way conducive to building up support among prison officers and their association. There is no way in which all officers will get the much talked of £15,000 a year, as is mentioned in "A Fresh Start."

The Home Office also has to face up to the fact that there has to be a major increase in staffing in our prisons. In Wandsworth prison earlier this year a young officer was brutally attacked. That attack, sadly, took place because of totally inadequate staffing for the job he was doing. It was taken up by me and the local POA with the Home Secretary. In no way were prison officers happy with the response they received from the Home Secretary to that very serious attack against a young officer.

I have said that our prisons are in crisis, and all the evidence shows that they are. The men and women who run them know that and it is time that those people were listened to and that the Home Office started to work with them. If that happens, a solution is possible. Try to force something on them and there will be no support. There will be increasing bitterness and mass resignations from the service. That is the choice that the Minister and the Home Office face. Let us hope that they understand it because prisons are going to be in our society for a long time to come and it will be dedicated men and women officers who will run them. I suggest to the House that it is time we started to hear what they say to us and took note of it.

2.46 pm

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. David Mellor): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) for providing me with the opportunity to set out today how the Government see the future of our prisons and the conditions for those who live and work in them. I know of the hon. Gentleman's long-standing interest in prison issues, and the personal contribution he has made as a member of the board of visitors at Wormwood Scrubs.

Of course, conditions in many of our prisons leave much to be desired. We have never had to have that fact beaten out of us; we have always made it clear. The chronic problems of overcrowding, inadequate facilities and restrictive regimes are not of recent provenance. Indeed, we inherited a prison estate from the previous Government in an entirely shocking state. This is the first Government in living memory who have tried to put resources into the prisons to make improvements that might, with advantage, have been made many years ago. I know that the hon. Gentleman, wanting to be fair in making sure that this is not a political issue, will accept that and the fact that some real improvements are being made.

My real criticism of what the hon. Gentleman has said is that for someone with his wide experience of prisons he has taken a rather narrow POA-orientated view, when there are other views and many counter-arguments to suggest that the lot of the prison officer is a great deal better than it was and a great deal better than is suggested by one or two of the quotations that he read out.

Even if one concedes, as we do, the difficulties faced in many prisons, we also have to face the fact that many of the problems do not apply in all establishments. Many training prisons and youth custody centres are little affected by overcrowding and provide good conditions and positive regimes for prisoners and staff alike.

The hon. Gentleman knows Wandsworth prison in his constituency very well. I know it too—less well than the hon. Gentleman—as I am a Member from the same borough. Of course, conditions in a number of similar prisons of Victorian origin are not good. There are a number of reasons for the problems that I have outlined, not least of which is the lack of investment by successive Governments in the prison estate. It is a shocking fact that no new prisons were built in England and Wales between 1918 and 1958 and the resources devoted to repair and maintenance were totally inadequate until this Government took office.

Another major problem is the rise in the prison population. That has obviously contributed to the problems of the system. Last year's major surge in the population to 48,200 in the summer placed heavy demands on the capacity of the system to cope. After falling steadily to about 45,000 by the beginning of 1986, the population has increased gradually again this year and, sadly, reached a peak of over 48,300 last Friday. This year's increase is attributable mainly to a rise in the remand population, together with an increase in long-term adult male offenders.

I must also point out to the hon. Gentleman that the percentage of the prison population sharing cells doubled from 18 per cent. to 35·8 per cent. in the five years of the Labour Government 1965-70. Since then it has remained pretty steady. That is because of the work that has been done by the Government in building more prisons and refurbishing existing establishments. Despite the 8 per cent. rise in the prison population between 1980 and 1985, we have been able to keep constant the percentage of those sharing cells. Had we pursued the policy of the Labour Government and not invested in the prisons—indeed, made cuts in prison building—today's situation would be far worse.

I say that to the hon. Gentleman in response to some of the criticisms that have been made, which tend to suggest that the problems that we face are all of the Government's making, and matters to which we have been wilfully blind. Far from it. Building new prisons and refurbishing old prisons is not something that one can do with the wave of a magic wand. It is a long and extended process. When one adds to that the enormous pressure through the increased number of prisoners coming from the courts either on remand or as sentenced prisoners, the situation becomes one of the most difficult management problems that any Government Department has been called upon to face.

I appreciate that the POA members to whom the hon. Gentleman speaks have a vested interest in preserving present working practices, but we cannot apply resources to the prison system without asking serious questions about the efficiency of management systems and the applicability of working practices to a modern prison system. We have arrived candidly at the view that some of those practices have hindered progress for a long time, so something has to be done about them.

That is why the fresh start proposals have been introduced. It was interesting that when we had a debate in the early hours of the morning at which, by happy chance, you were also present, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Hammersmith (Mr. Soley), speaking from the Labour Front Bench, said that there was a great deal that he welcomed in fresh start. I prefer his view of fresh start to that which has been fed to the hon. Gentleman by some of his contacts in the system.

What are we trying to do? I cannot go into it all in great detail, but there are three main strands to what we are about. The first is to reduce the demands on the prison system. The second is to increase and update its capacity to cope with those demands. The third is to make better use of the resources, of both staff and money, which are devoted to the service.

I refer first to reducing the prison population. Many people think that the prison problem could be dealt with exclusively by reducing the number of people held in prison, but that view is unrealistic. The prison system has to respond to the demands placed on it by the courts. The public expect to be protected from serious offenders and further expect that they will be properly punished. That is why Parliament has given the courts the sentencing powers that it has. However, we have to do all that we can to ensure that a custodial sentence is seen by the courts as a last resort. In England and Wales, we have a wide range of non-custodial disposals for offenders of all ages. It is worth pointing out that we have increased expenditure on the probation service by 38 per cent. in real terms over the past six years and strengthened the probation order and many of the other bedrock parts of the non-custodial sentence system to make them more attractive to the courts.

[Mr. David Mellor]

Secondly, the Government have embarked on the largest programme of prison building and refurbishment since the Victorian era. I said that there were 40 years in this century when not a single new prison was built. By contrast, three new establishments opened last year alone. Another five are currently being built and another 12 are at various stages of design or planning. Together, those new establishments, including the three already opened, will provide some additional 10,600 places by the mid-1990s. In addition, there is a programme of expansion at existing establishments to provide some 6,600 further new places, making 17,200 in all. A further vital element of the building programme is the modernisation and redevelopment of the existing estate.

For a Government so often unreasonably traduced for cutting budgets, major capital work is in progress or planned at about 100 establishments, including nearly all of the Victorian local prisons and Wormwood Scrubs, which the hon. Gentleman knows so well. Approval has been given to fund the first phase of redevelopment work scheduled to begin in April 1987 at a cost of £4·78 million. Planned expenditure on the building programme in total for 1986-87 is £53 million on new prisons and £65 million on building and repair work in existing prisons.

This work is being carried out to improve access to sanitation in the older cellular establishments, and that is a priority. Of course, progress depends on the provision of new places to ease overcrowding because, in order to make the improvements, existing accommodation has to be taken out of use. In the short term, the ameliorating efforts can add to the problems of the prison estate coping with the numbers arriving from the courts.

To give the House an idea of how we are trying to improve conditions, I can state that by the end of 1990 some 28,000 prison places will have access to sanitation. By the end of the century, under the plans, 37,800, or 70 per cent., of all certified places will have that access.

The hon. Gentleman spoke on behalf of prison officers and I make no criticism of him for that. I would like to tell him a little about the resources devoted to the prison service. Between 1978-79 and 1985-86 the number of prison officers has risen by nearly 18 per cent. while the average inmate population rose by about 12 per cent. There are more staff resources proportionately than when the Labour Government were in office. Over the same period, expenditure on the service rose by 36 per cent. in real terms. That compares with an increase of only 12 per cent. under the previous Administration. The Government's public expenditure White Paper last January showed our intention to continue to give prisons priority in relation to other Home Office spending.

The third element in these matters relates to improved efficiency. We have spent the money as a tangible expression of our support for the prison service. We have reversed the previous neglect of our penal system that was a crying shame to so many of our predecessors. However, the increased resources carry with them the responsibility to ensure that they are used in such a way as to secure the best value for money. Unless we do that, we will not be able to achieve the improvements that we all want. That is why the work that is being carried out in the service to improve management systems is an integral part of our programme for improving the prison service.

The prison service is well on the way to achieving better management accountability and clearer targets for each establishment under arrangements first introduced in 1984. These involve the drawing up of a contract between the region director and the governor setting performance standards and targets for improvement for each establishment. In that way, each governor must account for his establishment's performance. Similarly, recent developments in financial accountability are a vital element in making the best use of existing resources. From 1 April this year, the first stage of a new local budgeting scheme was introduced.

The most recent and perhaps the most significant development is the package of proposals to which the hon. Gentleman referred somewhat tendentiously, the proposal known as "A Fresh Start", which is now under discussion with the prison service trade unions and that is undoubtedly why the hon. Gentleman raised the matter.

It is one of the paradoxes of the service that, at the same time as the Government have invested the substantial additional resources to which I have referred, the quality of regimes in some establishments seems to have suffered. A large part of the explanation for this lies in the rigid systems of working and complementing that currently operate in establishments. I do not have time to go into all these proposals in detail today. I did so in the debate that we had in the early hours of the morning a few days ago. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will not mind if I refer him to what I said on that occasion.

The aim of the revised arrangements is to provide prison management with flexible systems to enable governors to make better use of the staff that they have and so to pursue improvements in regime standards for prisoners. The key feature of the system of management accountability that has been introduced is that governors are required to manage their resources so that prisoners are occupied as fully as possible throughout the week and spend the maximum time out of cell. I entirely agree with the points raised by the hon. Gentleman about the need for that. Of course, there are many constraints on achieving that objective but it rightly focuses the attention of all concerned on the quality of prison life.

We take regime developments seriously. The initiatives currently in hand include an exercise to pool ideas between regions on positive steps that might be taken to advance work in that area. The aim will be to reach agreement on a programme of action throughout the country. In addition, much valuable work is being carried out in establishments which involves inmates in one way or another in working positively for the community.

Time is running out. I end by saying once again that I am glad to have had this opportunity to set out the Government's policy in this important area.

Mr. Speaker: Before I adjourn the House, may I wish the Members and staff of the House a restful holiday and a very happy Christmas and a new year of good order.

The House now stands adjourned until Monday 12 January.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock, pursuant to the resolution of the House of 15 December.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 8 December 1986.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Administration of Justice Act 1985

Mr. Weetch asked the Attorney-General what is the current position with regard to the implementation of the provisions of part II of the Administration of Justice Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Section 12 of and schedule 13 to the Administraion of Justice Act 1985—establishment of the council and supplementary provisions—came into operation on 12 March 1986.

Sections 13—training rules—22—keeping of accounts and establishment of client accounts—23—interest on client's money—and 38—rules—came into operation on 1 October 1986. Education and training, accounts, deposit account and accountants' report rules made by the council under these powers were approved by the Lord Chancellor on 6 October 1986. The remaining provision of part II will be brought into effect before the first licences are issued, which is expected to be in April 1987.

Criminal Injury

Mr. Hume asked the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to reduce the cost of an appeal in cases of criminal injury to the county courts in Northern Ireland from its current level of £50 to bring it into proportion to the cost of other court fees.

The Attorney-General: After consultation with the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland and with the concurrence of the Treasury, the Lord Chancellor is responsible for determining the amount of fees payable in court proceedings in Northern Ireland. It is Government policy that fees levied in the civil courts shall cover the full cost of civil proceedings, less judicial costs. The current fee of £50 is calculated in accordance with this policy, and is comparable with other fees charged for the initiation of proceedings in the county court and the High Court.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether a law officer will prosecute Mr. Chapman Pincher, under section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1920, for inducing Mr. Peter Wright to break his duty of confidentiality on security matters to the Crown by being party to the offer of payments by Summerpage of moneys in respect of information to be included in his book, "Their Trade is Treachery".

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General what consideration he gave to prosecuting Mr. Chapman Pincher as an unauthorised receiver under the Official Secrets Act.

The Attorney-General: The matter is under consideration.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General why he did not seek an injunction to prevent the publication in the current year of the book "Double Agent" by John Moe a former MI5 employee.

The Attorney-General: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on a matter which is or may be at issue in the proceedings, concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he will establish an inquiry into which of the 198 persons whose names were deleted at official request from the book by Nigel West, "In Place of Trust", have given information of a confidential and classified nature to Mr. Nigel West.

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply. No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he will appeal to the Irish Supreme Court in the case of the judgment on the book, "One Girl's War", by Joan Miller.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 4 December at column 720.

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General if, further to his statement of 1 December, Official Report, column 620, he will identify those of his responsibilities in respect of which there is collective responsibility.

The Attorney-General: In criminal proceedings the Attorney-General acts wholly independently of the Government. In civil proceedings a distinction is to be drawn between proceedings in which the Attorney-General is involved in a representative capacity on behalf of the Government, and action undertaken by him on behalf of the general community to enfore the law as an end in itself. In the latter capacity the Attorney-General again acts, whether ex officio of ex relatione, wholly independently of the Government. In the former he is by definition representing it. In this representative capacity the Attorney-General will assert the public interest as perceived by the Government as a whole. It may be for other Ministers to assert the public interest in civil matters which may concern their own ministerial responsibilities—for example, when making a claim to public interest immunity from discovery of documents. Any advice sought from the Attorney-General, as the first Law Officer of the Crown, will of course be given impartially, and proceedings will be taken in his name only if he is satisfied as to the legal propriety of the action.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General why he failed to seek an injunction to prevent the transmission by Granada Television on 3 December of a "World in Action" programme which included material which was confidential to the security services; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on a matter which is or may be at issue in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether he will prosecute Granada Television under the Official Secrets Act 1911 for having transmitted a "World in Action" programme on 3 December which included material confidential to the security services.

The Attorney-General: No.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Dr. McDonald asked the Attorney-General if he will publish in the Official Report details of the current police investigations into the lending business undertaken through Johnson Matthey Bankers in the period before October 1984; and when these inquiries are likely to be completed.

The Attorney-General: No. It is not the practice to publish details of current police investigations lest their success be compromised. There is also a need to ensure that any criminal proceedings in being or in contemplation are not prejudiced by the disclosure of such information. Police investigations have already been completed in relation to a number of specific allegations of fraud made against creditors of Johnson Matthey Bank Ltd. relating to events prior to October 1984. Statements about these were issued by the Commissioner of Police for the City of London on 8 April and 29 July this year. For the most part, those allegations related to matters unconnected with the substantial losses sustained by JMB Ltd. A wide-ranging investigation into the circumstances of those losses is continuing and the police have the benefit of accounting assistance and advice from the fraud divisions of the Crown Prosecution Service and counsel. It is not possible to say when the investigation will be completed.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bangladesh (Bridge Projects)

Mr. John M. Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help the British High Commission in Dhaka has given in support of British consultants securing the phase II consultancy for the Jamuna bridge contract in Bangladesh, as well as other work deriving from the Bangladesh bridges phase II programme; and what steps the Overseas Development Administration's permanent delegation to the World Bank is taking to monitor the progress of these projects.

Mr. Chris Patten: The British High Commissioner in Bangladesh has offered his full support to the British consultants.

The United Kingdom delegation to the World Bank is in touch with bank staff about the award of the phase II contract, and will continue to monitor progress.

PRIME MINISTER

Poor People

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister what action she intends to take to seek to reduce the numbers of the poor in Britain.

The Prime Minister: The way to combat poverty is to develop a competitive and thriving economy, to reduce the burden of taxation on the low paid, and to target help on those in need.

Since 1979 the burden of taxation has been significantly reduced. Lower income tax has benefited the 18 million people on below average male earnings who pay 42 per cent. of the tax yield, and the 40 per cent. of pensioners who pay tax. Real take home pay for a family with two children on three-quarters of average earnings has in fact gone up by 16 per cent. since 1979.

We will also continue to build on our excellent record of protecting and improving the position of those most in need. Spending on social security has never been at a higher level, both in cash and real terms. It is currently running at some £44 billion a year—about one third of total Government expenditure—costing working families an average of £55 per week each. Since we came to office, supplementary benefits, benefits for long-term sick and disabled people, retirement pensions and prescribed levels of family income supplement had, at the date of the July uprating, increased ahead of inflation, and the uprating in April 1987 alone will cost an extra £700 million.

The Social Security Act 1986 will direct resources more effectively to those who need help most. Nearly twice as many low-income working families with children will get extra help under the new family credit scheme. The new income support scheme will direct specific help to groups such as disabled people, lone parents, families with children and pensioners.

Ultimately, however, adequate provision for the poor depends upon policies which protect the value of incomes through the control of inflation. This is what our policies have been designed to achieve and it will continue to be our objective.

Solicitor-General's Letter

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what evidence was sought or obtained by the Cabinet Secretary as to whether she had made any inquiries about who had leaked the Solicitor-General's letter to the then Secretary of State for Defence, prior to the inquiry being authorised.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at colums 49 to 50.

Weapons (EEC Directive)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the desirability of permitting the Commission to proceed with the drafting of a directive on the abolition of controls on weapons at internal Community frontiers; and if she will further seek agreement at the Council that any such proposal should be subject to unanimity despite the terms of the Single Act.

The Prime Minister: It is open to the Commission to make proposals on matters falling within the scope of the Community treaties. We are aware that the Commission is preparing a proposal for a directive covering the movement of firearms across internal Community frontiers. Any proposal which is put to the Council of Ministers will be examined very carefully but there is no question of our being prevented from carrying out the kind of checks which are needed to preserve our security and maintain law and order. The attitude taken by the United Kingdom will depend on the content of the proposal and our analysis of its implications.

Attorney-General (Public Interest)

Mr. John Morris asked the Prime Minister what are the current instructions to Departments as to the need to consult the Attorney-General when questions of public interest arise; and if there has been any change since the present Government took office.

The Prime Minister: Appropriate steps will continue to be taken to see that Departments are aware of the Attorney-General's responsibilities and functions.

Mr. John Morris asked the Prime Minister what is the practice of her Administration on the circumstances in which the Attorney-General's authority is not sought when Her Majesty's Government seek to prohibit the publication of a book where the public interest is involved.

The Prime Minister: I refer the right hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply given to him this afternoon by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Security Services (Members' Confidentiality)

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Prime Minister in what form the duty of life-long confidentiality imposed on serving and retired members of the security services is brought to their attention.

The Prime Minister: All members of the security service sign the Official Secrets Act and are made fully aware of their duty of confidentiality.

ENERGY

Electricity Supply

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 25 November, Official Report, column 154, he will name and describe reports he has received since 1984 on strategic planning development of the electricity supply system beyond the six-year horizon of the medium term development plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member's previous question, reported in column 154 of the Official Report for 25 November.

Radioactivity (Incidents)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incidents at Windscale between October 1979 and January 1980 of increased radioactivity in ground water, the incidents on the week of 24 to 30 August 1980 involving a worker receiving radiation in doses exceeding permissible levels, the incident on 16 April 1981 involving a health physics monitor and the incident involving the radioactive contamination of two process workers and a fitter towards the end of December 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(2) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incidents at Sellafield on 2 September 1981 involving plutonium contamination on 18 June 1981 involving radioactive contamination, on 13 November 1984 of reported information of the incident of radioactive contamination reported to the nuclear installations inspectorate, and during the month of July 1981 at the Magnox fuel decanning plant at Sellafield involving a radiation monitoring film and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(3) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incidents involving radioactive or plutonium contamination of workers at Windscale on 8 February 1980, on 6 May 1980, between 6 and 12 January 1980, on 30 January 1980, 14 February 1980, 8 February 1980, on 23 February 1980, 15 February 1980, on 29 April 1980, 16 September 1980, 18 July 1980, 19 August 1980, 15 December 1980, 4 November 1980, 27 March 1981, 26 March 1981 and 10 July 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Goodlad: These incidents were independently assessed at the time by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive. Descriptions of the incidents and the results of investigations which were carried out are given in the HSE's quarterly statements of nuclear incidents for the first, second, third and fourth quarters of 1980, the first, second, third and fourth quarters of 1981, and fourth quarter of 1984, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Sites

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the latest detailed six-year forecast of capital requirements supplied to his Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board in respect of developments of nuclear sites contains any identified provision for payments of compensation or for the purchase of residential property beyond that required for operational purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Estimates of the costs of developing nuclear sites and other major developments submitted to my Department by the CEGB are expected to include all relevant costs associated with such developments.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if investment approval has been given by his Department in respect of any programme of purchasing residential property in the vicinity of sites under consideration for radioactive waste disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: UK NIREX Ltd. was established under the Companies Acts and there is no requirement for its investment proposals to be approved by my right hon. Friend.

The company has, however, advised my right hon. Friend of the costs likely to be associated with various schemes for property purchase which it is considering.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what reports or forecasts have been received by his Department on the estimated total cost of payments of compensation and purchases of property in the vicinity of actual and proposed nuclear sites over the next 10 years; if the cost of such payments and purchases has been taken into account in cost calculations submitted to his Department by nuclear operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I would expect nuclear operators to make provision for such costs in any forecasts they make. No such reports or forecasts have been received in my Department except from UK NIREX Ltd.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the purchase of residential property in the vicinity of sites under construction for radioactive waste disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a commercial matter for UK NIREX Ltd. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

UK NIREX Ltd.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive the first accounts of UK NIREX Ltd.

Mr. Goodlad: In January.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information his Department receives in respect of the operations of NIREX and its successor body, UK NIREX Ltd.; if his Department has received detailed financial accounts and forecasts in respect of the operations of these organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodland: UK NIREX Ltd. provides the Department of Energy with information covering the range of the company's activities, including financial matters.

British Gas

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a further statement about the privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c 352]: I am delighted that more than 5 million people have applied to become shareholders in British Gas plc. More than 4½ million applications have been received, and more than half a million of these were in joint names. British Gas will have the largest number of shareholders of any company in the world.

The United Kingdom public offer was four times subscribed, with applications for 6·6 billion shares being received. Because of this heavy demand, allocations to financial institutions and overseas have been scaled down so that 64 per cent. of the shares could be made available to the British public. Offerings of British Gas shares in the United States, Europe, Japan and Canada are now taking place.

Everyone who submitted a valid application will receive an allocation of shares. All those who made valid applications for 400 shares or less will receive all the shares they applied for. Details of the scaling down of higher levels of applications are shown in the table.

There has been a particularly heavy demand for shares from employees and pensioners of British Gas: 85,000 employees, some 99 per cent. of those eligible, are now shareholders in the company. Customers of British Gas have been given preference in the allocation of shares.

Number of shares applied for	Number of shares allocated
	General public application	Customer share scheme application (green form)
100	100	100
200	200	200
300	300	300
400	400	400
500-700	400	500
800-1,000	500	600
1,500	600	800
2,000	800	1,000
2,500	1,000	1,200
3,000-5,000	1,200	1,400
6,000-10,000	1,400	1,600
15,000-100,000	10 per cent.	10 per cent. plus 300
150,000 or over	7 per cent.	7 per cent. plus 300

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran—Iraq War

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government within the Council of Ministers and the United Nations to review the supply and sale of weapons for use in the Iran-Iraq war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Our own firm policy remains as set out in the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 29 October 1985 at column 454. While we would like all countries in the European Community and outside to adopt a policy as strict as ours, the supply and sale of defence equipment is a matter for national Governments, and it is not covered by the treaty of Rome. We do not believe it would be constructive to raise the matter in the Council of Ministers within European political co-operation, or at the United Nations while no prospect for a general agreement exists.

Arms Sales

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to discontinue the sale of all equipment to repressive regimes which may be used in the violation of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Careful control is exercised over our export of defence equipment. Arms sales to any country require an export licence under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985. We take account of all the relevant security, political and economic factors, paying particular attention to proposals to sell items to countries with a poor human rights record. A licence would not be granted if it was thought that the equipment would be used for aggression, for internal repression or to violate human rights.

Arturo Cruz (Visit)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any Minister or official of his Department, or any other Government Department, will be meeting Contra leader Arturo Cruz during his visit to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We know of no plans for any such meeting.

BBC External Services

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will use his good offices to facilitate examination by the National Audit Office of the finances of the external services of the BBC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In our view, it is right that the National Audit Office should have access to the accounts of the BBC external services, in order to carry out economy, efficiency and effectiveness examinations. We have used our best endeavours to persuade the external services to allow the National Audit Office such access. This would in no way diminish the independent responsibility which the BBC external services rightly exercise over their editorial policy.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Healthy Foodstuffs

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek powers to ensure that the price of healthy foodstuffs is increasingly attractive compared to that of less healthy foodstuffs; and if he will promote such policies in discussions with other European Community member states.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The choice of food and the selection of a balanced diet is entirely a matter for the individual. I believe that this Government's policy of continued free and fair competition in the high street is the best way of matching food prices to demand and so providing the consumer with the widest opportunity of a healthy and balanced diet at a reasonable cost.

Our record in more than halving the average annual rate of food price increase since 1979 compared with that prevailing over the previous five years under Labour is the measure of the success of our policies for all, including the rest of the Community, to see.

North Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the areas around the coast of the United Kingdom bordering the North sea which have been identified by his Department as being environmentally impaired by man-made causes.

Mr. Gummer: Human activities give rise to an environmental impact wherever they occur. With that in mind, and in accordance with its responsibilities under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, my Ministry undertakes a programme of surveillance and research in United Kingdom coastal waters to monitor the impact of sea dumping in order to ensure that it does not cause unacceptable damage to the marine environment.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Batiste asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants employed by his Department and engaged primarily on regional matters are based in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the north-east and (c) the north-west.

Mr. Jopling: Staff employed in the Ministry's regional organisation are engaged on duties which are primarily concerned with implementing its responsibilities within the area in which they are located. Staff in the Ministry's divisional office areas which approximate to the regions given in the question are as follows:

Divisional office area	Number of Staff
(a) Beverley and Northallerton	323
(b) Newcastle	222
(c) Carlisle and Preston	349

In addition, all 242 staff employed at the northern regional office at Leeds are concerned with the regions quoted, as are a proportion of the 310½ staff at the midlands and western regional office in Wolverhampton which is responsible for four divisional offices, one of which, Preston, is in the north west. A further 92 staff are employed in three experimental husbandry farms.

Milk

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision is made in the emergency regulations proposed for the milk sector for providing compensation for milk quota reductions, and for providing alternative markets for milk powder which would otherwise go to intervention, respectively; what provision has been made for additional expenditure; and whether the funds in question will be provided from European Economic Community or national funds.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission's proposals for the milk sector contain no specific provision for either compensation for milk quota reductions or providing alternative markets for skimmed milk powder. Consequently no provision has been made for expenditure on such measures from Community or national funds.

Horses

Mr. Freud asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations he has received in respect of the Medicines (Hormone Growth Promoters) (Prohibition of Use) Regulations 1986 (S.I., No. 1876, 1986); whether he proposes to introduce legislation reflecting the status of British horses as distinct from that accorded by the United Kingdom European partners who eat them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Some 70 organisations have been formally consulted of whom 24 made representations. In addition, further consultations have been held with four organisations most closely concerned, the National Farmers Union, the Meat and Livestock Commission, the British Veterinary Association and the National Office of Animal Health. A number of companies and individuals have made representations either through hon. Members or directly.

There is no intention to introduce legislation on the lines suggested by the hon. Member.

Thames (Pollution)

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what report he has received from the Thames water authority about the pollution of the Thames tideway on 5 July by the discharge of a large volume of sewage from Thames water authority stormwater outfalls.

which caused the deoxygenation of the river over several miles and the elimination of the fish population between Putney and Limehouse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that an unusual set of circumstances arose on 5 July, following an exceptionally heavy rainstorm, which led to an overflow of sewage into the upper tidal Thames. Many fish died as a result, but remedial measures were quickly applied by the Thames water authority. Arrangements are also in hand for the introduction of fresh stocks of fish. According to the authority, full recovery of oxygen levels took 2 to 3 weeks and no long-term effect on fish stocks is expected. Responsibility for the regulations of sewage discharges is, of course, a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Alternative Crops

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to encourage farmers to use alternative crops for land to cereals currently in over supply within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986; c. 665]: As an element in the package of measures needed to improve the balance between supply and demand for cereals, I am pressing for the Community to develop a scheme of voluntary land diversion, whereby incentives would be paid to those who choose an alternative use for land currently used to grow cereals. My Department has financed studies into alternative land uses and is pursuing research in those areas identified as providing good opportunities.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) what is the current level of unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest date; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list the level of unemployment in the Liverpool constituencies at the latest date.

(3) if he will list the level of unemployment on Merseyside on a constituency basis.

Mr. John Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituencies of the Merseyside area at 9 October 1986.

Constituency	Number of unemployed claimants
Birkenhead	9,614
Bootle	10,675
Crosby	5,562
Knowsley North	9,527
Knowsley South	9,593
Liverpool Broadgreen	8,587
Liverpool Garston	7,838
Liverpool Mossley Hill	7,586
Liverpool Riverside	11,404
Liverpool Walton	10,791
Liverpool West Derby	9,380
Southport	4,908
St. Helens North	6,904
St. Helens South	7,775
Wallasey	7,367
Wirral South	4,038
Wirral West	4,469

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what are the figures of youth unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest available date.

Mr. John Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 9 October 1986, the number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 in the Liverpool Riverside constituency was 4,199.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what is the level of long-term unemployment in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest available date.

Mr. John Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 9 October 1986 the number of claimants who had been unemployed for over one year in the Liverpool, Riverside parliamentary constituency was 6,893.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will give a breakdown of unemployment on a ward basis in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency at the latest available date on a percentage basis.

Mr. John Lee: The information requested is not available. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. The numbers of unemployed claimants in the electoral wards of the Liverpool, Riverside constituency are available in the Library, and are also given in a separate reply to the hon. Member.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) what was the level of unemployment in the Liverpool travel-to-work area at the lastest available date; and what were the figures for June 1979;

(2) what was the level of unemployment on Merseyside at the latest available date; and what were the figures for June 1979.

Mr. John Lee: The following information is in the Library. On 9 October 1986 the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Liverpool travel-to-work areas and the Merseyside Metropolitan areas were 102,951 and 136,018 respectively. Comparisons with June 1979 are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data. However, in June 1979 the numbers of unemployed registrants in jobcentre areas closely corresponding to the Liverpool travel-to-work area, as defined in 1978, and the Merseyside Metropolitan area were 59,399 and 82,729 respectively.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to reduce long-term youth unemployment in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Lee: Our economic policies are designed to provide the conditions in which industry and commerce can create new jobs for long-term unemployed young people and others.

Two year YTS training means that no school leaver under 18 need be unemployed and job prospects for those completing training are further enhanced by the New Workers Scheme.

Our Action for Jobs campaign is ensuring that unemployed people are aware of the full range of help available.

Special help for the long-term unemployed is provided by the restart programme and by the community programme.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the measures to reduce long-term unemployment on Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what steps are being taken to reduce long-term unemployment in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department and the Manpower Services Commission operate a wide range of employment, training and enterprise measures nationally. The effectiveness of each of these measures is regularly reviewed. The full range is described in the "Action for Jobs" booklet. By March 1987 every long-term unemployed person in Merseyside will have been invited for an interview under the restart programme and offered one of a number of positive opportunities to help them back towards employment. This may include, for example, the community programme, a jobclub or a restart course.

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will give a breakdown of unemployment in Liverpool on a ward basis at the latest date.

Mr. John Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants on 9 October 1986 for each of the electoral wards in the Liverpool local authority district.

Electoral Ward	Number of Unemployed Claimants
Abercromby	1,923
Aigburth	1,525
Allerton	939
Anfield	1,764
Arundel	2,088
Breckfield	2,150
Broadgreen	1,458
Childwall	1,072
Church	1,228
Clubmoor	2,008
County	1,681
Croxteth	1,239
Dingle	1,667
Dovecot	2,217
Everton	1,538
Fazakerley	1,365
Gillmoss	2,011
Granby	2,858
Grassendale	828
Kensington	2,380
Melrose	1,921
Netherley	1,360
Old Swan	1,549
Picton	1,876
Pirrie	1,905
St. Mary's	1,612
Smithdown	2,129
Speke	1,731
Tuebrook	2,128
Valley	1,367
Vauxhall	1,330
Warbreck	1,910
Woolton	829

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if Her Majesty's Government intend to introduce future measures to reduce youth unemployment in Liverpool.

Mr. John Lee: Our present programme of measures to improve the employment prospects of young people is kept under constant review. We have no present plans to introduce new measures.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will list the numbers of unemployed for each postal code area in the Dunfermline, East constituency for November 1986, November 1983 and November 1985, respectively.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: The information requested is not available. Postal code areas cannot readily be linked to constituencies which are defined in terms of wards. However, figures for local authority wards from June 1983 are available in the Library.

Departmental Offices, Hornchurch

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General (1) if he is satisfied with the conditions of work for his Department staff in the two buildings in North street, Hornchurch;

(2) when he expects that the building currently shared between his Department and the Department of Health and Social Security in North street, Hornchurch, will be made available for the exclusive use of his Department;

(3) how many of his Department's offices require staff or files to cross a main road in order to deal with their clients.

Mr. John Lee: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Job Training Programme

Mr. McCrindle asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on progress in the nationwide implementation of the job training programme.

Mr. John Lee: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment announced, on 9 October, a new pilot job training scheme to be tested in nine areas around the country. Pilot programmes are now in operation in all of the nine areas. There has been an enthusiastic response from training providers, and unemployed people are beginning to come forward in significant numbers.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General whether those enrolling on the job training scheme will be regarded as unemployed for the purposes of the unemployment count.

Mr. John Lee: No. Like other trainees on Government sponsored schemes who are not entitled to benefits as an unemployed person, they will be excluded from the claimant count.

Restart Programme

Mr. McCrindle asked the Paymaster General how many long-term unemployed people have been (a) invited to interviews and (b) attended interviews as part of the Government's restart programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Lee: The latest figures available are that by 13 November 1986, 729,635 long-term unemployed people had been invited to a counselling interview as part of the restart programme. 582,386 have so far been counselled as some of the invitations relate to interviews due to take place after 13 November 1986. Of those who attended, 90 per cent. were offered the chance to apply for a job, training or other suitable opportunity.

Sex Discrimination Act (Prosecutions)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Paymaster General how many prosecutions there have been of employers under the Sex Discrimination Act for having asked women seeking employment about their intentions on starting a family.

Mr. John Lee: The Sex Discrimination Act 1975 makes it generally unlawful as a matter of civil law for an employer to discriminate on the grounds of sex when recruiting employees. Discrimination in recruitment is not a criminal offence, and prosecutions cannot be brought in this respect under the Act. Rather, it is open to individuals who believe they have been discriminated against in recruitment for jobs to seek redress by making a complaint to an industrial tribunal.

Whether or not the asking of certain questions constitutes evidence of sex discrimination would be a matter for an industrial tribunal to decide, on the merits of the particular case. I regret that tribunal case statistics are not recorded at a sufficient level of detail to identify specific grounds of complaint.

Speech Therapists (Pay)

Mr. Rowe asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the implications for Government policy on equal pay of the recent finding of an industrial tribunal in a case brought by three speech therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Lee: I assume that the cases referred to are Mrs. E. Clark v. Bexley Health Authority (6768/86), Dr. P. Enderby v. Frenchay Health Authority (8677/86) and Miss L. Kelly-Atherton v. South Glamorgan Health Authority (5353/86).

These cases were heard together from 17-21 November; the tribunal announced on 21 November that it was dismissing them. Since the written reasons for the tribunal's decision are not yet available, I do not feel it would be appropriate for me to comment.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will make a statement regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(2) if he will make a statement about representations made to him from community leaders regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(3) if he will make a statement about representations made by local community relations councils regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(4) if he will make a statement about representations made to him by local black and Asian representatives regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(5) whether the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed will be entirely voluntary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Inner City Initiatives

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to pilot any specific inner city employment initiatives directed at disadvantaged residents and their communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General how many workers were employed in the tobacco industry at the latest date; and what was the figure in June 1979.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: In September 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 16,500 employees in employment in the tobacco industry in Great Britain. In June 1979 the figure was 31,400.

SCOTLAND

Dunblane Bypass

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is in a postion to announce an amendment to the line of route of the Dunblane bypass.

Mr. Michael Ancram: While my right hon. and learned Friend has no proposals to change the line of the bypass, he has decided to publish amended proposals for the junction arrangements. These will provide for a grade-separated layout at the Doune Road junction, and will no longer incorporate a junction at Old Doune Road.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing each of the readings of radioactive caesium found in sheep and lambs in Scotland since 1 May which were in excess of 3,000 bequerels per kilogram, indicating the precise figure in each case, the date of the reading, and the approximate location.

Mr. John MacKay: The following is the information:

District	Date sample taken	Cs. 134 + Cs. 137 (Becquerels per kilogram)
Stewartry	7 July 1986	4,120
Stewartry	7 July 1986	3,068
Stewartry	8 July 1986	3,330
Stewartry	8 July 1986	3,365
Stewartry	9 July 1986	4,218
Stewartry	2 September 1986	3,370
Stewartry	8 October 1986	3,560
Cunninghame (Arran)	10 July 1986	3,203
Cunninghame (Arran)	1 August 1986	3,030
Nithsdale	9 July 1986	3,354
Nithsdale	17 September 1986	3,950
Nithsdale	17 September 1986	3,690
Kyle and Carrick	28 July 1986	3,230

Forth Road Bridge

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his timetable for responding to the engineers' report alleging danger in certain traffic conditions on the Forth Road Bridge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Ancram: The Forth Road Bridge Joint Board has full statutory responsibility for the operation of the Bridge. It is the Board's responsibility to secure its own professional advice on the integrity of the structure and to determine the action to be taken in the light of that advice.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average cost separately for acute, chronic and geriatric beds in each of the regional health authorities in Scotland; if he will give the highest and lowest cost in each category of bed in each of the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in precisely the form requested but for each of the Scottish Health Board areas the average, highest and lowest cost per in-patient week for acute, mental illness and mental handicap, and geriatric hospitals is set out in the table below.

Comparison with figures for health authorities elsewhere in the United Kingdom should be approached with caution in view of the differences in health service structure, information systems, definitions and hospital classifications between countries.

1985/86

	Cost per in-patient week (£)
	Average	Maximum	Minimum
Argyll and Clyde
Acute Hospitals	481	1,071	229
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	260	319	234
Geriatric Hospitals	255	305	186
Ayrshire and Arran
Acute Hospitals	482	710	292
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	197	205	189
Geriatric Hospitals	239	287	199
Borders
Acute Hospitals	441	600	304
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	242	242	242
Geriatric Hospitals	238	292	203
Dumfries and Galloway
Acute Hospitals	479	641	379
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	295	295	295
Geriatric Hospitals	268	277	260
Fife
Acute Hospitals	478	658	271
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	232	236	230
Geriatric Hospitals	370	420	304
Forth Valley
Acute Hospitals	567	645	501
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	190	191	190
Geriatric Hospitals	270	430	236
Grampian
Acute Hospitals	413	800	227
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	244	345	170
Geriatric Hospitals	237	293	192
Greater Glasgow
Acute Hospitals	646	931	304
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	206	241	167
Geriatric Hospitals	293	381	208
Highland
Acute Hospitals	565	906	334
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	220	227	213
Geriatric Hospitals	232	243	227
Lanarkshire
Acute Hospitals	708	1,434	342

	Cost per in-patient week (£)
	Average	Maximum	Minimum
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	239	354	169
Geriatric Hospitals	263	401	206
Lothian
Acute Hospitals	579	805	398
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	233	264	199
Geriatric Hospitals	261	361	213
Orkney
Acute Hospitals	529	529	529
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	No hospitals in this grouping
Geriatric Hospitals	No hospitals in this grouping
Shetland
Acute Hospitals	533	533	533
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	No hospitals in this grouping
Geriatric Hospitals	No hospitals in this grouping
Tayside
Acute Hospitals	486	796	279
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	251	287	226
Geriatric Hospitals	295	319	271
Western Isles
Acute Hospitals	765	804	727
Mental Illness and Mental Handicap Hospitals	No hospitals in this grouping
Geriatric Hospitals	220	220	220

British Nuclear Fuels plc (Handbook)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the approximate date on which he expects British Nuclear Fuels plc to make available to the public copies of the emergency handbook for the Chapelcross site; and if he will comment on the reasons why this action is not practicable sooner.

Mr. Ian Lang: I am advised that the company intends to make copies of the emergency plans for the Chapelcross site available to the public. Publication is expected within two weeks.

Householders

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the number and percentage of households in Scotland inhabited by single adults, (b) the number and percentage of these single adults currently receiving housing benefit and (c) the number and percentage currently paying rates from earned income.

Mr. Ancram: According to the 1981 Census of Population, on 5 April 1981 there were 433,228 households in Scotland containing one person over 16 years of age, with or without others under 16. These represented 24·3 per cent. of all Scottish households. The remainder of the information requested is not available centrally.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Switchgear Industry

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the state of the high voltage switchgear industry.

Mr. Butcher: The high voltage switchgear industry is one which suffers from worldwide excess capacity. There are two United Kingdom manufacturers of switchgear of transmission voltages. In the absence of sufficient export orders an adequate home demand is necessary.

The home ordering programme is a matter for the electricity boards, but I understand that as a result of recent discussions the CEGB's future ordering intentions have been clarified and it is for the industry to plan ahead in the light of these.

We shall of course continue to give them full diplomatic and commercial support in their export efforts.

Technology 87

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on his support for the exhibition Technology 87, to be held in Tel Aviv, Israel, from 6 to 13 May 1987; and what information and guidance he is giving to British firms to encourage them to exhibit there.

Mr. Alan Clark: In October the British Overseas Trade Board offered assistance for Technology '87 under the joint venture scheme to its Area Advisory Group, British Overseas Trade Group for Israel, the sponsoring organisation. Confirmation of this offer is dependent upon the firm commitment of a minimum group of 10 companies by the end of December. As with all JVs, it is the sponsoring organisation's task to recruit and organise the British presence. Publicity for the JV has been given in "British Business."

Economic Performance (North-West)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of which factors have determined the performance of the economy in the north-west since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Like other regions, the north-west suffered the effects of the global recession in manufacturing and consequent industrial restructuring. But it has benefited from falling inflation, lower tax rates, removal of unnecessary restrictions on business and improved incentives. These have been and remain essential features of our policy for industrial revival in the regions.

Ceramic Tiles

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which countries are the major exporters of tiles to the United Kingdom; and if he has any evidence to suggest dumping.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The major tile exporters to the United Kingdom are in the European Community, in paticular Italy and Spain. No evidence which is sufficient to warrant a complaint being submitted to the European Commission under the anti-dumping or competition rules has not yet been provided.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give figures for each of the last five years for (a) sales of tiles in the United Kingdom, (b) production of British tiles and (c) imports of tiles.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the right hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Association of British Chambers of Commerce

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the officers of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend will be meeting members of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce's economic and industrial committee this evening.

Nominee Accounts

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the use of nominee accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Insider Dealing

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those banks currently involved in investigations by his Department into insider dealing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am not prepared to comment on the conduct of particular investigations by inspectors whilst they are under way. I would, however, point out to the hon. Lady that all that is necessarily implied by "involvement" in an investigation under section 177 of the Financial Services Act is probable ability to give information about a contravention.

Cement

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has regarding the current levels of surplus cement and cement products in the European Community; what representations he has received concerning possible unfair trading practices by companies of other member states involved in cement production; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information has been provided by Cembureau, the European Trade Association for the cement industry.

(1,000 tonnes)

	1985
EEC production	152,507
EEC consumption	134,259
EEC surplus	18,248

No representations have been received about unfair trading practices by companies of other member states. Representations have been received concerning subsidised imports of cement from Greece. These are being followed up vigorously in Brussels and Athens.

Copyright

Mr. Guy Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he intends to bring forward legislation to cover the law of copyright, as it affects educational material, in the current session.

Mr. Pattie: The Government intend to reform the law of copyright on the basis of the proposals in the White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation"—Cmnd. 9712—including those proposals affecting educational material. A Bill will be introduced when the parliamentary timetable permits.

NEDC (Research and Development)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the National Economic Development Council to discuss research and development funding.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to the reply, 1 December 1986; c. 434]: I attended a meeting of the National Economic Development Council on Wednesday 3 December, although R & D was not discussed on this occasion.

The council has from time to time discussed research and development funding and my right hon. Friend and I anticipate that it will be covered in future meetings since R & D is an issue which is of great importance in improving United Kingdom industrial performance.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986; c. 634-35]: Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the administration systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data. When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publication.

During the period in question the most major and widespread change to statistical series has been the change from the 1968 to the 1980 standard industrial classification and the rebasing of index numbers on to 1980 = 100. In addition, the more significant changes to this Department's statistical series are listed in table 1. Tables 2 and 3 show statistical inquiries which have been discontinued or introduced since 1979.

TABLE 1

Regular statistical series with significant changes since 1979

Series	Nature of changes	References
Quarterly sales by Manufacturers	1981 — major restructuring to exclude small firms from the Quarterly Sales Inquiry	Individual Business Monitors
	1986—minor restructuring. Changes to inquiry cut-offs. Two industries discontinued and five quarterly inquiries made annual	British Business 16 August 1986
	1986 — introduction of periodic topping-up inquiry to improve the estimates of quarterly sales	British Business 16 August 1986
Quarterly Stocks	1986—coverage of results expanded to encompass all industries	Prime Minister's Review Report[1], Press Notices, and British Business 26 September 1986
Quarterly Capital Expenditure	1986—coverage of results expanded to encompass all industries	Prime Minister's Review Report[1], Press Notices, and British Business September 1986
Biennial Investment Intentions	1982—frequency reduced from triennial	Rayner Report on DTI Statistical Services[2]
Annual Census of Production (Manufacturing)	Fewer forms in most years due to intensified sampling	Prime Minister's Review Report[1], Business Monitors (PA series)
Annual Census of Production (Construction)	Fewer questions in most years. Fewer forms in most years due to intensified sampling	Prime Minister's Review Report[1], Business Monitors (PA series)
Miscellaneous Monthly Inquiries	1981—reduction in number of monthly forms despatched
Monthly Inquiry into Iron Castings	1983 — converted from monthly to quarterly basis	British Business 19 July 1985
Retailing Inquiry	1981—the pattern was switched from a regular annual "full" inquiry to an alternating pattern of "full" and "slim-line" inquiries	British Business 27 February 1981
	1982 — revised grossing methodology introduced	Business Monitors SDQ25, 1982
Service Trades Inquiry	1981—frequency reduced from annual to biennial	British Business 27 February 1981
	1986—inquiry extended and strengthened	Statistical News, February 1986
Property Inquiry	1981—frequency changed from annual to biennial	British Business 27 February 1981
Quarterly Inquiry into Steel Stocks and Consumption	1984 — reduced coverage to eliminate very small contributors. Number of questions reduced	Prime Minister's Review Report[1]
Monthly carpet Production	1982—change of data source
	1983 — replacement of actual sales figures by an index
Monthly Footwear Inquiry	1981 — introduction of monthly information on orders
Engineering Sales and Orders	1983 — detailed quarterly publication suspended
	1984 — detailed monthly publication suspended
Overseas Trade Analysed in Terms of Industries	1983 — change from 1968 to 1980 Standard Industrial Classification	British Business 7 October 1983
Monthly Credit Business	1986 — inclusion of running account agreements and credit advanced on bank credit cards to improve coverage of credit statistics	Business Monitor SDM6, January to March 1986
Quarterly Assets and Liabilities of Credit Grantors	1983 — coverage reduced to exclude companies which became part of the monetary sector at the end of 1982	Business Monitor SDQ7 for third quarter 1983
Annual Balance Sheet for Insurance Companies	1984 — full balance sheet introduced replacing assets only to fill gaps in national and balance of payments accounts	British Business 6 June 1986
Annual Overseas Direct Investment and Earnings	1984 — inclusion of oil and insurance companies to improve coverage of direct investment in the balance of payments	British Business 6 June 1986
Triennial Benchmark Inquiry into Expenditure and Employment in Industrial Research and Development	1986 — frequency reduced to quadrennial with annual sample surveys to provide more up-to-date information on R and D.
Company Accounts Analysis	1982 — expanded to cover small and unlisted companies	Business Monitor MA3, twelfth issue February 1982

Series	Nature of changes	References
Company Liquidity Survey	1985 — results grossed up to provide estimates covering all large industrial and commercial companies	British Business 31 May 1985
Insolvency Statistics	1980—Monthly estimates introduced	British Business 22 August 1980
United Kingdom Visible Trade	1983—rebasing onto 1980	British Business 23 September 1983
	1981 — revised seasonal adjustment procedures	Economic Trends February 1981

Notes:

[1] All regular surveys to businesses are reviewed once every five years under an instruction from the Prime Minister in 1981. The review reports are published.

[2] An article in British Business (27 February 1981) described in general terms the effects on DTI statistics of implementing the Rayner Review.

Table 2

Regular statistical series discontinued since 1979

Quarterly survey of UK company sources and uses of funds	(1980)
Monthly inquiry into export prices	(1980)
Monthly rubber stocks and consumption	(1980)
Quarterly inquiry into catering turnover	(1980)
Quarterly inquiry into motor traders' turnover	(1980)
Annual and quarterly series on international trade and credit extended and received and direct exports	(1982)
Monthly inquiry into made-up clothing	(1985)
Monthly admissions and takings for cinemas	(1985)
Quarterly inquiry into oils and fats in soapmaking	(1985)
Quarterly inquiry into raw jute	(1985)
Monthly inquiry into paper and board	(1985)
Monthly inquiry into waste paper	(1985)
Quarterly inquiry into pulp	(1985)
Quarterly inquiry into exports of books and periodicals	(1985)
Annual inquiry into the film exhibition industry	(1985)

Table 3

Regular statistical series introduced since 1979

Quarterly inquiry into engineering sales and orders	(1981)
All stocks price index	(1981)
Annual income and expenditure of pension funds	(1982)
Quinquennial inquiry into private generation of electricity	(1983)
Aerospace and electronics cost indices, simplified version	(1983)
Annual income and expenditure of insurance companies	(1984)

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his budgeted figure for payments in (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance; and what is his best estimate of the amounts due.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: Taken together, my Department's Supply Estimate and Winter Supplementary Estimate provisions for payments of regional development grant and regional selective assistance in 1986-87 are £243·8 million and £93·4 million respectively. I am not yet able to give a clear estimate of the amounts due.

Rural Investment and Employment

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the encouragement of investment in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

I am not aware of any recent representations of this nature.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy in relation to increasing (a) investment and (b) employment in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's general strategy is designed to provide economic conditions conductive to investment and employment opportunities in both urban and rural areas. In relation to rural areas in England, the Secretary of State is advised and assisted by the Development Commission and their agency, the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas. The Government have raised the Development Commission's grant-in-aid by about a fifth in real terms since 1983 in recognition of the part the commission plays in stimulating investment and providing jobs through, for example, financing the provision of small factory units in keeping with the character of rural areas. The commission seeks increasingly to involve and encourage the private sector through support for local enterprise agencies, close co-operation with financial institutions and pump-priming investment.

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund Support

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under what circumstances shipbuilding intervention fund support is now available to private sector yards; and what are his proposals for the future.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: Under the fifth directive, shipbuilding intervention fund support for merchant shipbuilders could be given only in return for restructuring of the industry, which faced considerable excess capacity. Therefore, the yards that were privatised or are now being returned to the private sector by British Shipbuilders are regarded as being taken out of the sector eligible for intervention fund support. The only circumstances in which the Commission agreed that it would consider cases for intervention fund support for the privatised yards was for reasons related to the maintenance of defence capacity. Other private sector yards are eligible. We expect the position on eligibility to continue under the sixth directive.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans for any further moratorium on the payment of regional development grant; and if he will give details of any such plans.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: The Government's projections for expenditure on regional development grants will be dealt with in the public expenditure White Paper to be published in January.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Research Assistants

27. Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received regarding the number of Members' research assistants currently holding House of Commons passes.

Mr. Biffen: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Thompson) on 19 November 1986 which indicated that 523 research assistants held temporary and full Palace of Westminster photo-identity passes, and broke these down by nationality. I have had no other representations recently.

ENVIRONMENT

Flues

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to amend the building regulations to make it mandatory that a class 1 flue be provided in all new houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Building regulations are made for the purposes of health, safety, conservation of fuel and power and the provision of access for disabled people. I do not consider that there is sufficient justification for these purposes to require in the regulations provision of a class 1 flue in all new homes.

Urban Programme Projects

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the criteria laid down under the urban programme concerning projects sponsored by religious and cultural groups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: All urban programme projects should adhere to ministerial guidelines for the UP as a whole, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Support through the UP is not normally given to projects which serve an exclusively religious or cultural purpose.

Travellers (Greater London)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department is considering for the provision of family-sized caravan sites for travellers in the Greater London area; and what locations are under consideration.

Mr. Tracey: In Greater London, responsibility for the provision and operation of travellers' sites rests with borough councils. My right hon. Friend has powers to make grants towards the capital costs of providing sites. Applications currently under consideration are: LB Bromley — Star Lane, St. Paul's Cray; LB Croydon — Beddington Farm; LB Ealing — Bashley Road; LB Hackney — Gransden Avenue/London Lane; LB Haringey — Wood Green Common; LB Newham — Clays Lane; LB Richmond — Bishops Grove, Hampton; LB Sutton — Carshalton Road; LB Southwark — Ilderton Lane; LB Waltham Forest — Folly Lane; LB Wandsworth — Trewint Street.

In addition, my right hon. Friend has before him two planning applications by the London borough of Brent for sites at the Brook centre and Vale Farm.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people are currently on local authority housing waiting lists (a) in each of the London boroughs and (b) in each of the parliamentary constituencies in the London borough of Southwark.

Mr. Tracey: I will answer this question shortly.

Radioactive Waste Disposal

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports or forecasts have been received by his Department on the estimated total cost of payments of compensation and purchases of property in the vicinity of sites under consideration for radioactive waste disposal; if the cost of such payments and purchases has been taken into account in examining the best practicable environmental options for disposal of such waste; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Apart from the compensation scheme it has already announced in the areas affected by their current site investigations, I understand that UK NIREX Ltd. is considering the possibility of further measures. Although provisional estimates of the costs of possible measures have been shown to my Department, NIREX has not yet made any firm estimate of the total costs of compensation and house purchase. No account was taken of compensation measures in the study of best practicable environmental options, where the costing figures are in any case under review.

Peak park Planning Board

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people have been appointed by Derbyshire county council to serve on the Peak Park planning board; and how many of them live in the board's area.

Mr. Waldegrave: Eight members of the Peak Park joint planning board are appointed by Derbyshire county council. One of these lives within the national park.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been given by his Department to the Peak Park planning board over the last four years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The amounts of national park supplementary grant paid to local authorities in respect of the Peak Park joint planning board in the last four years are:

	£
1983-84	1,492,300
1984-85	1,566,300
1985-86	1,644,400
1986-87	1,828,600

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the way in which the Peak Park planning board is operating; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a review.

Cornish Unit Housing

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the (a) total cost and (b) average cost of bringing the Cornish unit houses designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984 up to standard.

Mr. John Patten: Comprehensive information on repairs already carried out to Cornish unit houses is not yet available. However, we expect most of the privately owned properties to be repairable under the housing defects legislaion within the expenditure limits of £14,000 — for houses with one storey PRC elements — and £16,000 — for two-storey PRC elements. Local authorities will need to reach their own view on the renovation work needed to properties in their own stock.

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many building societies are either refusing to give mortgages or being highly selective in the giving of mortgages on Cornish unit houses designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984 and subsequently repaired; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that a survey carried out by the Building Societies Association of the 30 largest societies, representing over 90 per cent. of the industry's assets, showed that all, save one, would consider lending on properties designated under the housing defects legislation and repaired by a method approved under the National House Building Council's scheme. The Building Societies Association has itself endorsed that scheme. We look to smaller, local societies to take the same approach.

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Cornish unit houses have been designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. John Patten: Some 23,000 Cornish unit houses are designated under the housing defects legislation in England.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what criteria the London residuary body adopt for arriving at a current market value;

(2) what criteria the London residuary body adopts for arriving at an open market value.

Dr. Boyson: The criteria for current or open market values are matters for the London residuary body and its professional advisers. Residuary bodies are subject to the duty imposed by section 123 of the Local Government Act 1972 that they must not dispose of land for a consideration less than the best that can reasonably be obtained, except with the consent of the Secretary of State.

Secondary Mortgage Market

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the working group examining protection for borrowers in the emerging secondary mortgage market to complete its report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I expect to receive shortly a report from the secondary mortgage market working group.

Council Housing Estates (Demolition and Sale)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide for his consent to be required for the demolition of a council housing estate, and sale of the land.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Portsdown Park Housing Estate, Portsmouth

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of grants Portsmouth city council has received for (a) the original construction of the Portsdown park housing estate and (b) capitalised repairs since 1970.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

London (Barrier Flood Plan)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what arrangements he has made to maintain the former Greater London council's post barrier flood plan;

(2) why the Greater London council's flood control centre has been closed;

(3) which authority is responsible for operating the Greater London co-ordination centre in the Kingsway; and what financial and staffing resources are available to operate it.

Mr. Chope: I will answer these questions shortly.

Housing Shortage

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the level of the current housing shortage.

Mr. Tracey: There is no overall shortage of housing. We regularly receive representations about housing policy from a large number of bodies, some of which relate to shortages of housing, particularly for rent, in high pressure areas such as parts of London and the south-east. We have taken initiatives which will enable the private sector to play an increasing role in remedying such shortages.

"Faith in the City"

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in the light of the report "Faith in the City", on matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. Ridley: I will answer this question shortly.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons have been homeless each year since 1979, including the latest figures for 1986.

Mr. Tracey: The number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities in England is as follows:

(000's)

Year	Households
1979	57
1980	63
1981	70
1982	75
1983	78
1984	83
1985	94
1986[1]	51

[1](1st half).

Note The method of collection changed during 1980 for non-metropolitan local authorities and during 1982 for metropolitan local authorities.

Portsmouth City Council (Telephone Call)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what request as to the revelation of the contents of the telephone call to the leader of Portsmouth city council on 4 March was made in the course of the telephone call.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Council House Sales

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all local authority improvement for sale schemes for which Exchequer subsidy has been paid during the last six years; and if he will specify for each scheme (a) the number of units of accommodation improved for sale (b) whether these units were acquired by the local authority for improvement for sale, or previously let by the local authority under secure tenancies (c) the level of subsidy paid per unit included in the scheme (d) the capital receipt to the local authority from the sale of the properties and (e) the value per unit of improvements.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: The available data on local authority improvement for sale schemes, toward which contribution has been paid, are set out below. Data are collected by dwellings rather than schemes, which may contain any number of dwellings, as contribution is payable separately for each dwelling rather than in aggregate for a scheme. Information on whether these units were acquired for IFS or were previously let as secure tenancies is not available on a directly comparable basis, and would be disproportionately expensive to provide. Information is not available on the proportion of the total qualifying cost of works to each dwelling attributable to works of improvement.

	1981-82			1982-83			1983-84			1984-85			1985-86
	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3
1. Bristol	—	—	—	5	3,867	63,250	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
2. Wokingham	—	—	—	1	4,875	28,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
3. Peterborough	—	—	—	2	15	17,000	7	823	53,500	6	2,473	67,450	—	—	—
4. Crewe and Nantwich	—	—	—	2	670	30,700	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
5. Halton	—	—	—	1	3,802	16,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
6. Warrington	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	2	4,875	24,500	—	—	—
7. Hartlepool	—	—	—	—	—	—	6	2,895	114,500	7	4,131	147,000	—	—	—
8. Carrick	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	5	4,801	112,050	—	—	—
9. Carlisle	—	—	—	3	1,935	41,450	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
10. Erewash	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2,936	14,450	—	—	—
11. South Derbyshire	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	1,549	45,550	1	1,218	11,500	—	—	—
12. Plymouth	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	93	20,105	2	2,639	45,500	1	1,527	22,500
13. Mid Devon	1	1,420	19,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
14. Torbay	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	6	4,875	147,000	—	—	—
15. Torridge	—	—	—	—	—	—	25	4,875	336,750	—	—	—	—	—	—
16. Chester le Street	1	3,250	6,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
17. Darlington	—	—	—	2	533	18,000	1	1,090	10,000	3	3,538	30,300	—	—	—
18. Easington	—	—	—	6	704	112,648	2	784	36,800	—	—	—	—	—	—
19. Wear Valley	3	1,080	25,250	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
20. Lewes	—	—	—	2	1,405	46,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
21. Braintree	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1,980	21,000	1	783	23,000	1	2,273	21,750
22. Thurrock	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	60	3,234	1,095,000	59	4,895	1,130,617
23. Gloucester	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	3,126	16,839	2	1,507	35,000	2	2,306	36,500
24. Southampton	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4,875	23,000	—	—	—
25. Leominster	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1,472	21,750	2	1,715	49,000	—	—	—
26. Malvern Hills	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	4,097	59,510	—	—	—
27. Worcester	—	—	—	3	1,892	51,450	1	2,929	17,500	—	—	—	—	—	—
28. Wychavon	—	—	—	10	2,898	188,080	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
29. Scunthorpe	—	—	—	1	1,120	8,150	—	—	—	2	1,779	23,000	—	—	—
30. Shepway	—	—	—	2	1,686	35,500	2	948	38,250	—	—	—	—	—	—
31. Blackburn	3	2,262	22,060	6	3,274	48,250	1	4,519	6,500	3	3,524	28,800	2	4,035	21,250
32. Burnley	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4,508	5,000	10	4,492	67,400	1	4,875	5,500
33. Hyndburn	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4,581	23,750	3	2,883	30,250
34. Pendle	3	2,609	21,500	11	2,782	81,700	8	2,088	59,200	8	3,263	70,950	—	—	—
35. Charnwood	1	619	15,000	5	1,942	70,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
36. Norwich	3	538	52,500	3	581	52,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
37. Blyth Valley	—	—	—	—	—	—	5	4,384	68,000	—	—	—	—	—	—
38. Wansbeck	—	—	—	2	3,191	27,026	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
39. Scarborough	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4,875	16,500	7	4,391	114,950	1	4,875	16,500
40. Ashfield	—	—	—	—	—	—	3	3,078	36,200	5	4,800	78,100	1	2,108	14,950
41. Nottingham	—	—	—	1	4,875	11,950	1	4,875	10,750	—	—	—	—	—	—
42. Vale of White Horse	—	—	—	1	4,875	32,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
43. Bridgenorth	—	—	—	—	—	—	4	3,103	76,500	1	3,122	14,000	—	—	—
44. The Wrekin	1	1,394	14,300	9	3,638	122,200	5	3,345	84,166	7	3,461	74,600	—	—	—
45. Stafford	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2,267	32,000	—	—	—	—	—	—
46. Ipswich	—	—	—	4	3,251	57,750	4	3,203	69,750	6	3,892	109,500	4	3,708	96,000
47. St. Edmondsbury	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	4,875	21,000	—	—	—	—	—	—
48. Waveney	—	—	—	1	3,250	16,750	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
49. Rugby	3	325	36,500	1	1,021	12,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
50. Bolton	4	4,831	41,050	9	4,632	96,250	23	4,520	256,708	39	4,624	474,750	17	4,875	211,000
51. Bury	—	—	—	8	3,550	76,607	7	2,724	100,160	3	3,350	40,850	—	—	—
52. Manchester	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	22	4,840	362,990	1	4,875	16,250
53. Oldham	1	3,250	10,550	6	2,993	58,900	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
54. Stockport	1	297	14,950	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1,537	9,000	—	—	—

	1981-82			1982-83			1983-84			1984-85			1985-86
	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3
55 Tameside				2	2,960	24,700
56 Wigan										8	4,445	99,725
57 Knowsley										30	4,875	588,450	1	42	18,000
58 Sefton	2	2,886	15,600	1	2,984	8,000
59 Newcastle-upon-Tyne	19	4,150	287,150	36	4,345	532,850	8	4,741	121,630	12	2,734	157,500	3	2,294	39,250
60 South Tyneside	2	37	16,000	3	827	32,250	2	2,477	32,000	1	76	16,000
61 Birmingham	11	2,693	100,375	25	3,101	271,320	5	2,707	60,655	2	3,088	25,250	1	1,885	11,850
62 Walsall	2	835	26,000	7	4,029	83,500	3	3,688	38,000	15	4,176	194,500	1	1,125	12,000
63 Wolverhampton	20	4,172	168,300	8	2,294	73,250	2	3,083	23,250				2	2,625	25,000
64 Leeds	2	1,907	18,100
65 Brent	—	—	—	5	3,199	145,500	18	2,664	591,500
66 Ealing							5	3,250	117,973	2	6,500	48,900
67 Newham				1	1,851	16,000				2	2,060	44,200
68 Waltham Forest							4	5,696	101,000	5	5,892	148,000	3	2,219	81,000

Column 1. Number of units towards which contribution was paid.
Column 2. Average contribution per unit.
Column 3. Market value of units (see note).
Note: In certain circumstances local authorities may sell improved properties at a discount. For the purposes of calculating the contribution payable, however, the market value rather than the selling price is used. Data on discounts given on these sales are not available.

WALES

Education (South Glamorgan)

15. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to that proportion of South Glamorgan county's capital expenditure which was allocated to education over the last two years; and how this compares with similar expenditure by other Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The proportion of South Glamorgan county council's capital expenditure allocated to education was 16·5 per cent. in 1984-85 and 5·5 per cent. in 1985-86. This was a lower proportion than that allocated to education by other Welsh counties.

Health Authorities

16. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what basis he intends to invite individuals and organisations to submit nominations for membership of health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: As required by the National Health Service Act 1977, nominations for appointments to health authorities in Wales will continue to be canvassed from health related professional organisations, the University of Wales, the health authorities themselves and other statutory and non-statutory organisations concerned with the provision of health services. To further widen the field, occasional press advertisements will invite members of the public or organisations not directly approached to make applications for lay membership.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales why, in the Welsh office circular CT/5275/86 of 28 June to chairmen and general managers of Welsh health authorities, comments were not invited on the recommendation of the optional appraisal from 14 July.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Public consultation was deferred pending the findings of a review of psychiatric service provision in north Wales which are expected shortly.

Community Paediatricians

17. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities in Wales employ consultant community paediatricians.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There are 37 consultant paediatricians, but no consultant community paediatricians, working in the hospital service in Wales.

Psychiatric Services

18. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions, following the publication of the recent Health Advisory Service report, his Department has had with the Gwynedd health authority concerning the improvement of psychiatric services in the county; and whether he is taking any direct steps to ensure an improvement in these services in Gwynedd.

Mr. Mark Robinson: My right hon. Friend is anxious that there should be speedy action to remedy the deficiencies in services for the mentally ill in Gwynedd highlighted in the recent HAS report. A team of senior Welsh Office officials met officials of the health and social services authorities in north Wales on 28 November to review their progress in responding to the report. There will be further meetings to monitor the situation and to discuss proposals for developing services for mentally ill people in the county.

Cervical Cytology

19. Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the number of medical pathologists employed full-time for cervical cytology slide interpretation by each health authority in Wales; and what was the comparable figures two years ago.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A range of technically or medically qualified people is involved in slide interpretation in addition to medical pathologists. At 31 December 1985 there were 45·33 whole time equivalent posts dealing with slide interpretation in Wales; the equivalent figure for 1983 was 40·36. The figures are as follows. The number of whole time equivalent posts dealing with slide interpretation in each health authority at 31 December 1985 and two years earlier were:

	1983	1985
Clwyd	5·50	7·00
East Dyfed	2·00	1·40
Gwent	9·36	9·11
Gwynedd	4·20	3·60
Mid Glamorgan	8·05	8·55
Pembrokeshire[1]	—	—
Powys[1]	—	—

	1983	1985
South Glamorgan	7·33	9·25
West Glamorgan	3·92	6·42
	40·36	45·33

No laboratories in these areas.

Trunk Roads

20. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many miles of dual carriageway trunk road he expects will have been opened in Wales in 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Approximately nine miles, comprising the A55 bypasses of Holywell and Bodelwyddan.

Local Authority Housing

21. Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out his criteria for funding of the building of new council houses in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Local authorities are free to determine their own priorities for housing investment within the resources available to them. However, in announcing their housing capital allocations on 26 November, my right hon. Friend again stressed the priority he attaches to the renovation of the housing stock.

Beef

22. Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with farming unions in Wales regarding the future of the beef variable premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I and my officials have met the farming unions in Wales on several occasions on which the future of the beef variable premium has been discussed. The Agriculture Council is considering proposals for reform of the beef regime including a Community-wide premium scheme which would replace our variable beef premium. We are pressing for arrangements which will give adequate and effective support to our industry.

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the present state of beef production in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The beef market in Wales remains weak and the 1986 June census results record a further marginal decline in the beef breeding herd in Wales. In the last marketing year, beef producers in Wales benefited by £4·9 million under the beef variable premium scheme, £3·5 million under the suckler cow premium scheme and over £7 million in hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now answer questions about forecasts of the level of unemployment in particular constituencies in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No. It has not been the practice of this or previous Governments to forecast levels of unemployment.

Valuation Panels

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the clerks of the local valuation panels in Wales, indicating which of these are competent to deal with their work through the medium of the Welsh language; and what is the policy of his Department in relation to these panels undertaking their business through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The clerks of the local valuation panels in Wales are as follows:

LVP	Clerk
Clwyd	Mr. A. J. Cogher
Dyfed	Mr. D. O. Evans
Gwent & Powys	Mr. H. F. Frowen
Gwynedd	Mr. D. Pritchard Jones
Mid & South Glamorgan	Mr. B. McCarthy
West Glamorgan	Mr. D. A. Richards

Messrs. D. O. Evans and D. Pritchard Jones are competent to deal with their work through the medium of the Welsh language. It is for each panel to decide its policy in relation to undertaking its business through the medium of the Welsh language. All Welsh LVPs may use the services of an interpreter whenever necessary.

Paediatric Cardiac

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail plans to set up a department of paediatric cardiothoracic surgery in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is planned to develop a paediatric cardiac unit in Cardiff. There are no plans to further develop paediatric thoracic surgery at present.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales where paediatric cardiothoracic surgery is carried out on a regular basis.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Paediatric cardiac surgery is carried out at the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff and thoracic surgery at Llandough hospital, Penarth.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will enumerate the consultant cardio respiratory surgeries at hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There are three consultant cardio thoracic surgeons who are based at Llandough hospital, Penarth.

Paediatric Cardiologists

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will detail the locations of consultant paediatric cardiologists in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There is a locum consultant paediatric cardiologist at the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff where South Glamorgan health authority is presently seeking to make a permanent appointment.

Private Health Care

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had on private health care in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No. I have not undertaken any formal consultations on this matter.

Acute, Chronic and Geriatric Beds

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average cost separately for acute, chronic and geriatric beds in Wales; if he will give the highest and lowest cost in each category of bed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information is not collected centrally in this form. The cost returns submitted by health authorities to the Department show average costs per in-patient day for hospitals of different types but do not distinguish between differing categories of beds within those hospitals.

Copies of the Department's annual publication "Welsh costing Returns" which summarise the information collected from health authorities are held in the Library.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what policy guidelines have been issued by his office to public departments and authorities in Wales concerning correspondence with individuals or local authorities through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The use of Welsh in correspondence is a matter for each public department and authority. The Welsh Office replies in Welsh to all correspondence received in that language.

Homelessness

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given to housing authorities in Wales on the training of homelessness officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We have issued a code of guidance to local authorities in Wales on the discharge of their responsibility towards homeless people. A copy is in the Library. The Housing Management Advisory Panel for Wales has advised housing authorities to give appropriate training to their homelessness officers.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Accident)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport what period of time elapsed from the complete closure to the reopening of the northbound carriageway north of junction 16 on the M1 motorway between London and Wakefield on Friday 28 November.

Mr. Moore: The northbound carriageway of the motorway was closed completely at 05.52 for a period of 4½ hours. A single lane was open between 10.19 and 19.45 and a further lane until 11.00 on Saturday 29 November when the motorway was fully open to traffic.

M1 (Contra-flow Systems)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many contra-flow systems were working on 1 December between London and Wakefield, northbound and southbound; what are their locations, how long they will be operating; and on what estimated dates they will be terminated.

Mr. Moore: The information requested is as follows:

Site	Location of contraflow	Start date	Programmed completion date
M1—J31-33	Both carriageways	6 October 1986	17 December 1986

M1 (Repairs)

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many separate sections of engineering works, carriageway repairs and maintenance were being carried out on 1 December on the first 60 miles of the M1 motorway, south of Wakefield towards London, in places where speed restrictions applied.

Mr. Moore: Speed restrictions applied at three sites as follows:

Site	Location of restriction	Type or restriction
J29-30	Both carriageways	Advisory 50 mph limit
J31-33	Both carriageways	Advisory 50 mph limit
J35-36	Both carriageways	Advisory 50 mph limit

Bristol Channel (Rescue Facilities)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to increase rescue facilities and lifeboat cover in the Bristol Channel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. My Department has no plans to increase the cover of rescue facilities in the Bristol Channel. The overall level of air and sea search and rescue capability in the area does not give rise for concern.

Lifeboat cover is of course a matter for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, with which my Department has agreed terms of co-operation. These include the reporting of changes of deployment and it is understood that a replacement for the recently withdrawn lifeboat at Ilfracombe is expected to be available early in 1987.

Vehicles (Owner Identification)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects that the ownership of D registration vehicles will become available for identification by the police.

Mr. Moore: Details of the registered keepers of new vehicles are passed to the police national computer within 15-20 days of registration taking place.

Racal-Decca Navigator (Financing)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the arrangements he has made to transfer the financing of the Racal-Decca chain of navigational transmitters to the general lighthouse fund include provision for reducing the cost of renting the on-ship equipment to those users whose rents currently include a charge for the use of the transmitters.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The arrangements that are under negotiation between the company and the General Lighthouse Authorities do not contain a specific provision of this sort. But (as envisaged when the arrangements were agreed in principle between the company and my Department) Racal-Decca is not informing its customers of the reductions in hiring charges for its Navigator receivers that will be effective from 1 January next. For example, the annual rent for the Mk 21, which is the model in widest use, will be reduced from £1,360 to £800. Moreover, models which hitherto have been available only for rent will be offered for sale at prices that compare favourably with current rental charges. Whether sold or rented, these receivers will be in free and direct competition in the United Kingdom market with other manufacturers' products.

Thames Crossing

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has recently undertaken into the feasibility and effects of an additional crossing of the Thames at (a) Blackwall or (b) another location in the Greenwich area.

Mr. Moore: The only new crossing of this part of the Thames envisaged by my Department is the proposed east London river crossing, now at public inquiry. The Department has made available to the inquiry its assessment of the engineering feasibility and relevance in transport terms of various alternatives proposed by objectors including a new tunnel at Blackwall.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Transport what maximum net weight of aerosol container he expects to allow to travel unescorted through the proposed Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Under the Channel fixed link concession agreement, it is for the concessionaires to develop rules for the transport of dangerous goods through the Channel tunnel and to submit these for the approval of the Anglo-French intergovernmental commission. To date, no such proposed rules have been submitted. If and when they are, the safety authority will advise the intergovernmental commission on what categories of dangerous goods should be permitted to travel through the Channel tunnel, in what quantities and under what conditions.

Level Crossing Barriers

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from individuals and organisations regarding the use of non skirted level crossing barriers by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a small number of representations, from individuals and organisations, since 1981 when a revision of the Department's Requirements permitted the railways to install full-width barriers without skirts, or to remove the skirts from some existing barriers. Each representation has been considered on its merits.

Buses

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress to date in bus deregulation in south-east Hampshire.

Mr. David Mitchell: Local bus operators and Hampshire county council have worked hard on the transition to deregulation. As with any major change there have been teething problems, but I have no doubt that these will be resolved, and, in the longer term, competition will produce benefits for the public.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have taken place with London boroughs in drawing up London Regional Transport's 1987-88 business plan.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for London Regional Transport since consultation is not required by statute.

Road Studies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the findings of the four London road assessment studies.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the consultants' reports on the four corridor studies in the London area; and at what price these reports will be available to members of the public.

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now publish the corridor studies report, together with all evidence and data available to the consultants who produced it.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 2 December at column 587. The price depends on the final production cost.

London Underground

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the projected forecast for operated mileage on the London Underground for 1986-87.

Mr. David Mitchell: 30·6 milllion miles, as given in the current published "Annual Business Plan of London Regional Transport".

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of steps being taken to combat crime and violence on the London Underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 28 November.

Transport Policies, London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to respond to the transport policies for London sent to him in September 1986 by the London Strategic Policy Unit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have already done so.

Public Transport, London

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been made to his Department on the re-introduction of train services in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: Between 1 June 1982 and 5 December 1986 this Department received four representations about the re-introduction of train services in London. Three concerned the line which British Rail propose to re-open between Farringdon and Blackfriars stations via the Snow Hill tunnel. The other concerned the Finsbury park to Alexandra palace line which was closed in 1954.

London Coach Terminals

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the inquiry into London coach terminals will be held.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 17 November.

Shipping (Lights and Navigational Aids)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of the light dues paid by merchant shipping using United Kingdom ports is devoted to the provision of lights and other aids to the navigation of ships in the Irish Republic; and what information he has as to whether similar subsidy arrangements for navigational aids exist with or between any other member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to the reply, 1 December 1986]: Navigational aids to shipping around the coasts of the Republic of Ireland are provided by local lighthouse authorities, for example, harbour boards, within their areas of responsibility; by the Commissioners of Irish Lights, outside those areas; and by the Irish Fisheries Board, in respect of the Hibernian chain of the Racal-Decca Navigator system. The finances of the local lighthouse authorities and the Irish Fisheries Board are not matters for my right hon. Friend. The Commissioners' expenditure, however is subject to my right hon. Friend's aproval, since it is met from the general lighthouse fund, which is derived chiefly from light dues paid by shipping in the United Kingdom. But the costs incurred by the Commissioners in the Republic are not identified in the fund's accounts; moreover, light dues levied in the Republic are also paid into the fund, and the Irish Government have undertaken to make a supplementary payment to it.

I am not aware of similar arrangements between other members of the European Community, nor is there any such arrangement between the United Kingdom and a member.

I will write to my hon. Friend to say why it is not possible to say what proportion of the light dues collected in the United Kingdom ports is used in this way.

A19 (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to put crash barriers on the central reservation of the A19 particularly where it passes through urban areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I visited Cleveland on 5 December. I am giving urgent consideration to the provision of central reserve barriers on the A19, particularly in the urban areas of the county.

Drink-driving

Mr. David Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Transport for the most recent three years for which statistics are available, what was the percentage of car drivers killed in motor accidents who had at the time a level of alcohol in their blood which exceeded the legal limit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Drivers killed in Great Britain: percentage over the legal blood alcohol limit

	Percentage
1983	31
1984	26
1985	23

These figures cover drivers of all motor vehicles other than motorcycles.

Full details are available in "Road Accidents Great Britain 1985: The Casualty Report". A copy is available in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Closures

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the proposals for school closures or reorganisations he has received from local education authorities which are outstanding for (a) 15 months or more, (b) 12 months or more, (c) nine months or more, and (d) six months or more and (e) three months or more, respectively; and when he expects to reach a decision in each case.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what procedures exist in his Department for monitoring the competence and efficiency of the Leeds local education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is empowered under the Education Act 1944 to intervene if he has reason to believe, as a result of a complaint or otherwise, that a local education authority may have failed to discharge a statutory duty or may have acted unreasonably in using a statutory power or discharging a duty. Her Majesty's inspectorate also monitor the work in local education authorities' schools and colleges.

GCSE

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how much is being spent on average per pupil per subject for GCSE by the local education authorities in (a) Leeds, (b) Wakefield and (c) Bradford in addition to the sums specified by him as the Government contribution.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected by the Department.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will show (a) the number of students in receipt of the older students' allowance and the average individual payment made in the past three years, (b) the total cost of the allowance in each year, (c) the average amount of student grant, other than the allowance, received by students covered by the allowance in each of these years and (d) estimates of these statistics for the current academic year.

Mr. Walden: In answer to parts (a) and (b) of the question, the latest available information is as follows:

Year	Students receiving older students' allowance	Average payment	Total cost
		£	£
1983-84	12,430	510	6,354,000
1984-85	11,927	530	6,317,000

The information sought under parts (c) and (d) of the question is not available.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the effects of the change in the eligibility conditions for the older students allowance on the total number of awards given, and as to how this will be split between those (a) losing and (b) gaining eligibility compared with the previous regulations.

Mr. Walden: No students who were receiving the allowance under the arrangements operating before 1 September 1986 will lose their entitlement. Information about the number of students entering higher education on or after that date who would have qualified for the older students allowance under the previous criteria but who are not now eligible, or who now qualify for the allowance but would not have done so previously, is not available. The number of students entering higher education and receiving mandatory awards depends on a number of factors. Any attempt to estimate the future effect on that number of the change in the conditions of eligibility for the older students' allowance, or of the increased rates of allowance, would be purely speculative.

Western Infirmary

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the reasons for the resignation of a senior member of staff in the hypertension unit funded by the Medical Research Council in the Western infirmary in Glasgow; and if an inquiry will be held into the matter.

Mr. Walden: No. It is a matter for the member of staff concerned and his employer, the Medical Research Council.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines are issued by the Medical Research Council to hospital staff in units funded by the council about their relationship with pharmaceutical companies.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council gives detailed guidance in its staff code to all members of staff regarding relationships with industry.

AIDS

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial resources have been allocated by the Medical Research Council for research into a vaccine for acquired immune deficiency syndrome and into possible cures for those at present suffering from the disease.

Mr. Walden: I understand that the MRC as allocated about £1·5 million in grants for research on AIDS. While none of this research holds immediate promise of leading to a vaccine against AIDS a number of virological studies that are relevant to the design of future potential vaccines are in progress.

Teachers (Pay)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the average increase in teachers' salaries per head, expressed as a percentage, each year since March 1979, to the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information is as follows, from March 1979 to April 1986, on both a cash and a constant price base.

Percentage increase in the average salary of teachers

Year (April)	At cash prices		At constant prices
	Year on year	Cumulative	Year on year	Cumulative
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
1979	+10	+ 10	0	0
1980	+37	+ 51	+12	+12
1981	+ 9	+ 64	− 3	+ 9
1982	+ 7	+ 76	− 2	+ 7
1983	+ 6	+ 86	+ 2	+ 9
1984	+ 6	+ 97	+ 1	+10
1985	+ 8	+112	+ 1	+11
1986	+ 7	+228	+ 4	+15

Higher Education

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the increase in the total sum paid in wages and salaries of those employed in higher education, each year since March 1979, expressed in figures and percentages, and as a proportion of the total sum spent on higher education.

Mr. Walden: The information for universities in Great Britain and local authority institutions of higher education in England, for the years for which it is available, is estimated as follows:

	1982-83 £ million	1983-84 £ million	1984-85 £ million
Salaries, wages and related expenditure	1,544	1,633	1,739
Cash increase over previous year	—	89	106
Percentage increase over previous year	—	5·8	6·5
Salaries, wages and related expenditure as a proportion of total current expenditure (per cent.)	62·9	62·5	62·0

Information in respect of universities only for the period 1979-80 to 1984-85 is available in "University Statistics 1984-85" volume 3, table 5, copies of which are in the Library.

School Meals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of children entitled to free school meals at the beginning of this autumn term, and the number now entitled to them after the recent changes for each local education authority in the west midlands.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: LEA returns are currently being processed from the October 1986 school meals census, and results will be published in the spring. The numbers of children receiving a free meal on the day of the census will then be shown for each LEA, but information is not collected on the number of children entitled to a free school meal.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in Avon take part in the assisted places scheme; and if he will give the name of the schools and the number of places involved.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: There are 13 Avon schools participating in the assisted places scheme with intake quotas for 1986-87 as follows:

	11+	12+	13+	VI Form
Clifton College	10	—	—	—
Clifton High School for Girls	6	—	2	5
Colston's School	8	—	7	5
Colston's Girls' School	20	—	—	5
Kingswood School	2	2	2	5
Monkton Combe School	3	—	2	5
Bristol Cathedral School	20	—	—	5
Bristol Grammar School	40	—	—	5
Queen Elizabeth's Hospital School	25	—	—	5
Red Maids' School	25	—	—	5
Redland High School	10	—	—	5
Bath High School for Girls	18	—	—	5
King Edward's School at Bath	14	1	1	2
	201	3	14	57

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hospital Beds

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the average cost separately for acute, chronic and geriatric beds in Northern Ireland; if he will give the highest and lowest cost in each category of bed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is as follows:

	Acute £	Chronic £	Geriatric £
Average cost (per in-patient week)	616·56	262·79	261·62
Highest	1,019·90	575·11	391·05
Lowest Cost	173·20	158·96	183·09

Note:
The present accounting system attributes costs to individual hospitals rather than to types of beds and for the purpose of the answer the definitions used are those derived from the Annual Analyses of running costs, Related Income and Statistics of Hospitals compiled by the Department ie;
Acute
Teaching hospitals with acute beds; acute, mainly acute, partly acute, and sub-acute hospitals.
Chronic
Long stay, mainly long stay, mental handicap, and tuberculosis and chest disease hospitals.
Geriatric
Hospitals within the Long Stay and Teaching Hospital categories which provide wholly or mainly geriatric accommodation.

Weapons (EEC Directive)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will raise, at the next meeting with representatives of the Republic under the Anglo-Irish agreement, the implications of the proposed European Economic Community directive on the abolition of controls on weapons at internal community frontiers with particular reference to cross-border security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: No. It would not be useful to do so until we know the full details of the Commission's proposal concerning the movement of firearms across internal community frontiers. But we will discuss with our Community partners—including the Republic—any firm proposals made by the Commission.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Residential Care

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to move towards a system of care of the elderly under residential home conditions without qualified nursing staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. We continue to draw a firm distinction between the types of care provided in residential care and nursing homes. Any necessary nursing care for residents in residential care homes should be provided through the community nursing services. People who require more intensive or sustained nursing care should receive this from qualified staff employed as nurses in hospital or in an establishment registered as a nursing home.

Statutory Sick Pay

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions there have been of employers for failure to pay statutory sick pay or to provide adequate information over the past 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholas Lyell: None.

Industrial Death Benefit

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the initial rate which the industrial death benefit was first introduced for the widows of those who died through industrial injury disease, together with the dates of each subsequent increase in the weekly rate payable; and if he will indicate, for each figure, its value in current purchasing terms.

Mr. Major: Industrial death benefit is payable at one of three rates. All industrial widows receive an initial industrial widow's pension, currently £54·20 a week, for the first 26 weeks of widowhood. Thereafter two permanent rates are payable depending on the widow's age and whether she has dependent children. The higher permanent rate, £39·25 a week, is payable to older widows and widows with dependent children. The lower permanent rate, £11·61 a week is payable to younger widows without dependent children.

The initial pension is paid at the same rate as national insurance widows' allowance. The lower permanent rate is the same as that payable to a widow aged 40 under the NI scheme.

The following table relates to the higher permanent rate which has been 55p a week higher than national insurance widow's pension since November 1967:

Industrial Death Benefit

Date	Higher permanent rate £	[1] Real value £
July 1948	1·50	18·47
July 1952	1·85	17·90
April 1955	2·25	20·39
January 1958	2·80	22·45
April 1961	3·20	24·49
May 1963	3·75	26·63
March 1965	4·50	30·21
November 1967	5·05	30·95
November 1969	5·55	30·68
September 1971	6·55	31·08
October 1972	7·30	31·93
October 1973	8·30	33·03
July 1974	10·55	37·00
April 1975	12·15	36·21
November 1975	13·85	36·95
November 1976	15·85	36·78
November 1977	18·05	37·05
November 1978	20·05	38·09
November 1979	23·85	38·60
November 1980	27·70	38·88
November 1981	30·15	37·79
November 1982	33·40	39·40
November 1983	34·60	38·93
November 1984	36·35	38·97
November 1985	38·85	39·50
July 1986	39·25	39·25

[1] Based on the movement in the retail price index between the dates shown and July 1986.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is now in a position to reply to the letter sent to him on 1 October by the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford concerning taxation and national insurance.

Mr. Lyell: My noble Friend wrote to my hon. Friend on 13 November.

Inner Cities

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors led to his decision to restrict extra funding for inner city health authorities for the south-east.

Mr. Newton: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the £30 million we shall make available over the next two years to help ease the transitional problems which some districts in regions receiving less than national average growth may face. The Thames regions are expected to be the principal recipients of the new fund, but there has been no decision to restrict the fund to them. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce details of allocations from the fund shortly.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the provision of extra funding for inner city health authorities in the north-west region.

Mr. Newton: We have received representations from a number of hon. Member and members of the general public on various aspects of the funding of health authorities in the north-western region including those providing services to inner city areas.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has made any assessment of the extra funding needs of inner city teaching districts within the north-west region.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for allocating resources to districts lies with regional health authorities.

Health Education Council

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) over what period of time his Department has been considering the abolition of the Health Education Council:

(2) what consultation has taken place with the medical profession and other interested groups concerning the abolition of the Health Education Council; what plans exist for further consultation; and whether he will postpone further action until a full consultation process is completed.

Mr. Newton: The role of the council in connection with the public education campaign on AIDS has been under consideration for some months. We think it important that the proposed new special health authority should be in effective operation as soon as possible and my right hon. Friend sees no need in the circumstances to consult with outside bodies before going ahead with the change.

Agency Nurses

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the latest available year the expenditure of each district health authority and special health authority on agency nursing; and if he will give the totals for (a) inner London, (b) Greater London, (c) each region and (d) England.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospital closures and significant partial permanent closures which have been agreed locally, without reference to Ministers, since 1979 giving, in each case, the name of the hospital, the date of the closure and the name of the district special and regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: Following are the hospitals approved locally for complete or partial permanent closure since 1979. The information we keep centrally does not include a record of the date on which closure is implemented. Many of the buildings have been turned to other uses. For further information the hon. Member might like to approach the regional health authority concerned.

Hospitals approved locally for complete closure 1979-1986 (August)

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
(i) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure May 1979-December 1979
NORTHERN
Durham	Darlington Memorial Hospital, Hunden's Unit	July 1979
TRENT
Derbyside	Nightingale Maternity Home	July 1979
Sheffield	Wales Court Hospital, Sheffield	December 1979
NORTH WEST THAMES
Barnet	St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Barnet	June 1979
Barnet	Orme Lodge, Barnet	December 1979
Barnet	Stanmore Cottage Hospital	December 1979
NORTH EAST THAMES
Camden and Islington	Garrett Anderson Maternity Home	September 1979
SOUTH EAST THAMES
West Lambeth	Holmhurst Hospital	December 1979
SOUTH WEST THAMES
Mid Surrey	Schiff Hospital, Surrey	December 1979
WESSEX
Dorset	Capesthorne Children's Unit, Dorset	May 1979
OXFORD
Berkshire	Peppard Hospital, Berkshire	November 1979
MERSEY
Chester	Barrowmore Hospital, Chester	June 1979
Chester	Davenham Hospital, Northwich	October 1979
Wirral	St. James Hospital	July 1979
Wirral	Thingwall Hospital	July 1979
Wirral	Birkenhead General Hospital	July 1979
(ii) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure 1980.
NORTHERN
Cleveland	Overdene Maternity Home, Cleveland	February 1980
YORKSHIRE
Leeds	Haigh Hospital, Leeds	May 1980
TRENT
Nottinghamshire	Adbolton Hall, Nottingham	August 1980
EAST ANGLIAN
Cambridgeshire	Grange Maternity Unit, Cambridge	March 1980
Norfolk	Stow Hall Hospital, Norfolk	November 1980
NORTH WEST THAMES
Bedfordshire	Luton and Dunstable Hospital, Children's Annexe	July 1980
Hertfordshire	Tolmers Park Hospital, Herts	January 1980

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
NORTH EAST THAMES
Camden and Islington	Thomas Barlow Home	July 1980
Camden and Islington	Cromwell Lodge	November 1980
Essex	Waltham Abbey War Memorial Hospital	December 1980
SOUTH EAST THAMES
Canterbury and Thanet	Princess Mary's Hospital, Margate	February 1980
Hastings	Bexhill Convalescent Home	October 1980
South East Kent	Dover Eye Unit	December 1980
SOUTH WEST THAMES
East Surrey	Caterham Main Hospital	September 1980
East Surrey	Clerks Croft Hospital, Surrey	September 1980
East Surrey	East Surrey Hospital	September 1980
East Surrey	Horley Hospital	September 1980
East Surrey	Smallfield Hospital	September 1980
Mid Surrey	Cuddington Hospital	September 1980
Mid Surrey	Queen Elizabeth House	May 1980
WESSEX
Dorset	Firs Maternity Home, Dorset	July 1980
Dorset	Hahneman Convalescent Home, Dorset	September 1980
SOUTH WESTERN
Cheltenham	Holm Hospital	March 1980
Plymouth	Devonport Hospital	October 1980
WEST MIDLANDS
Hereford and Worcester	Holme Lacy Hospital	November 1980
Hereford and Worcester	Stretton Sugwas Hospital	July 1980
Staffordshire	Groundslow Hospital	June 1980
Staffordshire	Standon Hall Hospital	June 1980
MERSEY
Liverpool	Liverpool Psychiatric Day Hospital	September 1980
Wirral	Highfield Maternity Hospital	February 1980
Wirral	Wallasey Hospital for Women	May 1980
NORTH WESTERN
Bolton	Wilkinson Hospital	March 1980
Lancashire	Deepdale Hospital	November 1980
Lancashire	The Willows, Preston	November 1980
Lancashire	Lostock Hall Continuation Hospital	December 1980
Oldham	Strinesdale Hospital	August 1980
Wigan	Pemberton Day Hospital	October 1980

(iii) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure 1981

YORKSHIRE
North Yorkshire	Fulford Maternity Hospital	January 1981
TRENT
Lincolnshire	Tuxford Hostel, Nottingham	August 1981
Nottinghamshire	Firs Maternity Hospital	May 1981
Nottinghamshire	Nottingham Women's Hospital	May 1981
Sheffield	Thornbury Hospital	April 1981
Sheffield	St. Joseph's Hospital, Sheffield	September 1981
Sheffield	Hallwood Isolation Hospital	November 1981
EAST ANGLIAN
Cambridgeshire	March Maternity Home	April 1981
NORTH EAST THAMES
Barking and Haringey	St. Faith's Hospital	October 1981
City and East London	Aldersbrook Hospital	October 1981
City and East London	Queen Mary's Hospital, Newham	October 1981
City and East London	St. Mary's Hospital, Newham	October 1981
SOUTH WEST THAMES
Merton and Sutton	Wimbledon Hospital	October 1981
WESSEX
Hampshire	Winchfield Hospital	January 1981
Wiltshire	St. Martin's Hospital	April 1981
OXFORD

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
Oxfordshire	St. Mary's Hospital	July 1981
WEST MIDLANDS
Warwickshire	St. Mary's Hospital, Harborough Magna	October 1981
Wolverhampton	Queen Victoria Nursing Institute	May 1981
MERSEY
Chester	Tadley Hostel	December 1981
Crewe	Wrenbury Hostel	December 1981
Sefton	Fleetwood Road Hospital	October 1981
Wirral	Leasowe Hospital	January 1981
Wirral	Victoria Central Hospital, Surgical Unit	January 1981
NORTH WESTERN
Trafford	Urmston Cottage Hospital	July 1981
(iv) Hospitals, approved locally for complete closure 1982
NORTHERN
Durham	Langley Park Smallpox Hospital	September 1982
TRENT
Leicestershire	Markfield Hospital	May 1982
North Derbyshire	Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital	October 1982
North Lincolnshire	Alexandra Hospital, Woodhall Spa	January 1982
North Lincolnshire	Foxby Hill Hospital, Gainsborough	July 1982
NORTH EAST THAMES
Camden and Islington	City of London Maternity Hospital	April 1982
Camden and Islington	Whittington Home	April 1982
Enfield	Enfield War Memorial Hospital	October 1982
SOUTH EAST THAMES
Dartford and Gravesham	Joyce Green Hospital	May 1982
Tunbridge Wells	Mawsell House, Tunbridge Wells	December 1982
SOUTH WESTERN
Cornwall and Isles of Scilly	Perranporth Hospital	September 1982
WEST MIDLANDS
Shropshire	Ludlow and District Hospital	September 1982
Worcester and District	South Bank Nursing Home	April 1982
MERSEY
Macclesfield	Collar House, Prestbury	December 1982
NORTH WESTERN
Bolton	Havercroft Free Discharge Unit, Bolton	February 1982
Stockport	Marple Dale Hospital, Stockport	January 1982
Thameside and Glossop	Apsland Maternity Home, Salford	June 1982
(v) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure 1983
NORTHERN
South Cumbria	Kendal Green	August 1983
South Cumbria	Meathop	August 1983
South Cumbria	Westmoreland County	August 1983
YORKSHIRE
Dewsbury	Batley General	July 1983
Dewsbury	Dewsbury General	July 1983
Dewsbury	Mirfields Memorial	July 1983
Harrogate	Carlton Lodge Maternity	December 1983
Harrogate	Thistle Hill	September 1983
Leeds Western	Leeds Maternity	February 1983
Leeds Western	Leeds Hospital for Women	February 1983
TRENT
Leicester	Zachary Merton Recovery Home	June 1983
North Derbyshire	Ashgate Maternity Home	January 1983
North Derbyshire	Ashgate Annex E	June 1983
North Derbyshire	Morton	April 1983
South Derbyshire	Blakeley	March 1983
South Derbyshire	Draycott	March 1983
South Lincolnshire	Boston General	March 1983
EAST ANGLIAN
Cambridge	Mill Road Maternity	February 1983

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
East Suffolk	St. Helens	September 1983
Huntingdon	Huntingdon County	September 1983
Peterborough	Butterfield	March 1983
North West Thames
North Hertfordshire	North Hertfordshire Maternity Hospital	November 1983
Victoria	All Saints Hospital	December 1983
Victoria	Vincent Square Day Hospital	December 1983
North East Thames
Bloomsbury	Royal National Orthopaedic	October 1983
North East Essex	Clacton Maternity	February 1983
North East Essex	Essex Hall	July 1983
South East Thames
Brighton	Newhaven Valley	June 1983
Lewisham and Southwark	St. John's	June 1983
Tunbridge Wells	Hawkenbury	July 1983
South West Thames
Croydon	Waddon Hospital	October 1983
Wessex
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire	Sandy Point	November 1983
Salisbury	Fordingbridge Cottage	September 1983
Oxford
East Berkshire	Farnham Park Rehabilitation Centre	November 1983
Oxfordshire	Neithrop and Pines	December 1983
West Berkshire	Henley War Memorial	December 1983
South Western
Frenchay	Leigh Court	June 1983
Plymouth	Alexander Maternity Home	March 1983
Plymouth	Greenbank	March 1983
West Midlands
Dudley	The Limes	December 1983
Dudley	*Prestwood	December 1983
North Western
North Manchester	Memorial Jewish	December 1983
Board of Governors (Queen Charlotte's)	St. Leonard-on-Sea Convalescent Home	November 1983

(vi) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure January 1984—December 1984

Northern
Northumberland	Stannington Children's Hospital	February 1984
South Tees	Belmont	November 1984
Yorkshire
Grimsby	Springfield Hospital	March 1984
Wakefield	Snapethorpe Hospital	March 1984
Harrogate	Thistle Hill Hospital	October 1984
Trent
Central Nottinghamshire	Debdale Hall Recovery Home	February 1984
North Lincolnshire	Lawn Hospital	February 1984
Doncaster	Swallownest	July 1984
North Derbyshire	Darley Hall Maternity	September 1984
	Corbor Hall Maternity Home	October 1984
Nottingham	Coppice Hospital	December 1984
Rotherham	Aughton Court Hospital	September 1984
Sheffield	Scott Road and Commonside Hostels	October 1984
Southern Derbyshire	Derwent Hospital	October 1984
East Anglian
Norwich	The Vale	May 1984
	Blofield Hall	September 1984
North West Thames
Paddington and North Kensington	Hereford Lodge	July 1984

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
Hillingdon	St. John's Hospital	October 1984
	Lugano Nursing Home	May 1984
SOUTH WEST THAMES
Merton and Sutton	Cheam Hospital	April 1984
North West Surrey	Murray House, Ottershaw	April 1984
East Surrey	Bletchingley Hospital	July 1984
Mid-Downs	Raffey Park	October 1984
Wandsworth	Royal Dental Hospital	September 1984
WESSEX
Winchester	Tichbourne Down House Hospital	April 1984
Bath	Winsley Centre	November 1984
OXFORD
Oxfordshire	Longworth	March 1984
Northampton	Upton Lawn Day Hospital	October 1984
East Berkshire	Canadian Red Cross Memorial Hospital	November 1984
SOUTH WESTERN
Somerset	Wellington Maternity Home	March 1984
Gloucester	Cotswold Hospital	November 1984
WEST MIDLANDS
Bromsgrove and Redditch	Blackwell Recovery Hospital	March 1984
Herefordshire	Tupsley Hospital	February 1984
Mid-Staffordshire	Yarnfield Hospital	April 1984
North-Staffordshire	Biddulph Grange Orthopaedic Hospital	February 1984
	Leek Memorial Hospital	February 1984
	Lymewood Hospital	February 1984
	Westcliff Hospital	February 1984
South Birmingham	Birmingham Accident Hospital	May 1984
Worcester and District	St. Wulstan's Hospital	June 1984
Wolverhampton	Parkfields Hospital	November 1984
MERSEY
Liverpool	Newsham General Hospital	March 1984
	Heswall Hospital	November 1984
Wirral	Priory Day Hospital	October 1984
NORTH WESTERN
South Manchester	Duchess of York Hospital	March 1984
(vii) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure January 1985-March 1985
TRENT
South Lincolnshire	Carey House	January 1985
NORTH EAST THAMES
Bloomsbury	Royal Throat, Nose and Ear	January 1985
(viii) Hospitals approved locally for complete closure April 1985-June 1985
YORKSHIRE
York	Naburn
NORTH WEST THAMES
South Bedfordshire	Priory
SOUTH WEST THAMES
Richmond, Twickenham and Roehampton	Westmoor House
WESSEX
Isle of Wight	Longford
SOUTH WESTERN
Gloucester	Horton Road	June 1985
MERSEY
Southport and Formby	Sunnyside	April 1985
NORTHERN
Northumberland	Castle Hills Maternity Unit	November 1985
SOUTH WEST THAMES
North West Surrey	Rowley Bristow	October 1985

Region and Area—District	Hospital	Date approved
SOUTH WESTERN
Southmead	Elizabeth Blackwell House	December 1985
WEST MIDLANDS
Kidderminster and District	Lea	November 1985
Hospitals approved locally for complete closure 1986
YORKSHIRE
East Yorkshire	Northfield, Duffield	July 1986
Scunthorpe	Westfield	July 1986
Scarborough	St. Thomas	January 1986
Bradford	Children's	July 1986
Wakefield	County	June 1986
EAST ANGLIAN
West Norfolk and Wisbech	St. James	Closed September 1986
NORTH WEST THAMES
Barnet	Hendon District	April 1986
Riverside	Banstead	September 1986
NORTH EAST THAMES
Tower Hamlets	Bethnal Green	May 1986
SOUTH EAST THAMES
Bromley	Lennard	May 1986
	Beckenham	June 1986
SOUTH WEST THAMES
Croydon	Queens Hospital	March 1986
	St. Marys	March 1986
WESSEX
Winchester	Victoria	October 1986
Bath	Claverton Down	January 1986
Portsmouth and South East Hampshire	King George's	January 1986
NORTH WESTERN
Chorley and South Ribble	Heath Charnock	February 1986

Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1979-86 (August)

Region/District	Hospital	Date approved
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1980
TRENT
Sheffield	Middlewood	June 1980
Nottinghamshire	Newstead	March 1980
EAST ANGLIAN
Suffolk	Newmarket General	November 1980
NORTH WEST THAMES
Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster	Athlone House	November 1980
MERSEY
Cheshire	Cranford Lodge	August 1980
Liverpool	Radiotherapy Clinic	January 1980
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1981
TRENT
Nottinghamshire	Highbury	May 1981
OXFORD
Berkshire	Canadian Red Cross	February 1981
Oxfordshire	Longworth	January 1981
WESSEX
Hampshire	King George's	January 1981
Wiltshire	Royal United	April and September 1981
	St. Martin's	April 1981

Region/District	Hospital	Date approved
MERSEY
Wirral	Highfield Maternity	July 1981
	St. Catherine's	July 1981
	Clatterbridge	July 1981
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1982
EAST ANGLIAN
West Norfolk and Wisbech	Bowthorpe	May 1982
West Suffolk	St. Leonard's, Sudbury	November 1982
NORTH WEST THAMES
Brent and Harrow	Shenley	February 1982
North West Herts	Harpenden Memorial	October 1982
NORTH EAST THAMES
Enfield	Highlands	October 1982
Camden and Islington	Hornsey Central	February 1982
Tower Hamlets	Bethnal Green	September 1982
SOUTH EAST THAMES
West Lambeth	South Western	December 1982
MERSEY
Liverpool	Royal Liverpool Children's	November 1982
Macclesfield	Collar House	December 1982
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1983
YORKSHIRE
Leeds Western	Leeds General Infirmary	February 1983
TRENT
Leicestershire	Ellen Towle	June 1983
	Leicestershire Royal Infirmary	June 1983
	Groby Road	June 1983
North Derbyshire	Walton	April 1983
NORTH WEST THAMES
North Bedfordshire	Park	December 1983
Victoria	Banstead	December 1983
NORTH EAST THAMES
Waltham Forest	Whipps Cross	August 1983
WEST MIDLANDS
Dudley	The Guest	December 1983
	Burton Road	December 1983
	Wordsley	December 1983
	The Corbett	December 1983
East Birmingham	Yardley Green Unit	October 1983
Mid-Staffordshire	Chase, Cannock	November 1983
Walsall	St. Margaret's	February 1983
MERSEY
Macclesfield	Congleton War Memorial	February 1983
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1984
NORTHERN
South Tees	Middlesbrough General	September 1984
	Poole	March 1984
YORKSHIRE
Harrowgate	Scotton Banks	October 1984
TRENT
Central Nottinghamshire	Forest	February 1984
	Victoria	February 1984
NORTH WEST THAMES
Hounslow and Spelthorne	West Middlesex	September 1984
	Ashford	September 1984
North Bedfordshire	Clapham	January 1984
Victoria	St. Stephen's	September 1984
	Westminster	September 1984
	Banstead	March 1984

Region/District	Hospital	Date approved
NORTH EAST THAMES
Enfield	Highlands	July 1984
	Highlands	July 1984
SOUTH WESTERN
Gloucester	Lydney and District	February 1984
WEST MIDLANDS
North Birmingham	Highcroft	May 1984
South Warwickshire	Warenford General	August 1984
	Stratford General	August 1984
MERSEY
Liverpool	Newsham	July 1984
	St. Paul's (Eye)	July 1984
	Alderney Children's	July 1984
Hospitals approved locally for partial closure 1985
YORKSHIRE
Scunthorpe	Brumby	March 1985
EAST ANGLIAN
Norwich	St. Andrew's	November 1985
	Kelling	Early 1985
NORTH WEST THAMES
Ealing	Ealing	February 1985
North West Herts	Harpenden	March 1985
Paddington and North Kensington	St Charles	February 1985
SOUTH WEST THAMES
West Surrey-NE Hampshire	Farnham	January 1985
OXFORD
Aylesbury Vale	Tindal	March 1985
WEST MIDLANDS
Walsall	St. Margaret's	December 1985
Hospital approved locally for partial closure 1986—to August
NORTHERN
North Tees	North Tees General	March 1986
TRENT
Southern Derbyshire	Pastures Grange Children's Unit	April 1986
Leicestershire	Market Harborough and District	June 1986
	Rutland Memorial	June 1986
	St Mary's, Melton Mowbray	June 1986
	Ashby de la Zouch and District	June 1986
EAST ANGLIAN
Norwich	Hales	March 1986
NORTH WEST THAMES
Riverside	St. Stephen's	May 1986
NORTH EAST THAMES
Basildon and Thurrock	Orsett	N/A
City and Hackney	St. Bartholomew's	August 1986
SOUTH EAST THAMES
Bromley	Beckenham	May 1986

Health Authorities (Resources)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how his Department calculates the weighted population share for allocation of capital resources to regional health authorities;

(2) in allocating capital resources to regional health authorities to what factors he has regard in addition to the weighted population share.

Mr. Newton: The method of calculating weighted populations for capital allocations is based on the recommendations of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) in its report "Sharing Resources for Health in England"—Her Majesty's Stationery Office, 1976.

The base data are regional health authority managed populations projected five years ahead of the year of allocation. The populations are then weighted separately for each of six main service blocks—non-psychiatric in-patients, day and out-patients, mental illness in-patients, mental handicap in-patients, community health and ambulance services—to reflect the differential use made of hospital and community health services by people of different ages and sexes. The weighted populations for the six service blocks are then combined to form an aggregated weighted population for each region.

RAWP's recommendations also aimed to take account of the existing distribution of capital stock. Thus, in addition to weighted population shares, the formula included some allowance for the disparity in the distribution of regions' inherited capital stock. After consultation with health authorities in 1983, it was agreed that, because of technical difficulties, the stock equalisation element of the formula should be phased out over the period 1985-86 to 1991-92. Thereafter, capital RAWP allocations will be based exclusively on regions' weighted population shares.

Other capital allocations outside RAWP are as follows:

1. Joint finance capital and inner cities bias capital: allocated according to RAWP weighted population with some modifications.

2. Dental hospital re-equipment grant: a flat rate allowance per dental hospital.

3. Teaching hospital schemes: 35 per cent of the NHS cost of teaching hospital capital schemes is met by central pre-emption.

4. Special and development schemes: Ministers take decisions on individual schemes or initiatives—for example, regional secure units.

5. Urban programme.

Local authorities submit programmes for consideration to locally based joint consultative committees for recommendations to the Department of the Environment. This Department is notified of Department of the Environment decisions and allocates funds accordingly for the total health authority cost of approved projects within the year(s) the expenditure is incurred.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any press releases issued by the Health Education Council are referred for approval to his Department.

Mr. Newton: No.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what safeguards will be instituted to ensure the independence of the special health authority to be set up following the abolition of the Health Education Council.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend will look to the new authority to provide independent advice to him on matters concerning health education and promotion. It will, as does the Health Education Council, carry out its work within the overall framework of ministerial policies and priorities.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received severe weather additions in Leyton and Leytonstone last winter; and how many people will be eligible for such payments at the appropriate temperature under the new arrangements.

Mr. Major: The London boroughs of Leyton and Leytonstone are dealt with by the Department's office at Lemna road, Leytonstone. This office made a total of 432 payments for extra fuel consumed during the period of exceptionally severe weather last winter.

Information about the number of people in the area who would be eligible under the proposed new criteria is not available, since it would depend, among other things, on claimants' capital holdings at the date of claim.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has anything to add to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 580, about health authorities with cervical cancer screening schemes in operation on 31 March in respect of Brent district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: On 31 March 1986 Brent was operating a cervical cancer screening scheme backed up by a limited computer system. Since 30 September Brent and Harrow have been operating a joint computerised scheme by arrangement with their corresponding family practitioner committees. I am glad that this has enabled women in Harrow to benefit from the scheme sooner than had been anticipated.

Derriford Hospital, Plymouth

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when construction work was completed on those wards at Derriford hospital, Plymouth, whose opening was announced in a press release on 28 November.

Mrs. Currie: Construction work on the shell of the building was completed in 1979 and the first wards were fitted out and opened in 1981 when 205 beds were commissioned, later increased to 347. Fitting out of the remaining wards is now all but completed. Together with the wards opened in November this will allow a further 300 beds or so to be brought into use over the next 20 months, and the regional health authority plans to have brought into use some 650 beds in the new podium and tower block at Derriford by the middle of 1988.

Local Office Staff, Hornchurch

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has delayed the moving of his staff, currently working in North street, Hornchurch, and Main road, Romford, into the new offices in North street, Hornchurch; and when he now expects to be able to house all those staff serving the constituents of the hon. Member for Hornchurch within that constituency.

Mr. Lyell: In August 1986 the Property Services Agency was unable to enter into a commitment with the developer to provide a new office for DHSS staff in Hornchurch because of a lack of funds. Following an increase in staff to be accommodated the options to provide rehousing are being examined further. I will let my hon. Friend have a fuller reply as soon as further information is available.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average cost separately for acute, chronic and geriatric beds in each of the regional health authorities in England; if he will give the highest and lowest cost in each category of bed in each of the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information is not collected centrally in this form. The cost returns submitted by health authorities to the Department show average costs per in-patient day for hospitals of different types but do not distinguish between different categories of beds within hospitals.

Copies of the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" which summarise by region the information collected from health authorities are held in the Library.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each health authority in each year since 1979 the total number of hospital beds and the number of acute beds.

Mrs. Currie: For the total number of beds in each district health authority in each year since 1979, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 24 November at columns 98 to 106. I shall let the hon. Member have such information on acute beds as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the revenue spending and the capital spending of each health authority in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: This information is given in the booklet "Health Authorities' Annual Accounts — National Summary (England)" prepared annually by the Department. Copies are available in the Library. The most recent edition is for 1984-85. The summary for 1985-86 will be available shortly. For 1979-80, the booklet gives only regional totals and I will write to the hon. Member with the individual health authority figures for that year.

The booklets do not include figures for special health authorities providing central services. These appear as part of the statutory summarised accounts of health authorities which are published annually as a House of Commons paper—for 1984-85, as Paper No. 411 of 1985-86.

NHS (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what sources of information are used in the compilation of National Health Service waiting lists for (a) in-patient and (b) out-patient treatment; what assessment he has made of the accuracy of these figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information on waiting lists for out-patient treatment is not collected centrally. In-patient waiting list figures are collected centrally three times a year; on the district statistical return SBH 203 which records the position at 31 March and 30 September, and on the hospital return SH 3 at 31 December. The waiting list returns are validated by the Department in consultation with health authorities to eliminate obvious recording errors. About two fifths of those admitted from the waiting list know in advance the date they expect to be admitted. The waiting list contains an unknown proportion of people who no longer require treatment but whose names have not yet been removed.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the deadline for the submission of applications by married women for invalid care allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 4 December at column 735.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many surveys have been made by his Department of the observance of the current voluntary agreement on advertising tobacco.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 1 December at columns 534-35.

Family Practitioner Committee Administrators

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to which grades in health authority management the salary scales for family practitioner committee administrators most closely approximate.

Mr. Newton: Family practitioner committee administrator posts are graded under a National Health Service Administrative and Clerical Staffs Whitley council agreement on one of the senior assistant secretary scales —scales 23, 27, and 29.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to enable all nurses to be routinely vaccinated against the blood-borne disease hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation advises the Department on all aspects of vaccination. The JCVI's current advice on vaccination against hepatitis B is set out in the memorandum "Immunisation against Infectious Disease" which was issued to all doctors. It recommends that a number of categories of health care personnel, including nurses, should be considered for this vaccine.

At its meeting last month the JCVI discussed proposals for revising its guidance on hepatitis B vaccine and has now made recommendations to the Department. These are now being considered urgently.

NHS (Speech Therapists)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social services what assessment he has made of the implications for the National Health Service pay and personnel policies of the recent finding of the industrial tribunal in a case brought by three speech therapists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the health authorities involved in the preliminary hearing have not yet received the formal judgment.

Hospital and Community Health Services

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual percentage change since 1970 in actual input volumes for the hospital and community health sector of the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The tables set out annual percentage changes in the purchasing power of total gross current and capital expenditure in the hospital and community health service in England since 1972-73. Figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Figures for current expenditure expressed on this basis do not give a reliable measure of real terms growth in the service as they do not reflect the increasing level of resources being released by health authorities' cost improvement programmes. Nor do they reflect the improvements in productivity which have seen the numbers of patients treated rising steadily.

Hospital and community health service, gross current expenditure changes after NHS pay and prices (per cent.)

	Per cent.
1972-73	4·6
1973-74	3·6
1974-75	[1]4·2
1975-76	1·7
1976-77	0·3
1977-78	3·0
1978-79	[2]2·5
1979-80	−0·6
1980-81	3·0
1981-82	2·0
1982-83	0·8
1983-84	0·0
1984-85	−0·1
1985-86	0·2

[1] NHS reorganisation in 1974 incorporated community health services with the hospital service.

[2] Figures from 1978-79 are on a slightly different accounting basis and exclude Family Practitioner Committee administration costs.

Hospital and community health service, gross capital expenditure changes after NHS pay and prices (per cent.)[1]

	Per cent.
1972-73	17·9
1973-74	4·8
1974-75	−17·7
1975-76	0·3
1976-77	−2·6
1977-78	−22·1
1978-79	2·6
1979-80	−8·1
1980-81	9·1
1981-82	16·3
1982-83	1·5
1983-84	1·6
1984-85	8·7
1985-86	3·9

[1] Including proceeds of land sales.

Drugs (Transfer Pricing)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the Binder Hamlyn report into the question of drug companies transfer pricing.

Mr. Newton: No. This report was produced for internal use and guidance in the Department and was not intended for publication.

Consultants (Waiting Times)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for each main specialty between general practitioner reference and first appointment with the consultant in each district health authority area.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Information on waiting time for out-patient appointments is not collected centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial resources have been allocated by his Department for research into vaccine prevention of acquired immune deficiency syndrome and cures for those at present suffering from the disease.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 1 December at columns 525-26.

Low-income Families

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will retabulate the data on low-income families given in the answer of 25 July on a male-female basis according to the following age groups: under pension age, less than 20, 20 to 29, 30 to 44 and 45 plus years; and over pension age, 60 to 64, 65 to 69, 70 to 79 and 80 plus years.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Wessex RHA (Computer Contract)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each tender submitted to Wessex regional health authority in relation to the computer contract subsequently awarded to Arthur Andersen and Co. (a) the name of the tenderer, (b) the tender price and (c) the date the tender was received; and if he will give the closing date for tenders as originally set by the regional health authority.

Mr. Newton: The recent Wessex regional health authority computer procurement was for three separate sub-systems forming part of the new regional information system: accounts, hospital information and manpower.

The companies that tendered for each sub-system were as follows:

Accounts
- Arthur Andersen & Co. Ltd.
- Digital Equipment Co. Ltd.
- ICL (UK) Ltd.
- Istel Ltd.
- McDonnell Douglas Information Systems Ltd.
- Package Programs Ltd.

Hospital information
- Arthur Andersen & Co. Ltd.
- British Medical Data Systems Ltd.
- ICL (UK) Ltd.
- McDonnell Douglas Information Systems Ltd.
- NCR Ltd.

Manpower
- Arthur Andersen & Co. Ltd.
- Digital Equipment Co. Ltd.
- ICL (UK) Ltd.
- Hewlett Packard
- McDonnell Douglas Information Systems Ltd.
- Package Programmes Ltd.

All bids were received by the closing dates for tenders which were 16 December 1985 for the accounts and manpower systems and 13 January 1986 for hospital information: they were opened and witnessed on those dates in accordance with the authority's standing orders.

Tender prices are submitted in commercial confidence and it is not the practice to publish unsuccessful bids.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services is he will place in the Library the terms of reference established by Wessex regional health authority for the tendering for the computer contract awarded to Arthur Andersen and Co.

Mr. Newton: I am arranging for copies of the following Wessex regional health authority documents to be placed today in the Library:

Invitation to tender for the hospital information system.
Invitation to tender for the manpower and personnel system.
Invitation to tender for the accounting system.
User requirement for a hospital information system.
User requirement for a manpower and personnel system.

These documents were issued to all tenderers in the region's recent computer procurement.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps were taken to ensure that the awarding of the computer contract to Arthur Andersen and Co. by Wessex regional health authority fully complied with the code of practice for the use of computer consultants and software houses by Government Departments issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency; and if he will place the code of practice in the Library.

Mr. Newton: I understand that the guidance to which the hon. Member refers was issued in 1973 by the former Central Computer Agency and has been largely superseded by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency's "IT Management Guide". Both documents are already available for consultation in the Library, but neither applies to the National Health Service.

Computer procurements undertaken by health authorities are subject instead to the "Guidance on Computer Hardware and Software Procurement and Contractual Procedures" issued by the Department. It was for the Wessex regional health authority to ensure that its recent procurement fully complied with this guidance and it has given an assurance that it did so.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the incidence of sickle cell anaemia by ethnic grouping.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 27 November 1986; c. 357]: The incidence of sickle cell anaemia in different ethnic groups is very variable. While it is extremely rare in people of northern European extraction it is of significance in Afro-Caribbean, eastern Mediterranean and Asian polulations.

In certain Afro-Caribbean and eastern Mediterranean communities the proportion of people who carry the gene for sickle cell anaemia, but who do not have the disease, can vary from one person in 10 to one person in three. Amongst Asian populations the proportion may vary from one person in 100 to one person in three. These gene frequencies amongst these communities may give rise to proportions of people who have sickle cell anaemia that range from one person in 40,000 to one person in 40.

Junior Hospital Staff

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ratio of junior hospital staff up to and including senior registrars to consultant staff, excluding associate specialists, in each of the recognised specialties in each of the English health regions in the year for which the latest figures are available.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986; c. 736]: I regret that information in the precise form requested could be provided only at disproportinate cost. Information on the ratio of junior hospital staff to consultants for each specialty for England as a whole, and for each region for medical and dental specialties as a whole, is set out in the tables. Information on the number of staff in each grade by region and specialty, from which ratios for particular combinations of region and specialty could be calculated, is set out in the publications "Hospital Medical Staff — England and Wales" and "Hospital Dental Staff—England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. This information must be interpreted with caution. The desirable ratio will widely vary between specialties and will depend on such factors as the expected rate of consultant expansion, the age distribution of the consultant stock, the length of time required for specialist training, and the extent to which the specialty contributes to general training for other hospital disciplines or for general practice. Some variation between regions may also be expected, for instance because of historical differences in the distribution of medical schools.

Table 1

Hospital medical and dental staff in post at 30 September 1985 England: Analysis by specialty showing ratio of junior hospital staff[1] to consultants[2]

Specialty	Junior doctor Consultants ratio[3]
All specialties Total	1·67
All medical specialties	1·68
General medicine	3·11
Cardiology	1·86
Endocrinology	1·52
Gastroenterology	1·08
Nephrology	1·75
Thoracic Medicine	1·56
Geriatric Medicine	2·39
Audiological Medicine	0·72
Clinical genetics	0·17
Clinical neurological physiology	0·22
Clinical pharmacology and therapeutics	0·76
Clinical physiology	0·31
Dermatology	0·66
Genito-urinary medicine	0·80
Medical oncology	2·62
Infectious diseases	2·32
Neurology	1·17
Occupational health	0·03
Rheumatology	0·84
Other	2·28
Paediatrics	2·51

Specialty	Junior doctor Consultants ratio[3]
Paediatric neurology	0·24
Accident and emergency	8·18
General surgery	2·90
Cardio-thoracic surgery	1·92
Otolaryngology	1·47
Neurosurgery	1·72
Ophthalmology	1·35
Paediatric surgery	2·06
Plastic surgery	1·39
Traumatic and Orthopaedic surgery	1·91
Urology	1·27
Obstetrics and gynaecology	2·61
Anaesthetics	1·13
Radiology	0·51
Nuclear medicine	0·34
Radiotherapy	1·21
Blood transfusion	0·18
Chemical pathology	0·74
Haematology	0·71
Histopathology	0·50
Immuno-pathology	0·30
Medical microbiology	0·63
Neuropathology	0·61
Mental Illness	1·68
Child adolescent psychiatry	0·41
Forensic psychiatry	0·36
Mental Handicap	0·62
Psychotherapy	0·73
All dental specialties	1·37
Oral surgery	1·77
Orthodontics	0·68
Restorative dentistry	1·26
Paediatric dentistry	2·04

[1] Senior registrar, registrars, senior house officer as house officer/dental house officer.
[2] Including senior hospital medical/dental officers with allowance.
[3] Ratio of number of staff expressed in whole-time equivalents.

Table 2
Hospital medical and dental staff in post at 30 September 1985 in England: Analysis by region showing ratio of junior hosptial[1] staff to consultants[2]

	Junior doctor/ consultants ratio[3]
ENGLAND[4]	1·67
Northern	1·58
Yorkshire	1·63
Trent	1·94
East Anglian	1·46
N W Thames	1·92
N E Thames	1·64
S E Thames	1·79
S W Thames	1·57
Wessex	1·28
Oxford	1·64
South Western	1·54
West Midlands	1·62
Mersey	1·88
North Western	1·73
SHAs/for the London postgraduate Teaching Hospitals	1·46

[1] Senior registrar, registrar, senior house officer and house officer/dental house officer.
[2] Including senior hospital medical/dental officers with allowance.
[3] Ratio of number of doctors expressed as whole-time equivalents.
[4] Including the Special Health Authorities for the London postgraduate Teaching Hospitals.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Coaches

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now take steps to ensure that powers are made available to the Metropolitan police to take action against coach drivers who abandon their coaches with their engines running.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is an offence under the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 to leave a motor vehicle unattended on a road unless the engine is stopped except in specified circumstances. It is also an offence to leave a vehicle on the road in contravention of parking restrictions irrespective of whether the engine is left running. The Commissioner has informed me that his officers take appropriate enforcement action where offences are detected.

Breath Tests

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to empower the police to conduct random breath tests on drivers during the Christmas period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The courts have held that a constable may, under section 159 of the Road Traffic Act 1972, stop vehicles at random in order then to decide whether there are grounds for requiring a sample of breath for testing. A sample may be required where the constable has reasonable cause to suspect that the motorist has alcohol in his body; that he has committed a traffic offence while the vehicle was moving; or that he has been involved in an accident. The Association of Chief Police Officers has stated that these powers are sufficient to allow the law to be enforced effectively, and the Government have no plans to amend the legislation.

Leicestershire Constabulary

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in favour of an increase in the establishment for Leicestershire constabulary in addition to any savings in manpower as a result of the civilianisation of some posts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Leicestershire policy authority made an application in June for an increase of 110 police posts, to which I responded by saying that, before any consideration could be given to further increases in the police establishment, the force should carry out a review to identify posts held by police officers which could more appropriately be filled by civilians. I have received no representations about that response, and I understand that the review is in hand and that the police authority has approved proposals for the civilianisation of 43 posts in this financial year to release that number of police officers to operational duties.

Police (Public Houses)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards schemes promoted by some police forces in conjunction with brewery companies whereby one member of a group attending a public houses is designated to drive and to refrain from consuming alcohol; if he has any plans to seek to extend this scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Like the police service, I welcome initiatives of this nature aimed at fostering more responsible attitudes towards drinking and driving.

Fire Brigades (Recruitment)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which local fire and civil defence authorities in England he has advised to implement a recruitment freeze of operational firefighters in their fire brigade from the financial year starting 1 April 1987 onwards; and whether he will list the fire brigades affected and estimate the number of firefighter posts in each brigade that will be lost.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

London Fire Brigade

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish information on the current locations of the London fire brigade's reserve fleet of fire appliances.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The location of the reserve pumping and special appliances, as at June 1986, is as follows:

Area Command	Pumps	Specials
north	14	2
north-east	15	2
north-west	16	1
south-east	16	1
south-west	12	1

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the percentage of the station ground of the former B25 Pageants Wharf fire station of the London fire brigade that is now in the station ground of (a) B24 Dockhead fire station, (b) B26 Old Kent Road fire station, (c) Deptford fire station and (d) B29 New Cross fire station of the London fire brigade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the date of, and give reasons for, closure of B25 Pageants wharf fire station of the London fire brigade, the number of fire appliances per type and establishment of firefighters per rank deployed at that fire station immediately prior to closure, the number of emergency calls received from that fire station's ground in the five years preceding closure, the risk categories of that station ground when closure was implemented and at present, and the fire stations at which each appliance and crew were redeployed when closure was implemented.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The London fire brigade closed B25 Pageants wharf fire station in 1965 on the grounds both of its age and condition which had rendered it uneconomical to maintain, and its unsuitability for changing operational needs. It housed prior to closure, two appliances, a pump escape and a pump. The adjoining stations which absorbed its station ground were (B27) Deptford and (B24) Dockhead fire stations. The present risk category of the station ground is A risk. The other information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Gavin Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide a detailed breakdown of the proposed 1987-88 budget for the London fire brigade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The proposed 1987-88 budget for the London fire brigade is a matter for the London fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost of replacing the Greater London council crest on the uniform buttons, fire appliances and fire engines of the London fire brigade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the London fire and civil defence authority that £7,000 has been approved for the preparatory work for a new crest. The cost of replacing the crest on such items as vehicles and uniforms has not been estimated. The new crest will only be introduced as new items of equipment come into service or existing ones are replaced.

Fire Stations (Closure)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish his criteria for accepting a proposal from a local fire authority under section 85 of the Local Government Act 1985 or section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 as amended by section 7 of the Fire Services Act 1959 for the closure of a fire station and also for the loss of a specialist and pumping appliance from a fire brigade.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Before approving a request by a fire authority to reduce its establishment of fire appliances, operational firefighters or by closing a fire station we would need to be satisfied that the proposal was consistent with the maintenance of the nationally recommended standards of fire cover and paid due regard to the need for such cover to be provided in the most economic and efficient manner.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report on the new arrangements for wheel clamping vehicles within central London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As from 1 December the Metropolitan police has employed private contractors to carry out the physical work of fixing wheel clamps to illegally parked vehicles. Each wheel clamping is authorised by a police constable. The area of the wheel clamping operation has remained the same but the number of wheel clamping teams operating has increased. The Metropolitan police expect the number of wheel clampings to rise from the previous 30,000 to 40,000 a year to around 100,000 a year.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy towards diplomatic vehicles D and X registered which are illegally parked; and in what circumstances a diplomat's car would be impounded or wheel clamped.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Illegal parking, whether by diplomats or others, is unacceptable. Procedures were introduced by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in May 1985 to deal with cases in which a large number of unpaid parking fixed penalties were incurred by a diplomat, and as a result the number of unpaid fixed penalties is now less than a quarter of their 1984 level. Vehicles bearing a D plate are not wheel clamped but are removed if they cause obstruction or danger. We expect removal fees to be paid in such cases. Vehicles bearing X plates, which do not denote an entitlement to full immunity, are wheel clamped or removed in the same way as any other vehicle.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wheel clamped vehicles have never been reclaimed by their registered owners since the wheel clamping order came into effect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Wheel clamping in central London commenced on 16 May 1983. The table shows the total number of wheel clamped vehicles which have not subsequently been reclaimed by their registered keeper or other authorised person in each year since wheel clamping began.

Year	Unclaimed vehicles
1983 (from 16 May 1983)	74
1984	741
1985	457
1986 (up to 2 December 1986)	304

Unclaimed Vehicles

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles impounded in the Metropolitan police area have never been reclaimed by their registered owners in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The table shows the number of vehicles removed to car pounds by the Metropolitan police (including those initially wheel clamped) which have not subsequently been reclaimed by their registered keeper or other authorised person in each year since 1980. The Commissioner has indicated that statistics in respect of unclaimed vehicles prior to 1980 are not available.

Year	Unclaimed vehicles
1980	1,140
1981	1,274
1982	1,810
1983	2,157
1984	2,069
1985	1,619
1986 (up to 2 December 1986)	1,646

News International Plant, Wapping

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the impact on crime figures in other parts of London of the deployment of Metropolitan police at the News International plant at Wapping.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not possible to say what effect police commitments in Wapping have had on the number of offences committed elsewhere in the Metropolitan police district.

999 Calls

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has been advised by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis of any threat to the capacity of the Metropolitan police to respond promptly to 999 calls.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has told me that he is concerned about difficulties in recruiting and retaining the technical staff who are responsible for running and maintaining certain support systems, including the 999 system. We are urgently looking for a solution to these difficulties.

Burglar Alarms

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many activations of burglar alarms in the Metropolitan police area were false alarms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that no records are kept for alarms signalled by bells only. The total number of alarm calls, and the number of those recorded as false, from systems whose signals go to the police direct or via central stations maintained by alarm companies in each year since 1979 are as follows:

Year	Total calls	False calls
1979	177,370	174,636
1980	177,919	175,610
1981	182,941	179,698
1982	186,123	182,870
1983	196,190	193,470
1984	210,213	208,078
1985	246,592	244,561
1986[1]	213,671	209,500

[1] To 1 November

Metropolitan Police (Accounting Methods)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what benefits have accrued to the Metropolitan police from the exchange of views with London borough treasurers on the accounting methods of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the consultations enable a frank and open exchange of views from which both sides benefit. In particular they have helped the Metropolitan police to identify financial information which the local authorities want. A proposal to change the basis of the accounts has been put forward by the borough treasurers and will be discussed with Home Office officials.

Criminals (Exchange Controls)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the potential of exchange controls as a means of limiting the ability of criminals, and in particular drug dealers, to move money out of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We do not consider that the imposition of exchange controls would be suitable for this purpose. Comprehensive provision for attacking the proceeds of drug trafficking is made in the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. This Act will require the Crown Court to confiscate a convicted drug trafficker's proceeds; will allow the restraint of suspected trafficker's property to prevent assets being concealed or transferred out of the jurisdiction; and opens the way to agreements between the United Kingdom and other countries enabling proceeds to be recovered from abroad. The Criminal Justice Bill now before this House contains similar provisions in relation to other forms of serious and profitable crime.

Weapons (Sale)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the Government towards the opening of further shops to sell guns and other weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Firearms Act 1968 requires chief officers of police to keep a register of firearms dealers and to issue a certificate of registration to each dealer which is renewable annually. Under section 34(2) of the Act, a chief officer may refuse to register an applicant if he is satisfied that the applicant cannot be permitted to carry on business as a firearms dealer without danger to the public safety or to the peace. Other sections of the Act empower a chief officer to impose conditions, for example relating to security, subject to which registration is to have effect, and to remove a person's name from the register and require him to surrender his certificate of registration. There are no plans to amend the legislation.

Football Grounds (Police Deployment)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the methods used for calculating charges levied upon football clubs for Metropolitan police deployed on football grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Charges are levied only in respect of officers deployed inside football grounds. The number of officers for each match is decided in consultation with the clubs. The charges to the club are based on basic staff costs plus a departmental charge and VAT.

Offenders (Maintenance Costs)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details in the Official Report as to the average weekly and annual cost of keeping an offender in the following categories of custody (a) detention centre, (b) maximum security and (c) remand.

Mr. David Mellor: The available information relates to closed youth establishments including detention centres, dispersal prisons and local prisons and remand centres. The average weekly and annual costs in 1985-86 of keeping a person in one of these categories of custody were as follows:

	Weekly £	Annual £
Closed youth establishments	267	13,937
Dispersal prisons	470	24,534
Local prisons and adult remand centres	225	11,745

Prison Sentences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report such information as is available to show the average sentence given, and the actual sentence served, for (a) rape, (b) attempted rape, (c) manslaughter, (d) occasioning grievous bodily harm and (e) murder in each of the past 10 years;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report such information as is available as to how the average time actually served in prison by offenders sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment, seven years' imprisonment, 10 years' imprisonment, 15 years' imprisonment, 20 years' imprisonment, 30 years' imprisonment and life imprisonment, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Motorists (Prosecutions)

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions were brought against motorists for crossing traffic lights on (a) red and (b) amber in the year (i) 1984 and (ii) 1985.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to total proceedings at magistrates' courts for offences of failing to comply with traffic signals (excluding those at pedestrian light controlled crossings) and is published annually in "Offences relating to motor vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary tables" (Table 5 of the issue for 1985), copies of which are in the Library. Details of the circumstances of these offences are not collected centrally.

London (Barrier Flood Plan)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the involvement of his Department in the Greater London council's post barrier flood plan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This subject is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment together with the Thames water authority.

London (Emergency Procedures)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what London-wide emergency procedures exist; and which authority is responsible for implementation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The emergency services and other organisations have responsibility for their specialised procedures and implementation as appropriate. The London Fire and Civil Defence Authority is responsible for civil defence under the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if medical checks made on incoming prisoners include a test for the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus.

Mr. Mellor: There is no statutory power to take blood in the absence of consent. A test to detect antibodies to the human immunodeficiency virus (the virus from which AIDS can develop) is considered only if an inmate requests one or if the medical officer judges a test to be clinically appropriate and the inmate concerned gives informed consent. In either circumstances the inmate will be counselled to ensure that he understands the full consequences of being identified as HIV antibody positive.

One purpose of the medical examination and inquiry to which all inmates are subject on first reception is to establish whether there is a history or risk of infectious disease calling for further investigation.

Football Grounds (Alcohol)

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to bring into force the relevant provision in the Public Order Act 1986 relating to the relaxing of current restrictions on the possession of alcohol in executive boxes and similar rooms at football grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Public Order Act 1986 (Commencement No. 1) Order 1986, schedule 1 to the Act, which contains this provision and other amendments to the Sporting Events (Control of Alcohol etc.) Act 1985, will come into effect on 1 January 1987. A number of other provisions, including in particular section 11 (advance notice of processions) and section 38 (contamination of, or interference with, goods with the intention of causing public alarm or anxiety, etc.) will come into force on the same day. We intend to bring most of the rest of the Act into force on 1 April 1987.

Greiss Test

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his letter of 11 September to the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills and his reply of 20 November to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), on what evidence it has become clear that the strength of caustic soda solution used by Dr. Skuse in the Greiss test on 22 November 1974 was almost certainly 0·1 per cent.

Mr. Mellor: Dr. Skuse told the present Director of the Chorley forensic laboratory in a telephone conversation on 15 January 1986, that he had used a solution strength of 0·1 per cent. The Director made a contemporaneous note of the conversation. Dr. Skuse gave the same information to the controller of the forensic science service in a separate telephone conversation. This conclusion was also supported by a guidance note which Dr. Skuse wrote, which refers to the use of a 0·1 per cent. strength solution, and which he circulated to colleagues in January 1975-February 1975.

However, as my hon. Friend will be aware, Dr. Black who gave evidence at the trial of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, has recently said that his recollection is that Dr. Skuse indicated to him that the solution strength was 1·0 per cent. The then Director of the Chorley forensic science laboratory has also said that the information which he gave to Mr. Baldock in May 1985 —in which he referred to the use of a solution strength of 1 per cent.—was based on information given to him by Dr. Skuse.

Cigarette Sales (Prosecutions)

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions for selling cigarettes to persons under 16 years of age there have been in the current year, and each of the preceding three years.

Mr. Mellor: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is published annually in "Criminal statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary tables, Volume 1" in Table S1.1(A), under offence classification 144. Figures for 1985 are not yet available.

CIVIL SERVICE

"Public Bodies 1986"

Sir Philip Holland asked the Minister for the Civil Service when he proposes to publish "Public Bodies 1986"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The planned publication date for "Public Bodies 1986" is Wednesday 17 December 1986.

THE ARTS

National Portrait Gallery

Mr. Faulds asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will take steps to acquire the site of the former Royal Dental hospital in Leicester square, to enable the National Portrait Gallery to extend the number of paintings on public display.

Mr. Luce: I have informed the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery that no public funds are available for the acquisition of the site of the former Royal Dental hospital in Leicester square.

The National Portrait Gallery will gain some 29 per cent. net additional space (to be used for a variety of purposes) when it moves into the Crown-leased Orange Street properties, which are being rented and refurbished with the help of public funds.

I am in touch with the trustees of the gallery about further action they might take on the matter.

News International

Mr. Dobson asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has anything to add to his answer on Monday 24 November, Official Report, column 13, when he stated that certain named local authorities had maintained their ban on News International newspapers in libraries in defiance of sound legal advice.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on Thursday, 3 December 1986 at column 729

Mr. Dobson: asked the Minister for the Arts what was the source of the information he gave in his answer on Monday 24 November Official Report, column 13, about News International newspapers in libraries.

Mr. Luce: Information regarding the lifting of the ban and the intentions of News International was obtained from the solicitors acting for News International and press reports.

Information about Camden, Ealing, and Hammersmith and Fulham having maintained their ban in defiance of advice received was obtained from the draft judgment of Lord Justice Watkins in the High Court judicial review proceedings brought by News International.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Nicholls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total tax revenues was paid by the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers in the years since 1973-74.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to income tax paid by individuals. Information is given in the table. The analysis is of single people and married couples and the quantiles are determined by reference to income tax liability. The figures are based on the surveys of personal income for years up to 1984-85. For subsequent years, they are based on projections from the 1984-85 survey and are therefore provisional.

Quantile shares of Income Tax

Per cent.

Year	Quantile group of tax units[1] Top 5 per cent.
1973-74	28·6
1974-75	26·9
1975-76	24·7
1976-77	24·6
1977-78	24·9
1978-79	24·0
1979-80	23·4
1980-81	24·4
1981-82	24·8
1982-83	25·4
1983-84	25·4
1984-85 provisional	26·0
1985-86 provisional	26·5
1986-87 provisional	27·0

[1]ie counting married couples as one and combining their incomes.

Public Spending

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of (a) the share of public spending going to the north-west region, (b) the per capita share of public spending going to the north-west region, and (c) the per capita share of public spending for the nation as a whole.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to take decisions on the range of options set out in the consultation document on value added tax input tax dated 7 August.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor hopes to make an announcement before the end of 1986.

Money Transactions

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances a financial institution is obliged by regulation to inform the police of international money transactions.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Bank of England Notes

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the guidelines relating to the use of reproductions of Bank of England notes are next due to be reviewed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: These guidelines are entirely a matter for the Bank of England.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report his latest estimate of the total loss to the Bank of England, arising out of its investment in Johnson Matthey Bankers.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is a matter for the Bank of England. As I indicated to the hon. Member on 28 November in cols. 581-2, the Bank's best estimate is that the total cost will not exceed £25 million and that this figure could be reduced by further recoveries in respect of the loan book and by the outcome of the claim against the former auditors of JMB.

Personal Debt

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the rise in the accumulated level of personal debt.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Statistics of personal sector debt are published in table 14.4 of "Financial Statistics". A finer breakdown of some categories of consumer credit is published in table 9·3.

Friendly Societies

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received the report from the steering group of friendly societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. Cartwright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people claim mortgage tax relief; how many of these people also claim the married man's tax allowance; how many of those people who do not claim the married man's tax allowance claim mortgage tax relief in respect of the same property as another person who claims mortgage tax relief; and how many of those people who do claim the married man's tax allowance claim mortgage tax relief in respect of the same property as another person who claims mortgage tax relief;

(2) on how many dwellings mortgage tax relief is claimed; on how many of these dwellings two or more unmarried people claim mortgage tax relief; and on how many such dwellings mortgage tax relief is claimed on more than £30,000;

(3) what is the estimated saving to the Exchequer of limiting mortgage tax relief to individual residences rather than to individual taxpayers as suggested in Cmnd. 9756.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 239]: In 1986-87 there are estimated to be 8·2 million mortgagors, of whom 1·7 million are single people and 6·5 million married couples.

Although firm information is not available, it is tentatively estimated that about 500,000 single people are involved in multiple borrower mortgages in respect of around 250,000 properties. The number of married couples involved in multiple borrower mortgages is thought to be very small. About 50,000 of these mortgages, involving around 100,000 individuals, are thought to exceed £30,000.

The estimated annual saving to the Exchequer of limiting mortgage interest relief to individual residences rather than individual taxpayers with a limit of £30,000 per property is about £15 million at 1986-87 levels of income and mortgage interest rates, assuming no consequential change in the distribution of mortgages outstanding.

Investment Depreciation

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on revenue which would follow from replacing the present 25 per cent. reducing balance method of depreciating investment for tax purposes by a 25 per cent. straight line system.

Mr. Lawson [pursuant to his reply, 2 December 1986, c. 598]: The effect on revenue would build up over a number of years and estimates depend crucially upon future levels of investment. The direct revenue cost in the peak year is tentatively estimated at £3·5 billion.

DEFENCE

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

Mr. Brinton asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to announce the results of the review of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I have now completed my review of Section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

Section 10 was included in the 1947 Act on the grounds that members of the Armed Forces, by the very nature of their profession, undertake hazardous tasks which ordinary members of the public do not. At that time it was believed that this provision would not result in any overall financial penalty against servicemen, because they received benefits, payable regardless of fault, which were in most cases comparable with those which a civilian might expect from the courts. Our review has, however, shown that damages which courts have awarded in some cases of personal injury have now risen to a level which can considerably exceed the benefits which the serviceman receives. The Government have concluded that repeal of section 10 is the only satisfactory course which will remove this disadvantage.

By having the right of access to the courts in personal injury cases, the serviceman will have a right—the right to sue the Crown—which his fellow citizens already enjoy. We recognise that it will be necessary to avoid any effect on the maintenance of discipline and the quality of military training. My Department will therefore stand behind any serviceman who was sued by another serviceman for alleged negligence arising out of the execution of his duties and in doing so would aim to place on record the peculiar hazards and difficulties to which a serviceman's life is subject. The existing system of benefits which are payable in cases of death or injury, regardless of fault, will be maintained.

We shall need to be able to reactivate the provisions of section 10 in the event of impending or actual hostilities or grave national emergency.

We do not propose that the repeal of section 10 should be made retrospective because of the principle that legislation is for the future and because it would be wrong to impose retrospective liability. There may, of course, be cases arising in respect of incidents between today and the eventual repeal of section 10 in which claims for compensation would be accepted but for the continuing operation of section 10. We intend that, once a Bill has become law, any valid claims falling into that category should be dealt with on an ex-gratia basis.

Because of the constraints of the legislative programme the Government are unable to introduce the necessary legislation in this Session. However, we would be ready to support a suitable Bill that might be brought by a private Member.

Radar Systems

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with siting an over-the-horizon radar system in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Member for Bosworth (Sir A. Butler) advised the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) and the right hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Stewart) on 21 December 1984 at column 378 and the same right hon. Member on 11 March 1985 at columns 56-57, the United Kingdom and the United States are collaborating in a joint programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting an over-the-horizon radar system in the United Kingdom. These studies are still continuing, and there are at present no firm plans for implementation.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the opportunities for private contractors in defence procurement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1979 increased defence expenditure and a more commercial approach on the part of MOD have created considerable opportunities for all sectors of British industry in defence procurement. To obtain best value for money and strengthen the defence industrial base, an increasing proportion of our requirements is met by competition for both direct and sub-contract work. We have taken a number of initiatives to widen the circle of knowledge and opportunity in defence procurement, including the recently launched MOD Contracts Bulletin advertising MOD contract opportunities, and the MOD small firms initiative.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received about maintaining nuclear weapons as a integral part of the British defence system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: On 3 December the House passed a motion in the names of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and other of my right hon. Friends by a substantial majority rejecting a non-nuclear defence policy for Britain. I am sure that the majority of British people take the same view.

Mounted Service Personnel (Headgear)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence what headgear mounted officers and troops are required to wear on mounted duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: For ceremonial duties officers and soldiers wear the head-dress appropriate to their full dress uniform. For non-ceremonial mounted duties all personnel are required to wear a protective skull cap of a pattern approved by the Army dress committee and complying with British Standard 4472.

Russian Submarine (Radiation Leaks)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent checks have been undertaken by Her Majesty's Government into possible radiation leaks from the Russian November class submarine sunk off the Scilly Isles in 1970.

Mr. Stanley: My Department has not conducted any checks for radiation leaks from the Russian November class submarine, which sank some 500 nautical miles off the Scilly Isles in 1970. I understand that the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food undertakes monitoring of levels of radioactivity in the coastal waters of the United Kingdom, and that this monitoring has not detected any radioactivity from the source referred to by the hon. Member. Reports on coastal monitoring undertaken by MAFF are published annually and placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the frequency with which the Russians check radiation levels from the nuclear submarine sunk off the Scilly Isles in 1970.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that after the sinking Soviet naval survey vessels guarded the immediate area almost continuously for about six months. Thereafter routine patrols were conducted but these ceased in 1979, after which only occasional visits were made. The purpose of the routine patrol and the subsequent occasional visits is not known.

Tucano Aircraft

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Tucano to be in service with the Royal Air Force as its basic trainer; what was the date originally planned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: Shorts advises that delivery of the first Tucano aircraft to the Royal Air Force will be in the spring of 1987. This represents a few months' slippage in the date originally planned.

Belize

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Defence what non-United Kingdom forces have had use of British facilities in Belize over the last three years.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986]: British facilities are used by the Belize defence force. So far as other foreign forces are concerned, records are available only for the last two years. In September 1986, both the BDF and British Forces Belize hosted a troop from the Bermuda Regiment during a two-week joint exercise. In February 1986 a sports team of United States service men from Panama visited the BDF and BFB. United States observers were invited to witness joint BDF/BFB exercises in January 1985, January 1986 and July 1986.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 9 December 1986

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General whether the book "Their Trade is Treachery" was referred to the D Notice Committee for consideration by all its members.

The Attorney-General: The question whether a particular book was referred to the D Notice Committee is not one for which I have responsibility.

Public Record Office

Mr. Latham asked the Attorney-General whether he will set out in tabular form for each of the last five years the annual Government funding in respect of the Public Record Office; and what has been the amount payable in each year to the Property Services Agency in respect of remedial works to the air-conditioning system at Kew.

The Attorney-General: The amounts voted by Parliament for the Public Record Office for the past five years are as follows:

	Gross	Appropriations in aid	Net
	£	£	£
1982-83	3,999,000	320,000	3,670,000
1983-84	8,939,000	443,000	8,496,000
1984-85	9,793,000	438,000	9,355,000
1985-86	10,940,000	453,000	10,487,000
1986-87	11,098,000	927,000	10,171,000

Since the introduction of the property repayment system in 1983-84, sums have been transferred to the Property Services Agency by the Public Record Office in respect of accommodation charges, works, and fuel and utilities for all its four sites. The payments are not otherwise attributed to specific purposes and it is not possible to identify separate elements relating to remedial works to the air-conditioning system at Kew. The total sums transferred are:

	£
1983-84	4,211,000
1984-85	4,055,000
1985-86	5,066,000
1986-87	5,119,000

These figures do not include £750,000 for the cost of the works to the Kew building arising from the 1984 review by Messrs. Donald Smith, Seymour and Rooley, which are to be borne on the Property Services Agency Votes.

ENVIRONMENT

Marine Nature Reserves

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the location of all the proposed or established marine nature reserves in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The first statutory marine nature reserve, at Lundy island, was announced on 21 November. The Nature Conservancy Council has identified six further potential reserves at Skomer, Menai, Bardsey, the Scilly isles, Loch Sween and St. Abbs head. Detailed consultations are continuing and it is hoped to designate more sites in 1987.

Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken within the last three years aimed at (a) encouraging industrialists to introduce environmentally sound technology on to existing production lines, (b) substitute more environmentally sound products in the place of ones found to be harmful and (c) ensure that new plant incorporates the best available technology to reduce the amount and toxicity of both the waste produced and the end product.

Mr. Waldegrave: Over the past three years the Government have supported the Pollution Abatement Technology Award Scheme. We are supporting the United Kingdom international pollution abatement fair and conference next year, and are grant-aiding production of a directory of products, services and ideas emerging from the environmental industry. The development of pollution abatement technology attracts grant aid from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry under the support for innovation scheme.

We have also co-operated with industry to develop environmentally-friendly products. Measures include the introduction of unleaded petrol, the progressive elimination of lead from decorative paint and a reduction in the organotin content of anti-fouling paint for boats.

The pollution inspectorates continue to require a high standard of pollution abatement in new plant; and we recently announced that all new coal-fired power stations must be fitted with acid-free technology to standards set by the Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate.

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to mark the 1987 United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to mark the 1987 United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

Mr. Tracey: Since the focus of the year is on assistance to developing countries, action to mark it is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Urban Economic Development

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans any new initiatives in policy towards urban economic development in the light of the findings of the Economic and Social Research Council in its publication "Critical Issues in Urban Economic Development"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has had extensive contacts with the ESRC in the course of their inner cities research programme. Its findings are taken into account in the development of policy, although none of the current urban initiatives is solely attributable to them.

Public Record Office, Kew

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the original cost to public funds of the construction of the Public Record Office at Kew; what part of that cost was represented by the expenditure on the air conditioning system; and what proportion of the original cost is the amount spent over the last five years on air conditioning.

Mr. Chope: The total cost to public funds was £10·4 million at 1977-78 outturn prices of which the amount falling on PSA's works vote was £8·3 million. The air conditioning plant cost £1·2 million. Over the last five years some £1·2 million (at cash prices), has been spent on the maintenance and operation of the system. This includes £800,000 normal routine maintenance.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out in tabular form for each year since 1977 the amount of money spent on remedial works to the Public Record Office at Kew, indicating separately the amounts spent on air conditioning.

Mr. Chope: The costs of remedial works, over and above normal routine maintenance, carried out by PSA at the Public Records Office at Kew since 1977 are:

	Total cost	Air conditioning costs only (assessed figures at cash prices)
	£	£
1977-78	4,400	1,700
1978-79	6,200	3,400
1979-80	21,300	0
1980-81	3,100	700
1981-82	6,400	2,000
1982-83	65,500	34,000
1983-84	121,000	62,000
1984-85	132,500	72,000
1985-86	270,000	220,000
	630,400	395,800

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why £800,000 has been spent over five years on routine and regular maintenance to the air conditioning system of the Public Record Office at Kew; what proportion that represents of the original cost of its installation; and how it compares with the routine maintenance work on air conditioning in other Government offices over the same period.

Mr. Chope: The air conditioning is particularly sophisticated. The £800,000 spent over five years on the routine and regular maintenance of the air conditioning system represents 66 per cent. of the systems original 1976-77 installation cost of £1,200,000.

Approximately £90,000 per annum (£450,000 over the five year period) is spent on a service contract to provide for the day-to-day operation of the plant and equipment, and for minor repairs and servicing of any items costing under £500. In addition, any repairs over that amount are paid for separately as are all specialist services including the regular inspection and sterilisation of the water distribution system and the deep cleaning of the humidification plant.

The national statistics compiled by the Property Services Agency do not separate the costs of air conditioning plants from other engineering services. For the building as a whole, however, over the past five years, maintenance work has averaged £8·95 per square metre per annum (at 1985-86 prices) against a national model cost for buildings of this type, age and construction of £14·64.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the independent review of the Public Record Office at Kew and as to the reasons given in the review for the closure of the premises to the public for three months in 1984.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement on this issue made by the Lord Chancellor in another place on 27 March 1985 at column 1138. The building was closed as a preventive measure whilst the air conditioning plant was thoroughly checked, cleaned and treated with disinfectants. Most of the work recommended by the review has been completed.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Ridley: The following Committees of this nature (other than committees of officials) have been abolished in this period:

Advisory Committee on Local Government Audit
Committee of Inquiry into the Conduct of Local Authority Business
Committee of Recreational Management Training
Hydraulics Reseach Station Advisory Committee

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committes to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Ridley: The committee of inquiry into the Handling of Geographic Information is the only Committee (other than committees of officials) set up to advise me or my Department, which is not listed in "Public Bodies". It was set up in 1985 and will be submitting its report in March 1987.

"Paying for Local Government"

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, by 19 December, a list of those responding to Cmnd. 9714 "Paying for Local Government" along with a summary of their responses.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave on November 1986 at column 392 and 27 November at column 317 to him and to his hon. Friend the Member for Mid Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle), respectively. The summary of responses I expect to publish will include a list of organisations which responded to the Green Paper.

Housing Corporation Development Programme

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now give details of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: We have now approved a development programme for 1987-88 which will allow the Housing Corporation to give approval to some 22,000 new homes for rent and for sale—a 21 per cent. increase over 1986-87. This is based on the gross provision of £705 million, announced by my right hon. Friend on 7 November, which included a £20 million increase specifically for new schemes mixing 30 per cent. grant with private finance. Together with a further £10 million of "challenge" funding we have now added from within the programme, we expect the mixed finance schemes alone to generate £100 million of new housing investment.

In 1986-87 the Housing Corporation was asked to concentrate new approvals on areas of greatest need. They identified 80 housing stress areas for which the 1985-86 allocations for new fair rent and shared housing projects were maintained in total in real terms in 1986-87. These allocations will be increased by a further 9 per cent. to £390 million in 1987-88 but there will also be increases for other areas.

Overall allocations for housing for rent will be 17 per cent. above 1985-86 levels of investment. The priorities for this programme will be to help homeless families, especially those in bed and breakfast accommodation, schemes to assist job mobility and provision for others with special housing needs including those in rural stress areas. The allocations for new major projects go up from £25 million to £40 million—60 per cent. increase. New starts on housing for sale will be kept at the same level as 1986-87. Provision made in this programme will be supplemented by wholly private financed schemes, both in the form of the index-linked shared ownership made possible by the Housing and Planning Act and also by the new initiatives recently announced by the Housing Corporation, which they have worked up in co-operation with Coventry Churches Housing Association.

The breakdown of the approved development programme for 1987-88 is as follows:

Housing Corporation—Approved development programme 1987-88

		£ million	£ million
Net allocation (cash limit)			637
Receipts			68
Gross allocation			705
Housing for rent
Fair rent and shared housing projects
1. Contracted expenditure (Block 1)			357
2. New tenders approved (Block 2)			139
3. New Fair rent and shared housing projects (Block 3)			56
Flexible HAG projects
4. (a) Homeless families (b) Job movers (c) Other projects	committed expenditure New projects	3 30	33
5. Major Repairs:	committed expenditure	16
	New projects	8	24
6. Mini HAG:			3
Housing for sale
7. (a) Improvement for sale (b) Leasehold schemes for the elderly (c) Shared ownership (d) Home-ownership for tenants of charitable housing associations	Committed expenditure New projects	68 22	90
			702
8. Right to buy mortgages and other expenditure			3
			705

Note 1:
Included in Blocks 1, 2 and 3 (fair rent) and Housing for sale is £6·7 million to cover the cost of certain projects to be undertaken on Merseyside.

Note 2:
Within the provision for flexible HAG £3 million has been allocated to permit the transfer of some 700 units previously approved for fair rent to funding on a 30 per cent. HAG basis.

Note 3:
New Fair rent and shared housing projects. The allocation of funds under this head will initiate projects to a total cost of some £513 million to be completed over the next 3 to 4 years.

Portsmouth Councillor (Telephone Call)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what request as to the revelation of the contents of the telephone call to the Leader of Portsmouth city council on 4 March was made in the course of the telephone call.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: I do not recall asking Councillor Gibson to delay revealing the contents of the conversation to his council, and would have had no reason to do so. My recollection is that Councillor Gibson for his part did not ask that the conversation should be kept in confidence, but mentioned that he would wait until the letter giving details of the Secretary of State's decision arrived before informing the Council.

"Faith in the City"

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in the light of the report "Faith in the City" on matters which are the responsibility of his Department.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to the reply, 8 December 1986]: My Department continues to give priority to the regeneration of urban areas through existing programmes, including the urban programme and derelict land grant, which have greatly expanded since 1979. In addition new initiatives have been promoted, including proposals for new urban development corporations at Trafford Park in Greater Manchester, Teesside, the black country and Tyne and Wear, and the provision for urban regeneration grant contained in the Housing and Planning Act 1986. Also, my Department is giving specific assistance to the Archbishop's commission on urban priority areas with its work on identifying areas for assistance by the church urban fund. I shall be seeing the chairman and secretary of the follow-up group tomorrow.

Council Estates (Demolition)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide for his consent to be required for the demolition of a council housing estate, and sale of the land.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: The decision on whether to demolish property owned by it rightly rests with the local housing authority concerned. Sales of council housing land already require the consent of my right hon. Friend under section 32 of the Housing Act 1985.

Housing (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of grants Portsmouth city council has received for (a) the original construction of the Portsdown park housing estate and (b) capitalised repairs since 1970.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: This information is not available in the form requested. Portsmouth city council does not currently require Exchequer housing subsidy to balance its housing account.

Council House Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people are currently on local authority housing waiting lists (a) in each of the London boroughs and (b) in each of the parliamentary constituencies in the London borough of Southwark.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: My right hon. Friend has received from the London boroughs the information given in the table. Neither the criteria for inclusion in the waiting list nor the checking of lists to remove the names of people no longer seeking local authority accommodation are uniform to the local authorities for which information is given.

Number of Households on the Housing Waiting List at 1 April 1986

	Number
City of London	553
Barking and Dagenham	3,880
Barnet	5,753
Bexley	3,751
Brent	18,496
Bromley	4,376
Camden	16,922
Croydon	5,226
Ealing	9,114
Enfield	7,825
Greenwich	15,015
Hackney	15,850
Hammersmith and Fulham	9,235
Haringey	12,147
Harrow	2,001
Havering	3,140
Hillingdon	3,722
Hounslow	8,637
Islington	9,500
Kensington and Chelsea	9,987
Kingston upon Thames	1,912
Lambeth	16,652
Lewisham	22,585
Merton	3,849
Newham	5,386
Redbridge	2,791
Richmond upon Thames	4,038
Southwark	14,583
Sutton	1,634
Tower Hamlets	10,000
Waltham Forest	7,578
Wandsworth	6,981
Westminster	9,152

Source: HIP returns 1986.

The Department does not hold this information on a constituency basis.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Arms Sales

53. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the end user certificates system for overseas arms sales.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes.

Motor Industry

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of British jobs dependent on (a) motor vehicle manufacturing, (b) the motor component supply industry, (c) the motor trade and (d) the motor industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Our estimate of the number of British jobs directly dependent on these sectors is as follows:

	Number
(a) motor vehicle manufacturing	157,000
(b) motor component supply industry	200,000
(c) the motor trade	514,000
(d) the motor industry (vehicle manufacturing plus component supply)	357,000

Pirate Radio, London

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations concerning increases in pirate radio traffic in the Greater London area.

Mr. Butcher: From time to time a number of organisations based in the Greater London Area whose legitimate activities have been affected by unlicensed broadcasting stations have made representations about the difficulties they have experienced.

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any reports of FM signal interference caused by pirate radio traffic in the Greater London area.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's radio investigation service receives frequent complaints of radio interference caused by unauthorised use of radio including unlicensed broadcasting stations in the Greater London area. Unlicensed broadcasters have caused interference to authorised broadcasting services and to radio systems used by the police, fire and ambulance services, services essential to the safety of customers and employees of airlines, gas companies, and bus companies. With this in mind we are committed to stopping the interference from unlicensed broadcasters.

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many prosecutions were brought under section 79 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 in Greater London last year; how many resulted in convictions; and how many resulted in the confiscation of broadcasting equipment.

Mr. Butcher: No prosecutions have been brought under section 79 of the Telecommunications Act 1984. Last year (1985), 182 prosecutions were brought under sections 1, 5 and 13 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 in Greater London. Of these 93 related to unlicensed broadcasting of which 92 resulted in conviction. In 61 of the latter cases forfeiture of equipment was ordered by the court.

Radio Interference Service

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff the radio interference service has engaged in investigating complaints in the Greater London area.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's radio investigation service employs 220 staff throughout the United Kingdom who are deployed to particular regions as work demands. There are 55 staff based in London.

Nightwear

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the terms of his Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 apply to garments other than nightwear; and if he will remake the regulations under a different title.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 2 December at column 548. As the hon. Member has also written to me on this subject, I shall reply to his letter as soon as possible.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the encouragement of small firms to bid for Channel tunnel contracts.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My Department is seeking to make all United Kingdom industry aware of the business opportunities to which the project will give rise. Small firms are encouraged to register with the tunnel contractors, Transmanche link joint venture.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publications of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Butcher: There are no such committees.

Sir Phillip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Butcher: Advisory Committees to which the Secretary of State makes appointments which are not yet listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication are:

The National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies.
The Alvey programme Steering Committee.
The Industrial Consultative Committee on Biotechnology.

They will be listed in the next available edition.

Standard Chartered Bank

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint inspectors to inquire into share dealing during the attempted bid by Lloyds for Standard Chartered Bank and related matters.

Mr. Howard: I shall appoint inspectors if and when I am satisfied that there are grounds to do so.

Trade Descriptions Act 1972

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to consult interested parties about successor arrangements to the Trade Descriptions Act 1972.

Mr. Howard: My Department sent a consultation letter to a wide range of consumer and trade associations on 4

December seeking their views on possible successor arrangements. I have arranged for a copy of the letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Tiles

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give figures for each of the last five years for (a) sales of tiles in the Unied Kingdom, (b) production of British tiles and (c) imports of tiles.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: The figures for (a) wall, floor and fireplace tiles and (b) clay roofing tiles and fittings are as follows:

£ million

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
(a) Sales in the United Kingdom	104·8	104·9	132·0	146·8	153·6
Sales of tiles produced in the United Kingdom	87·5	84·5	102·3	106·5	109·9
Imports of tiles	33·2	35·9	45·8	56·5	59·7
(b) Sales in the United Kingdom	13·8	17·7	23·4	25·7	27·0
Sales of tiles produced in the United Kingdom	14·1	17·9	23·4	25·8	26·7
Imports of tiles	0·1	0·2	0·4	0·5	0·8

Figures for Plastic, Rubber, Vinyl, Cork, Glass, Cement and Carpet tiles are not available.

Shipbuilders (International Comparisons)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the most recent information available to him of the support for shipbuilders in (a) Japan, (b) Taiwan, (c) Korea and (d) all individual countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986]: There is no direct support to shipbuilders in Japan or South Korea. I will write to the hon. Member about Taiwan about which I have no information to hand.

The following is the current information on support for shipbuilders in the European Community:

United Kingdom

(a) Up to 20·5 per cent. of contract price from the Intervention Fund and 2 per cent. Shipbuilders Relief. The maximum may be increased by 5 per cent. for vessels over 70,000 dwt built in Northern Ireland.
(b) Loss compensation in public sector yards.
(c) Shipbuilding redundancy payments scheme.
(d) Regional development grants.
(e) Enterprise Companies.

Belgium

(a) No production subsidies.
(b) 10 year plan from 1982 to take over redundancy payments to workers 55 and over.
(c) The Economic Expansion Law, 1970, provides credit facilities for investment.
(d) The Economic Expansion Law, 1970, provides interest free credits for the development of prototypes, new products and new production processes.

Denmark

(a) No direct production subsidies.
(b) Loans from National Bank for new building at official discount rate 1·5-2 per cent.
(c) Guarantees covering mortgages for small ships.

France

(a) Production aids for:
(i) small yards 10 per cent.;
(ii) large and medium yards 20 per cent.
(b) Aid for closures and reconversion.

Germany

(a) No direct production subsidies for shipbuilding.
(b) Rescue aid.
(c) Guarantees from one coastal Land.
(d) Grant aid for closures and reconversion.
(e) Grants of up 11·25 per cent. and guarantees for investment.
(f) Grants for research and development.

Ireland

Nil.

Italy

(a) Up to 25 per cent. of contract price. Additional 5·3 per cent. for large yards in the Mezzogiorno and 2 per cent. for others.
(b) Loss compensation.
(c) Stock holding of components.
(d) Up 30 per cent. grants for investments linked to rationalisation or re-organisation programmes which do not increase production capacity.
(e) Insurance or export credits.
(f) Aid for research and development.

Netherlands

(a) Up to 10 per cent. of contract price. Total aid is linked to turnover.

Portugal

(a) 25 per cent. of contract cost.
(b) Loss compensation.

Spain

(a) Up to 14·5 per cent. of value of the ship.
(b) Up to 2·5 per cent. of contract value for financial restructuring to be matched by beneficiary.
(c) Loss financing of public sector yards.
(d) Employment Promotion Fund 2 per cent. of value of ships built.
(e) Research and Development programmes financed by 0·5 per cent. of the value of ships built.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Police Accommodation

Mr. Dorrell asked the Lord Privy Seal if he has any proposals to make additional accommodation for the police guarding the Palace of Westminster available in No. 1 Bridge street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: At present, the BBC, IRN and Metropolitan police occupy parts of the building on a short-term basis. During the recess further accommodation was made available to the BBC. I understand that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Evironment has action in hand to provide the police with a new locker room. It is hoped that the new facility will be available early in the New Year.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any committee of this kind.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mrs. Rumbold: There is one such committee not yet listed in the Public Bodies publication, namely the recently established National Advisory Council for the Youth Service to which my right hon. Friend and the Secretary of State for Wales make appoinments jointly.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has sought to find out how much of the University Grants Committee's recurrent grant is used for the upkeep of listed buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has not sought to find out how much of the University Grants Committee's recurrent grant is used for the upkeep of listed buildings and has no plans to do so.

Student Unions

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost to the taxpayer of student unions in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Walden: The Department does not collect this information. Up to the academic year 1980-81, all student unions were financed by a per capita fee charged to the individual student. Since 1981-82, student unions in institutions of higher education have been financed by means of a block allocation from the resources of their parent institutions. The total amount of such allocations is not known. Arrangements for the funding of student unions in other further education institutions are locally determined.

Teachers

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the current availability of teachers in science and related subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: Vacancies for teachers of science, mathematics and technology have risen recently though they still represent a low proportion of total posts. Many teachers have their main qualification in other subjects. The Government is backing a range of measures to improve supply including the introduction of a £1,200 tax free bursary scheme for entrants to initial teacher training courses in the shortage subjects, the allocation of £16·5 million in 1987-88 to support related in-service training and the formation of a national unit to publicise teaching as a career.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mentally Ill Prisoners

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest estimate of the number of inmates in Her Majesty's prisons who are suffering from mental illness.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 September there were 339 inmates in prison custody in England and Wales who had a disorder which, in the opinion of the Medical Officer, was of a nature or degree which would make it appropriate for them to be detained in hospital under the terms of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Detained Persons (Food)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he is now having on possible changes in the procedures which allow food to be taken into prisons for people held on remand in custody; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are reviewing the need in present day circumstances for the longstanding privilege of unconvicted prisoners to have food and drink sent into prison. Prison service catering offers an adequate and varied diet which prisoners may supplement by purchases from the prison canteen. The remand food privilege provides a means of smuggling unauthorised articles, including drugs, into prisons and requires staff time to be spent in searching that could be put into other use. The views of prison service trade unions have been sought and officials are considering the practical implications of abolishing the privilege.

Salmon Act 1976

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to ensure that police forces in England and Wales are fully briefed on the relevant sections of the Salmon Act 1976.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The enforcement of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975 falls primarily to water authorities rather than the police, who may provide assistance on request. We are not aware of any difficulties encountered by the police which required advice from this Department.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publications of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Hurd: There is no central record of unlisted committees which have ceased to exist. Only committees with a life of less than 12 months would not normally be listed.

The most recent regular survey of Home Office bodies identified three committees in existence on 1 April 1986 which had not been listed in the 1985 edition of "Public Bodies":

(i) The Special Panel of Advisers on Security Cases (paragraph 150 of the Immigration Rules HC 169), which had not at the time of the review convened since 1976;

(ii) The New Town Licensed Premises Committee (Milton Keynes) and the Advisory Committee on Service Candidates had appeared in earlier editions but were omitted due to an oversight.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people seeking asylum in the United Kingdom are presently being detained by the Immigration Service (a) at Harmondsworth, (b) at Latchmere house, Richmond and (c) elsewhere in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many persons seeking asylum in the United Kingdom and detained by the immigration service have been held in custody for more than two weeks;

(3) if it remains his policy to allow temporary admission to persons seeking asylum in the United Kingdom whilst their cases are being considered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The criteria for deciding whether to grant temporary admission are applied by the immigration service locally and are the same for asylum applicants as for others. These are an assessment of the likelihood of the person complying with the terms of temporary admission and of any compassionate features. On the information readily available, on 5 December 41 persons claiming asylum were detained at Harmondsworth, 29 at Latchmere house and 25 elsewhere; 64 of these had been detained for longer than two weeks on that date.

Prison Statistics

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the minimum recommended number of officers working in each of Her Majesty's prisons; what was the actual number on duty on the latest date for which figures are available; how these figures compare with the authorised establishment at each prison; what is the number of prisoners in each prison and how this figure compares with the recommended maximum; what is the recommended ratio of prison officers to prisoners at each prison and what is the actual figure; and if he will give these figures for each of the last three years, where appropriate.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 45]: Minimum recommended staffing levels are not set for prison establishments in England and Wales. The actual number of officers on duty at any one time varies according to such factors as the time of day, the day of the week, leave and training. This information is not held centrally. The number of prison officer class staff in post at each establishment on 31 October 1986 according to centrally held records is listed in column (a) of the table together with comparable figures for 31 December 1985 (b) 31 December 1984 (c) and 31 December 1983 (d). The authorised staffing level as at 1 November 1986 is set out in column (e); figures for past years are not available. There is no agreed recommended maximum number of inmates per prison; information recording the average and the highest population in each establishment is provided in the annual reports on the work of the prison department, which are available in the Library. The concept of a recommended officer to inmate ratio does not exist at present; actual ratios showing the number of inmates per member of the prison officer class for 31 December 1985, 31 December 1984 and 31 December 1983, are set out in the table at columns (f), (g) and (h) respectively.

Establishment	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)	(f)	(g)	(h)
Acklington	164	159	147	151	189	2·89	3·07	2·34
Albany	311	324	332	257	383	1·10	1·12	0·61
Aldington	36	36	37	40	44	2·69	2·89	1·58
Ashford	199	198	198	196	234	2·12	2·22	2·34
Ashwell	66	65	61	68	75	5·32	5·07	4·99
Askham Grange	48	42	42	41	46	2·52	1·76	2·41
Aylesbury	135	138	140	121	167	2·08	1·93	2·02
Bedford	172	172	181	169	204	1·78	1·65	1·93
Birmingham	417	399	403	406	443	2·37	2·16	2·30
Blantyre House	45	45	42	43	48	1·18	1·24	1·44
Blundeston	143	146	144	144	158	2·75	2·82	2·81
Bristol	244	240	249	252	260	2·51	2·07	2·19
Brixton	666	654	606	601	993	1·50	1·33	1·27
Brockhill	97	95	95	97	108	2·44	2·38	2·08
Buckley Hall	42	42	39	44	47½	2·00	1·97	1·36
Bullwood Hall	89	84	65	77	95	1·74	1·68	1·21
Camp Hill	180	177	174	195	203	2·64	2·34	2·33
Campsfield House	37	37	38	37	40	1·38	0·82	0·86
Canterbury	192	187	179	162	230	1·50	1·63	1·75
Cardiff	221	211	206	219	223½	2·04	1·79	1·81
Castington	104	106	108	100	116	1·65	2·56	1·66

Establishment	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)	(f)	(g)	(h)
Channings Wood	147	149	139	150	153	2·85	2·60	2·65
Chelmsford	162	159	164	170	179	2·18	2·11	2·29
Coldingley	153	151	157	145	188	1·91	1·90	2·01
Cookham Wood	56	56	51	55	64	2·14	2·16	2·11
Dartmoor	253	235	225	216	239	3·15	2·27	2·50
Deerbolt	151	145	106	113	168½	1·81	2·53	2·46
Dorchester	94	90	98	91	106	1·81	1·96	1·93
Dover	109	104	95	108	113½	2·11	2·41	1·85
Drake Hall	77	75	75	72	78	2·95	2·80	2·46
Durham	404	384	364	371	401	2·52	2·65	2·52
East Sutton Park	29	28	23	24	27	2·50	2·22	2·04
Eastwood Park	53	51	53	50	55½	1·61	1·21	1·64
Erlestoke	95	97	91	92	107½	1·80	2·22	1·36
Everthorpe	111	115	113	104	115	3·13	3·03	3·36
Exeter	209	206	221	224	226	2·01	1·89	1·89
Featherstone	138	138	138	132	164	3·71	3·62	3·68
Feltham/Finnamore Wood	174	176	185	178	194½	1·66	1·57	1·77
Ford	96	97	102	98	103	5·07	4·26	5·39
Fosten Hall	36	38	39	37	39½	1·05	0·85	1·08
Frankland	381	364	349	333	337	1·19	0·89	0·93
Gartree	247	262	273	253	312	1·18	1·11	1·10
Glen Parva	261	246	253	240	295½	2·63	2·49	2·31
Gloucester	128	132	131	135	145	2·05	1·69	2·07
Grendon/Springhill	153	149	159	154	187	1·62	1·52	1·69
Guys Marsh	78	78	74	68	86½	1·88	2·61	1·87
Haslar	46	44	46	45	46	1·64	1·35	1·29
Hatfield/Gringley	97	98	97	86	100	1·86	2·22	2·24
Haverigg	99	103	104	102	127	4·86	4·89	5·01
Hewell Grange	55	54	55	50	62	2·70	2·27	2·42
Highpoint	196	200	178	148	241	3·06	2·98	3·57
Hindley	119	112	114	110	132½	2·59	2·82	2·73
Hollesley Bay	204	207	221	221	247	2·07	1·93	1·88
Holloway	336	345	384	292	370	0·88	0·81	1·05
Hull	250	250	249	246	290	0·99	1·17	1·20
Huntercombe	68	58	59	61	78½	3·14	2·90	3·07
Kingston	63	62	62	58	68	2·21	2·24
Kirkham	80	79	80	77	86	6·08	6·21	7·45
Kirklevington	47	45	49	49	51	1·38	1·69	2·20
Lancaster	94	95	95	90	99	2·40	2·29	2·53
Latchmere House	76	79	80	76	86	1·73	1·60	2·01
Leeds	396	387	373	352	509	3·16	3·07	3·23
Leicester	221	215	232	218	256	1·56	1·52	1·70
Lewes	194	191	203	196	227	2·76	2·42	2·40
Leyhill	66	63	65	61	79	4·97	4·80	5·18
Lincoln	227	224	224	223	259	2·71	2·39	2·24
Lindholm	206	—	—	—	235	—	—	—
Liverpool	414	418	404	394	480	2·93	3·06	2·88
Long Lartin	312	312	314	319	364	1·28	1·25	1·21
Lowdham Grange	79	82	86	84	92½	2·89	2·92	2·80
Low Newton	119	116	123	116	127	2·09	2·33	2·01
Maidstone	193	186	184	197	225	2·81	2·76	2·56
Manchester	526	536	513	457	616	2·89	2·32	3·01
Medomsley	44	44	45	41	50	1·23	1·38	1·56
Morton Hall	35	27	—	—	44	3·59	—	—
New Hall	39	41	43	42	45	1·37	1·77	1·14
Northallerton	85	87	82	81	95	2·39	2·61	2·60
Northeye	89	89	98	94	116	4·91	4·16	4·55
Noth Sea Camp	64	60	63	62	71	1·62	2·02	1·42
Norwich	237	231	242	236	252	2·58	2·46	2·25
Nottingham	138	136	136	133	139	2·16	2·05	2·23
Onley	145	146	155	153	168½	2·84	2·54	2·55
Oxford	106	104	103	106	115½	2·08	2·22	2·19
Parkhurst	297	295	306	305	364	0·75	0·83	0·89
Pentonville	306	328	335	320	352	2·90	2·67	3·05
Portland	170	168	166	164	184	2·91	2·69	2·71
Preston	146	137	132	146	145	4·17	4·21	3·95
Pucklechurch	113	110	115	110	118	1·32	1·36	1·38
Ranby	117	114	120	122	128	3·11	3·03	2·76
Reading	144	136	108	144	160	2·20	2·80	1·93
Risley	530	516	463	443	514	1·82	1·97	1·95
Rochester	126	125	134	144	143	2·53	2·60	2·30
Rudgate	55	57	60	60	68	5·91	4·45	5·17
Send	42	44	46	44	49½	1·16	0·96	1·55
Shepton Mallet	82	79	83	84	83½	3·10	2·67	3·11
Shrewsbury	101	94	93	103	114½	1·88	2·22	1·73
Stafford	218	203	210	213	245	3·21	2·78	3·17
Standford Hill	95	104	106	114	132	3·13	4·38	4·22

Establishment	(a)	(b)	(c)	(d)	(e)	(f)	(g)	(h)
Stocken	114	107	—	—	127	2·68	—	—
Stoke Heath	140	139	138	132	149½	2·83	3·07	3·14
Styal	154	141	149	132	145	1·85	1·68	1·98
Sudbury	68	66	65	70	75	5·71	5·18	4·94
Swansea	148	146	160	144	153½	1·92	1·54	1·89
Swinfen Hall	96	99	103	100	113	1·83	1·64	1·80
Thorn Cross	82	69	—	—	94½	3·22	—	—
Thorp Arch	84	91	98	97	111	2·69	2·40	2·43
Usk	80	79	85	81	86	1·81	1·85	1·84
The Verne	133	133	132	132	140	3·83	3·83	3·82
Wakefield	445	424	424	406	464	1·75	1·66	1·75
Wandsworth	406	409	412	372	470	3·64	3·48	3·65
Wayland	130	128	—	—	157	3·64	—	—
Wellingborough	135	131	136	121	146	2·71	2·41	2·66
Werrington	50	46	45	43	50	1·93	0·87	1·00
Wetherby	74	75	79	78	75	2·35	2·71	2·38
Whatton	76	73	75	78	86	1·58	1·60	1·71
Winchester	269	259	281	275	298	2·47	2·15	2·27
Wormwood Scrubs	507	500	522	464	534	2·61	2·24	2·20
Wymott	209	213	216	210	230	3·76	3·61	3·84

NORTHERN IRELAND

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publications of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Scott: There are no bodies to which my right hon. Friend makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication. I am not aware of any bodies in this category which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

WALES

Small Farm Businesses

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the survey of small farm businesses which is being collated in Wales by the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth and in which his Department is participating will be completed; when he expects the results to be known; if they will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The survey of small farm businesses is to be carried out during 1987 and 1988. Some results are expected to become available towards the end of 1987 and reports will be published in 1988 and 1989.

Pharmacists

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his policy towards the provision by pharmacists of explicit information as to the method whereby medication urgently prescribed can be obtained at times other than when the premises are open for business and rota duty dispensing;

(2) what representations he has received from individuals and organisations on the non-availability of urgently prescribed medications in areas which do not have a 24-hour, seven-day a week pharmacy service.

Mr. Mark Robinson: FPCs are encouraged to ensure that community pharmacists display clearly information as to whether the pharmacist may be contacted for urgent dispensing outside normal and extended pharmacy hours. We have received no representations about the availability of urgently prescribed medication.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Committees which we have set up to advise us and which are not listed in Public Bodies are the health policy board and the urban development grant appraisal panel. We also make appointments jointly with our right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education to the recently established National Advisory Council for the Youth Service and with our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health and Social Security to the intermediate treatment trust fund.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publications of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are none such.

Birth Statistics

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list for each of the years 1982 to 1985 the estimated percentages of women delivering in Wales (a) whose labours were induced, (b) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (c) who had elective caesarean sections;

(2) if he will list for each of the years 1982 to 1985 the estimated percentages of women delivering in Wales whose deliveries were (a) spontaneous, including abnormal presentation of head and breach spontaneous, (b) instrumental (forceps, vacuumns), (c) by caesarean section and (d) other and unspecified means.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Structural Adjustment

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he makes his own appraisal of structural adjustment policies in countries where the United Kingdom has a bilateral aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. Structural adjustment programmes usually involve the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank and we participate in board discussions. In addition, for countries where British bilateral programme aid is likely to be involved in significant financial support for structural adjustment programmes, ODA officials participate in relevant World Bank missions or otherwise consult World Bank staff closely. Our country aid programmes also finance studies of policies relevant to structural adjustment programmes which influence the nature of the reforms adopted.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking through the World Bank and International Monetary Fund to ensure that adequate funds are available to debtor countries in the Third World which undertake structural adjustment programmes.

Mr. Chris Patten: We support a substantial eighth replenishment for the International Development Association and a general capital increase for the World Bank when required. We encourage increased use of World Bank funds for structural adjustment lending in appropriate cases. The resources of the International Monetary Fund are reviewed at about five-yearly intervals and constantly monitored to ensure sufficient funds are available for the programmes planned. We supported the establishment of the fund's structural adjustment facility.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Nitrates

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to discourage the use of nitrates on agricultural land in England and Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department encourages farmers to assess the requirements of each crop for nitrogen fertiliser in accordance with good husbandry practice and to restrict application to those times when the crops can utilise the nitrogen.

Advisory Committee on Salmon Stocks

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his appointments to the Advisory Committee on Salmon Stocks.

Mr. Gummer: Representative bodies concerned with all aspects of salmon were approached early in November seeking nominations for membership of the new Salmon Advisory Committee. We are now considering their responses. It remains our aim to have the committee meet before the opening of the new salmon fishing season.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87 by Her Majesty's Government on agricultural grants and subsidies excluding market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: Details of the outturn for 1985-86 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1986-87 are as follows:

	Outturn 1985-86 £ million	Latest forecast of outturn 1986-87 £ million
Price guarantees
Wool	1·5	9·7
Potatoes	7·5	—
	9·0	9·7
Support for capital and other improvements
Agriculture and Horticulture Development Scheme	65·6	50·7
Guidance Premiums	3·8	3·6
Farm Accounts	0·8	0·8
Farm Structure	0·3	0·3
Northern Ireland Agricultural Development Programme	4·9	2·3
Agriculture and Horticulture Grant Scheme	65·4	24·0
Agriculture Improvement Scheme (EC)	—	18·3
Agriculture Improvement Scheme (National)	0·2	11·4
Co-operation Grants	4·3	3·4
Others	1·8	1·8
	146·9	116·6

	Outturn 1985-86 £ million	Latest forecast of outturn 1986-87 £ million
Support for agriculture in special areas
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances	104·9	116·5
Additional benefit to farmers in special areas under AHDS, NIADP, AHGS, AIS(EC) and AIS(nat)	26·8	19·7
Others	6·2	4·7
	137·9	140·9
Other payments
Milk Outgoers Scheme	9·6	9·5
Emergency relief 1985	16·7	—
Sheep Compensation Scheme 1986	—	4·9
	26·3	14·4
GRAND TOTAL	320·1	281·6

Some of this expenditure attracts contributions from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. These are mainly received in the following year. In 1986-87 £42·4 million is expected to be received from the fund compared with £52·4 million in 1985-86.

The individual figures may not add up to the totals shown due to roundings.

Mr. Marland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of the expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87 by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and Her Majesty's Government on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: Details of the outturn for 1985-86 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1986-87 are as follows:

	Outturn 1985-86 £ million	Latest forecast of outturn 1986-87 £ million
(i) Expenditure by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce
Cereals	654·0	136·2
Beef and veal	328·3	274·3
Pigmeat	−1·2	−1·7
Sugar	83·9	127·9
Processed goods	40·9	40·9
Milk products	353·7	302·2
Oil seeds	88·6	105·9
Sheepmeat	110·0	101·8
Others	24·3	17·1
	1,682·5	1,104·7
(ii) Expenditure by the agricultural departments
Milk non-marketing premiums	2·6	0·1
Suckler cow premium scheme	26·9	27·7
Annual premium on ewes	128·2	163·3
	157·7	191·1
Grand total	1,840·2	1,295·8

Expenditure includes the beef and sheepmeat variable premium schemes (net of clawback for sheepmeat and charges on beef exported and sold into intervention), the premium schemes for the non-marketing of milk and the conversion of dairy herds, suckler cow premium scheme, annual premium on ewes, refunds on imports and exports (net of levies), the school milk subsidies, and the net cost of buying commodities into intervention less proceeds from sales. It also takes account of certain receipts treated as negative expenditure, namely, monetary compensatory amounts levied on intra-Community trade and the co-responsibility levies on cereals and milk producers and supplementary levy on milk producers. Of the estimated outturn for 1986-87, £1,288·8 million is expected to be financed from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund (EAGGF), the balance being financed from Exchequer funds. In 1985-86, £1,230·0 million was financed from EAGGF. Some of the expenditure benefits consumers and trade interests rather than United Kingdom producers.

ENERGY

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if British Nuclear Fuels have reprocessed spent fuel for (a) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or (b) any Soviet bloc country.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

Sellafield

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he made an agreement with the European Commission regarding inspection and safety at Sellafield civilian nuclear reprocessing plant; and if he will made the details available in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) on 4 June, at columns 594-95, and to my reply to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 12 June at columns 268-69.

North Sea Gas

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken since 1979 to ensure that any technical equipment used to explore and exploit petroleum natural gas in the North sea within the state's jurisdiction operates using only the best available technology.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 28 November 1986 at column 385.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Q10. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy when answering questions on her role in the matter of the Solicitor-General's letter on Westlands by reference to an earlier reply, to detail the precise column in the Official Report where the specific information requested can be found in her ealier reply.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the hon. Gentleman on 17 November, full accounts of the Westland issue have already been given by her and other Ministers in statements in Parliament, speeches in debates and answers to parliamentary questions, and by the head of the home Civil Service in his evidence to the Defence Committee. The Government stand by those accounts, and see no reason to qualify or add to them; and that will continue to be our policy.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what specific evidence was available to the Cabinet Secretary which led him to believe that officials did not understand what they were being asked to do in relation to giving information on the Solicitor-General's letter of 6 January to the Press Association.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave him on 17 November at columns 49-50.

Merchant Fleet

Q90. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the implications of the decline in the United Kingdom merchant fleet for national defence capability and the United Kingdom's ability to fulfil treaty obligations.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in reply to the right hon. Member for Taunton (Sir E. du Cann) on 25 November at columns 158-59.

Iran (Arms Supplies)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister if any flights from the United States of America, containing arms shipments destined for Iran have used United Kingdom airports for refuelling.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

Neither the Civil Aviation Authority nor the Ministry of Defence has received any request for permission for such flights to use a United Kingdom airport for refuelling.

State Security

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will refer to the Security Commission allegations that the security services carried out illegal activities against the then Prime Minister, Lord Wilson of Rievaulx.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

No.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 December.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 9 December.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is today reporting to the European Parliament in Strasbourg.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General how many people in Walthamstow have left the employment register since the beginning of the restart programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not have information in the precise form requested. Between 13 June 1986, the closest date available to the start of the restart scheme in the Walthamstow area, and 9 October 1986 some 2,246 people in the Walthamstow parliamentary constituency ceased to be unemployed claimants. I have no means of calculating exactly how many of these people ceased to be unemployed as a result of help under the restart programme because people are continually ceasing to be unemployed for a whole variety of reasons.

Mr. William Powell asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the number of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency of the United Kingdom in October and the proportion of the work force they represent, listing the various constituencies in decending order with the highest at the head of the list and the lowest at the bottom.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested because unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. The numbers of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency of the United Kingdom on 9 October 1986 are available in table 2.10 of the December 1986 edition of Employment Gazette.

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate the number of (a) European Economic Community nationals and (b) foreign nationals working in London and the south-east.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the 1985 Labour Force Survey of the number of EC and other foreign nationals in employment, resident in Greater London and the south-east region are as shown in the following table:

EC[1] and other foreign nationals in employment
Thousands: Spring 1985

Area of Residence	EC[2] Nationals	[3]Other Foreign Nationals
South East Region[4]	223	379
Greater London	135	243

[1] EC 12, including Spain and Portugal.
[2] Excluding United Kingdom nationals.
[3] Including British Overseas and Dependent Territories Citizens.
[4] Including Greater London.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how the allowances are to be administered for those enrolling on the job training scheme; and if any legislation is envisaged to allow for continuity of receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Lee: Training allowance is paid at an amount equal to unemployment/supplementary benefit in payment immediately before the start of training. It will be increased if benefit would have increased had the person remained unemployed; it will not decrease during training. Participants previously entitled to certificated housing benefit are entitled to standard housing benefit, topped up as appropriate by housing benefit supplement.

Because of the links with benefit rates, training allowance is assessed and paid by unemployment benefit office staff who have the necessary expertise. Payment is normally made fortnightly by Girocheque posted to the participant's home address. The training allowance and housing benefit arrangements are being monitored in pilot areas and will be reviewed in the light of experience.

Earnings

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what was the average earnings of wage and salary earners at 1 September.

Mr. Lee: The latest available information on average weekly earnings is that for April 1986 from the 1986 New Earnings Survey. This is published in table 5.6 of the Employment Gazette for December 1986, a copy of which is in the Library.

Estimates for months since April 1986, including September, are contained in a note on average gross weekly earnings produced by the Department of Employment, a copy of which may also be found in the Library.

Special Employment Measures

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General, if he will place in the Library a constituency breakdown of those taking part in special employment measures.

Mr. Lee: We do not collect figures for all the employment measures on a constituency basis. For those measures where it is possible to provide constituency-based figures, this could be done only at disproportionate cost.

Community Programme

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the number of people currently on the community programme who would otherwise be registered as unemployed; and what was the comparable figure 12 months ago.

Mr. Lee: People entering the community programme have to satisfy certain eligibility criteria, which includes being unemployed, depending on age, for varying periods of time.

During the 12 months ending 31 October 1986, the latest date for which statistics are available, the number of entrants on to the programme was 301,791. Of these 96·3 per cent. were directly in receipt of unemployment, supplementary or other appropriate benefit. The corresponding figure for the period ending 31 October 1985, was 196,551 of whom 95·4 per cent. were directly in receipt of benefit.

Civil Servants (Regions)

Mr. Batiste asked the Paymaster General how many civil servants employed by his Department and engaged primarily on regional matters are based in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the north-east and (c) the north-west.

Mr. Lee: The following information is provided:

	Permanent	Casual	Grand Total
Yorkshire and Humberside
Department of Employment	2,549	98	2,647
A.C.A.S.	49	—	49
M.S.C	1,850·5	114·5	1,965
H.S.E	413·5	—	413·5
	4,862	212·5	5,074·5
North East
Department of Employment	1,918·5	99·5	2,018
A.C.A.S.	35	—	35
M.S.C.	1446·5	107·5	1,554
H.S.E.	92·5	—	92·5
	3,492·5	207	3,699·5
North West
Department of Employment	3,605·5	180·5	3,786
A.C.A.S.	71	—	71
M.S.C.	3,178·5	137·5	3,316
H.S.E.	230·5	—	230·5
	7,085·5	318	7,403·5

Health and Safety

Mr. Cohen asked the Paymaster General how many (a) fatal and (b) other accidents at work have been reported (i) in Leyton and (ii) in respect of residents of Leyton in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no record of any fatal injury to persons at work in Leyton reported either to the Health and Safety Executive from 1981 to date, or to the London borough of Waltham Forest during 1982-85. I regret that the other information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled People

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Paymaster General if he will place in the Library a list of those employers, by county, who employ 20 or more staff, but do not employ 3 per cent. registered disabled people.

Mr. Lee: Information about the application of the quota scheme provisions of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act to individual employers has been treated by successive Governments as confidential and is not disclosed without their agreement.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office; (2) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication of the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are no advisory committees to which I or my right hon. and noble Friend make appointments which are not listed in "Public Bodies" and there have been no advisory committees to which we make appointments which have not been listed and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Departmental Office, Hornchurch

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the conditions of work for his Department staff in the two buildings in North street, Hornchurch.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: We would prefer the staff in the two buildings in North street, Hornchurch to be housed in one office. The timing of the rehousing depends upon appropriate premises becoming available, and the nature of competing claims on the funds set aside for premises improvements at the time.

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General when he expects the building currently shared between his Department and the Department of Health and Social Security in North street, Hornchurch, to be made available for the exclusive use of his Department.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: I understand that the Department of Health and Social Security is unable to foresee when it might vacate the building. I am therefore unable to comment on when it might become available for the exclusive use of my Department.

Departmental Offices

Mr. Squire asked the Paymaster General how many of his Department's offices require staff or files to cross a main road in order to deal with their clients.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: Precise figures are not available. However, such offices are few in number, the aim of my Department being to house unemployment benefit offices in one building where possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Intermediate Nuclear Forces

52. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to pursue the zero option in so far as intermediate nuclear forces are concerned.

Mr. Eggar: We remain in close touch with our allies about intermediate nuclear forces, and support the continued United States efforts at the Geneva nuclear and space talks to achieve an INF agreement. At their recent meeting at Camp David, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and President Reagan identified such an INF agreement, with restraints on shorter-range systems, as one of three priorities for arms control negotiations. There will be a further opportunity for full discussion of these issues at the North Atlantic Council meeting on 11-12 December.

Gulf Shipping

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures Her Majesty's Government intend to pursue in order to protect British lives and cargoes in the Arabian Gulf.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said during his recent visit to Oman, the Royal Navy has increased its profile in the Gulf to provide reassurance to those who operate and sail in merchant ships there, and to give assistance should this be needed. We keep in regular contact with the shipowners' and the seamens' unions and continually review what more could reasonably be done to ensure safe passage for merchant sailors and vessels in the Gulf.

Iran (Arms Supplies)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has of British companies losing business to competitors in Europe as a result of the embargo by the United Kingdom on the supply of lethal arms to Iran; what specific discussions he has had with the Federal German Government on this matter in relation to the supply of engines for Chieftain tanks; if he will raise the question of a co-ordinated European approval to arms sales to Iran at the next Council of Foreign Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Specific evidence of European competitors having taken business which might have come to Britain is hard to come by. However, we have refused licences for the export to Iran of significant amounts of defence equipment.

We have had recent assurances that any application to export tank engines to Iran from the Federal Republic of Germany would be automatially rejected. Such a sale would contravene the FRG's policy of neutrality in the conflict and of not permitting the export of goods for military use to areas of tension.

Defence sales are a matter for national Governments and are not covered by the treaty of Rome. We would like to see all other European countries adopt a policy as stringent as our own, but it would not be constructive to press for a co-ordinated defence sales policy within political co-operation while little possibility of agreement appears to exist. There is, however, an exchange of information on defence sales policy within the machinery of political co-operation.

Extraterritoriality

Mr. Paddy Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken or proposes to take to curb recent interference in the United Kingdom computer industry by personnel stationed at the United States Embassy in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. I have no reason to believe that any such action is necessary.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to assist any initiative by India to find a peaceful and just solution to the problems facing the Tamil people in Sri Lanka.

Mr. Eggar: We have consistently urged all parties in the Sri Lankan conflict towards a negotiated political solution. The Government of India have played a vital role in recent moves towards this goal and we fully support their efforts.

Notifiable Military Activities

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the annual calendars of notifiable military activities of other participating states which are required to be communicated to him under the provisions of the final document of the Stockholm conference on confidence and security-building measures in Europe.

Mr. Eggar: No. It is for each CSCE participating state to decide whether or not to publish its annual calendar; we have published our calendar today in a response to a question from the hon. Member. We hope other participating states will take similar action.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the annual calendar of notifiable United Kingdom military activities which is required by the final document of the Stockholm conference on confidence and security-building measures in Europe.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom calendar of notifiable military activities is as follows:

Annual Calendar of Military Activities for 1987

1. Designation: Exercise Cold Winter.
Type of Military Activity: Field Training Exercise.
General Characteristics and Purpose: To exercise in winter conditions and to practice cooperation between Norwegian and Allied forces.
States Involved; United Kingdom, Norway, Netherland, United States.
Area of Activity: Norway (North Norway including Ofoten Peninsula, Tjeldoya and Hinnoya).
Date and Duration: From 20 March for 6 days.
Planned Total Number of Troops: United Kingdom element 4,000.
Types of Armed Forces: Amphibious forces.
Level of Command: Brigade.
Number and Type of Divisions: Amphibious brigade.
Other Relevant Information: Involves landing craft and support helicopters.

2. Designation: Exercise Plain Sailing.
Type of Military Activity: Logistic Exercise.
General Characteristics and Purpose: To practice setting up of communication.
States Involved; United Kingdom, Federal Republic of Germany.
Area of Activity: Federal Republic of Germany (Northern Area).
Date and Duration: From 4 September for 14 days.
Planned Total Number of Troops: United Kingdom element 13,500.
Types of Armed Forces: Logistic and movement control units plus non-mechanised infantry.
Level of Command: Division.
Number and Type of Divisions: One infantry division.
Other Relevant Information: Being carried out in agreement with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany.

3. Designation: Exercise Keystone.
Type of Military Activity: Infantry Field Training Exercise.
General Characteristics and Purpose: To exercise reinforcement and field operations.
States Involved; United Kingdom, Federal Republic of Germany.
Area of Activity: Federal Republic of Germany (South-East Neidersachsen).
Date and Duration: From 7 October for 20 days.
Planned Total Number of Troops: United Kingdom element 24,000.
Types of Armed Forces: Non-mechanised infantry.
Level of Command: Division.
Number and Type of Divisions: Two infantry divisions.
Other Relevant Information: Being carried out in agreement with the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany.

4. Designation: Exercise Purple Warrior.
Type of Military Activity: Amphibious and Field Training Exercise.
General Characteristics and Purpose: To exercise joint services operations in amphibious and land operations.
States Involved; United Kingdom.
Area of Activity: Scotland (Galloway, Arran, Kintyre).
Date and Duration: From 4 November for 18 days.
Planned Total Number of Troops: 10,000 (of which 7,000 will participate in amphibious operations).
Types of Armed Forces: Amphibious and airborne forces.
Level of Command: Division.
Number and Type of Divisions: One reduced division based on two brigades.
Other Relevant Information: Will include an airborne assault by up to 1,000 troops.

Addendum to Annual Calendar of Military Activities for 1987
Activities Within Excess of 40,000 Troops in 1988

1. Designation: United Kingdom Home Defence Exercises.
Type of Military Activity: Home Defence.
General Characteristics and Purpose: To exercise military home defence plans.
States Involved; United Kingdom.
Area of Activity: Throughout United Kingdom.
Date and Duration: 7 September to 2 November.
Planned Total Number of Troops: May exceed 40,000 at certain times during the period.
Types of Armed Forces: Non-mechanised army district units.
Level of Command: Military district.
Number and Type of Divisions: Not applicable.
Other Relevant Information: Troops will not exercise in divisions or equivalent formations but as a series of military district exercises which may overlap.

Stockholm Conference

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the dissemination and publication of the text of the final document of the Stockholm conference on confidence and security-building measures in Europe, as required by paragraph 103 of that document.

Mr. Eggar: The Stockholm document was published as a Command Paper on 28 November and is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office bookshops. Our intention to publish the document as a Command Paper was announced in the autumn "Arms Control and Disarmament Quarterly Review", which was distributed to 3,500 individuals and organisations. Copies of the Stockholm document have been placed in the Library of the House and has been distributed to the press and to all of Her Majesty's embassies and high commissions.

Foreign Military Vessels

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if all foreign military vessels require prior diplomatic clearance before entering British territorial waters.

Mr. Eggar: All foreign vessels enjoy under international law the right of innocent passage through territorial waters. Prior diplomatic clearance is required for visits of foreign warships to British ports.

Poseidon Ballistic Missile Submarines

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his United States counterpart on the withdrawal of Holy Loch-based Poseidon ballistic missile submarines as a means of bringing the United States back within the SALT 2 treaty limits.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Binary Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultations have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on the deployment plan for United States binary chemical weapons.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for current arms control negotiations of the French Government's decision to resume production of chemical weapons.

Mr. Eggar: We and all our NATO allies remain committed to a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on chemical weapons.

Immigration

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications have been turned down by entry clearance officers since the introduction of the visa requirement for persons travelling to the United Kingdom from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Nigeria.

Mr. Eggar: From 15 October up to the end of November, of the 25,092 short-term entry clearances applied for in the four countries, 1,063 have been refused. The breakdown by country is as follows:

	Applications received	Applications refused
India	12,719	100
Pakistan	6,558	336
Bangladesh	1,583	353
Nigeria	4,232	274

Since the visa requirement for Nigeria has not yet been introduced, in the case of Nigeria the above figures relate to applications for optional entry clearance between 15 October and the end of November.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current waiting time from the first application to the final decision for persons seeking settlement in the United Kingdom, at the relevant posts overseas in India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

Mr. Eggar: Waiting time in months from application to first interview as at 31 October were as follows:

	New Delhi	Bombay	Dhaka	Islamabad	Karachi
Q1: (Right of Abode/dependent relatives over 70/special compassionate cases)	2	3	3	3	3
Q2: (All spouses and all children under 18)	4	6	8	7	6
Q3: (Fiances/Fiancees and other applicants for settlement)	8	9	8	13	11
Q4: (Reapplicants)	12	10	22	15	13

Waiting times from interview to decision necessarily vary from case to case.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he has taken to ensure that in countries from which visitors to the United Kingdom require visas an emergency visa can be issued in urgent family, medical or other compassionate circumtances to a person who has already applied for settlement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: In such cases all entry clearance posts have a duty officer who can be contacted by telephone via the mission concerned. Any outstanding settlement application will not necessarily prove an impediment to the granting to a visit visa in a genuine emergency.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

51. Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment his Department has made of the adequacy of its resources to screen for AIDS

students coming to the United Kingdom from Africa, America and the middle east; and what estimate he has made of the cost of providing that screening.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Family Statistics

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children were in families where the head of household was unemployed in 1979 and, on the latest date available, broken down into those who had been unemployed for less than one year, one year or more, two years or more and three years or more.

Mr. Major: I regret that figures for 1979 are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest available information is based on the 1984 family expenditure survey. It is not always possible to establish from this survey whether a person is required to be and is actually available for work, nor is it always possible to determine the duration of the unemployment. The information, subject to these provisos, is given in the table.

Number of children in families where head of household is unemployed

	Thousands
Total	1,400
Less than one year	600
One year or more	750
Two years or more	500
Three years or more	350

Note:
Figures are rounded to the nearest 50,000 and totals do not therefore always agree.

Hospital Staff (Assaults)

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many physical assaults on staff were recorded at the Bradford royal infirmary and St. Luke's hospital in 1985, and to date.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of Bradford health authority who may be able to provide the information requested.

Statutory Sick Pay

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many references have been made by employees and employers to the adjudication officer on statutory sick pay;

(2) what is the average length of time taken by adjudication officers to adjudicate on statutory sick pay references.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the number of references to adjudication officers on statutory sick pay is known to be very small. In the 12 months ending 31 December 1985 there were only 69 appeals against adjudication officers' decisions on SSP. The length of time taken by adjudication officers will be affected by the need to obtain details from the employer. Only employees and the Secretary of State can refer SSP cases to the adjudicating officer.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many civil servants employed by his Department and engaged primarily on regional matters are based in (a) Yorkshire and Humberside, (b) the north-east and (c) the north-west.

Mr. Lyell: The number of civil servants employed in the Department and engaged primarily on regional matters in the north-east and north-west regions is approximately 10,600 and 10,000, respectively. Yorkshire and Humberside is within the north-east region and accounts for some 6,500 of that region's total.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will extend the eligibility rules for mobility allowance to enable those over 75 years of age to qualify on the grounds that payment would enable them to continue living in their own home.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 25 November at column 288.

"Handicapped and Impaired in Great Britain"

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any plans to update the 1968-69 survey carried out by Amelia Harris, "Handicapped and Impaired in Great Britain".

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend announced on 2 April 1984 that there was to be a new survey of the extent of disablement in the population of Great Britain. As in 1968-69, this is being carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The survey forms part of the Government's strategy on the reform of social security benefits as illustrated by the references to benefits for disabled people, in volumes 1 to 3 of the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 5917-9).

Interviews in relation to a nationally representative sample of children and adults with significant disabilities living in private households were completed last year. Interviews in relation to a representative sample of adults in communal establishments are almost complete and the possibility of extending this to disabled children permanently resident in institutions is under consideration. Publication of the full results of the survey is expected in 1988.

Blood (Safety)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to reassure haemophiliacs and other patients requiring blood of the safety of such transfusions; if he will use publicity to reassure such patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The doctors who prescribe blood products for haemophiliacs are best able to give them any necessary reassurance about safety. Reassurance to patients who need blood transfusions can also best be given by the patient's doctor. The leaflet to be delivered to every household next month will refer to the action which has been taken to safeguard the blood for transfusion.

Blood Products

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the fractionating of blood from the various regional hospital blood banks at Elstree to secure maximum potential use of donated blood; and if he will make a detailed statement.

Mr. Newton: Whole blood can be separated by the regional transfusion centres into plasma and cellular components. The plasma is sent to the blood products laboratory at Elstree for fractionation whilst the cellular components are sent to hospital blood banks for direct use. The yield of plasma has been increased by the application of new technology such as the development of additive solutions.

This system allows best use to be made of all the valuable components of donated blood.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" and publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mrs. Currie: The advisory committees to which the Secretary of State makes appointments which have not been named in the annual publication "Public Bodies" of the Management and Personnel Office are listed in table 1. Those committees not named in "Public Bodies" which have been abolished since 1 January 1982 are listed in table 2. These lists represent committees (other than committees of officials) set up to advise my right hon. Friend or the Department which have a life span of less than one year, or which meet only very infrequently.

Table 1. Advisory committees not listed in "Public Bodies"

1. Advisory Committee on Gene Modification Therapy
2. Advisory Group on Boarding Out Regulations and Guidance
3. Advisory Group on Personal Pensions
4. Community Medicine Inquiry
5. Dental Advisory Committee
6. Intermediate Treatment Fund
7. Leprosy Opinion Panel
8. Manpower Advisory Committee (Community Medicine)
9. Maternal Mortality Committee
10. Microbiology Advisory Committee
11. Regional Secure Units Working Group
12. Technical Development Team for Demountable Storage
13. Transplant Advisory Panel
14. Working Groups for Pathology Laboratory Equipment
15. Working Group on the Safety of Nuclear Magnetic Resonance Imaging
16. Working Party on Containers and Closures for Sterile Fluids

Table 2. Advisory committees not listed in "Public Bodies" and abolished since 1 January 1982

1. Advisory Committee on Medical Manpower Planning
2. Community Nursing Review
3. Dental Equipment and Materials Advisory Group
4. DHSS Medical Working Group on Drug Dependence
5. Ethylene Oxide Working Group
6. Fire and Safety of New Residential Accommodation for the Elderly: Planning and Design Group
7. Medical Supplies Working Party Microbiology Panel: Sub-committee on Disinfection and Sterilisation by Low Temperature Steam and Formaldehyde
8. National Voluntary Organisation on Alcohol Misuse: Steering Group
9. National Health Service Management Inquiry
10. Pre-registration House Officers Working Group
11. Project Control Study Group
12. Review of Audit in the National Health Service
13. Social Security Inquiries 1984
14. Steering Group on the Training of Contact Tracers
15. Study Group on Medical Manpower Information
16. Working Group on Services for Epilepsy
17. Working Group on Acceptance Testing of Electrical Equipment in the National Health Service.

Birth Statistics

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for the years 1982 to 1985 the estimated percentage of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales, whose deliveries were (i) spontaneous, including abnormal presentation of head and breach spontaneous and (ii) instrumental (forceps, vacuum and breach extraction), (iii) by caesarean section and (iv) other and unspecified means;

(2) if he will list for the years 1982 to 1985 the estimated percentages of women delivering in (a) England and (b) England and Wales (i) whose labours were induced (ii) whose labours were of spontaneous onset and (iii) who had elective caesarean sections.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Stillbirth-Abortion Statistics

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give available figures, for the Coventry health authority for 1984, 1985 and the first six months of 1986 for (a) foetus mortality and (b) spontaneous abortion rates.

Mr. Newton: Exact figures for foetal loss are not available. However, the figures in the table may be of some help to the hon. Member.

Number of stillbirths registered, and number of notifications of legal abortions, to women usually resident in Coventry district health authority, for 1984, 1985 and first six months of 1986

Year	Number of stillbirths	Number of abortions
1984	27	980
1985	24	983
1986 (1st 6 months)[1]	13	532

[1] Figures for 1986 are provisional.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for a hip replacement operation for the elderly in each National Health Service region; and what were the corresponding figures in 1979.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual aggregate figure for the amount of benefit being paid to those in residential care homes; and how many people are living in homes run by (a) private organisations, (b) voluntary organisations and (c) local authorities.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 20 November 1986, c. 331]: I regret that the information is not available in the form required.

In 1984, the latest year for which figures are available, supplementary benefit was paid to 42,000 residents of private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes at a total cost of £200 million. In addition, £45 million was paid to 35,000 claimants in residential care accommodation provided by local authorities either in their own residential care homes or in private and voluntary homes. These figures relate to Great Britain. Information on the amount of other social security benefits paid to people in residential care homes is not available.

Information on the number of supplementary benefit claimants in each of the three categories specified is not available. However, the following table shows the number of residents in the different categories of homes in England at 31 March 1985.

	Number
All residents in homes for the elderly and disabled
(1) Private	69,000
(2) Voluntary	31,423
(3) Local authority	105,864
(4) Lodgings	[1]211
Supported residents in homes for the mentally handicapped[1]
(1) Private	1,019
(2) Voluntary	3,620
(3) Local authority	12,281
(4) Lodgings	603
Supported residents for the mentally ill[1]
(1) Private	285
(2) Voluntary	952
(3) Local authority	2,682
(4) Lodgings	419

[1] No information is available on residents not supported by local authorities in these homes.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table using his department's low incomes families 1983 tables showing how many people fell below supplementary benefit level, were on supplementary benefit or 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit level, analysed according to both economic and family status together at the latest available date.

Mr. Major [pursuant to the reply, 2 December 1986, c. 615]: The information requested is shown in the tables. The assumptions used are the same as those published in the 1983 low income tables:

Numbers of persons in supplementary benefit assessment units below pensionable age by types and economic status—Great Britain 1983—thousands

Economic Status	Married Couples	Married Couples with Children	Single Persons	One Parent Families
1. Where the head is in receipt of supplementary benefit or housing benefit supplement.
Over pension age	540	—	1,340	—
Under pension age
Full-time employment	—	—	—	—
Sick/disabled	50	53	131	8
Unemployed	223	1,552	792	24
Others	107	36	73	1,198
2. Where the head is not in receipt of supplementary benefit or housing benefit supplement but with net resources below the supplementary benefit scale rates.
Over pension age	430	—	660	—
Under pension age
Full-time employment	90	433	134	29
Sick/disabled	24	9	37	0
Unemployed	79	170	284	0
Others	43	77	245	53
3. Where the head is not in receipt of supplementary benefit or housing benefit supplement but with net resources up to 140 per cent. of the supplementary benefit scale rates (includes supplementary benefit assessment units shown at 2 above)
Over pension age	2,000	—	1,820	—
Under pension age
Full-time employment	224	3,363	434	93
Sick/disabled	134	134	114	0
Unemployed	152	230	507	0
Others	110	196	509	223

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his latest estimate of the cost of the housing benefit scheme; how many people received housing benefit in 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the latest estimate of the cost of the housing benefit scheme currently met by (a) central Government and (b) local government; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he proposes to increase the proportion of the cost of the housing benefit scheme met by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 4 December 1986, c. 731]: An estimated 7·15 million householders were receiving housing benefit in autumn 1985. The latest estimates of the cost of benefit payments and the scheme's administration are £5 billion and £168 million, respectively, for the current financial year.

Local authorities are reimbursed in full for their expenditure on certificated benefit and for 90 per cent. of their expenditure on payments of standard benefit by direct Exchequer subsidy and for a fixed proportion (set at 60 per cent., 65 per cent. and 70 per cent. for authorities in England, Scotland and Wales respectively) of their administration costs through specific grant within the rate support grant arrangements. Residual expenditure on benefits and administration is taken into account when authorities' entitlement to block grant is calculated.

The Government propose to change the arrangements for subsidising local authorities' expenditure under the reformed housing benefits scheme from April 1988 to provide more incentives for authorities to control costs as well as a fair level of support for expenditure which they may properly incur. The detailed arrangements are currently under discussion with the local authority associations.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Shipping

Mr. Budgen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evaluation he has made for each $100 million of investment in merchant shipping of the question of aids to such investment available in each member country of the EEC, distinguishing between investment in new and secondhand ships.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have made no evaluation of this kind.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken in accordance with United Kingdom obligations under Article 4, paragraph 4, MARPOL 73/78.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Article 4, paragraph 4 of MARPOL 73/78, which refers to penalties, applies only to the annexes of the convention that are in force. Annex 1, being the regulations for the prevention of pollution by oil is the only Annex currently in force internationally. The United Kingdom, in accordance with its obligations, made regulations during 1983 giving effect to Annex 1 of MARPOL 73/78. The penalties for failing to comply with the regulations include fines not exceeding £1,000 or £50,000 depending upon the nature of the offence.

Arms and Explosives (Air Transport)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what notification procedures are required if an airline wishes to transport armaments and explosives and use a United Kingdom airport for refuelling.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An airline wishing to carry munitions of war or dangerous goods to or from the United Kingdom (including one wishing to make a transit stop at a United Kingdom airport) is required to obtain permission from the Civil Aviation Authority. Applications for permission must be made in writing at least 10 working days before the proposed date of the flight and give full details of the proposed cargo and flight.

Evergreen International Airways

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if Evergreen International airways has notified any United Kingdom airport of an intention to carry armaments from the United States of America to a third country.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The airline has not sought the permission of the Civil Aviation Authority which would be necessary for any such flight.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many flights by Evergreen International Airways used Stansted airport in October.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Five.

Disabled People

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to issue guidelines to all transport operators and local authorities on levels of access to vehicles and facilities which they ought to be expected to provide for disabled people.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Disabled Persons' Transport Advisory Committee (established under the Transport Act 1985) is working closely with the Department in drawing up guidelines for transport operators on various aspects of provision for elderly and disabled people. These include vehicle design and adaptation, staff training and the size and nature of the potential passenger market amongst disabled people.

Bicycles (Child Injuries)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department is currently undertaking or financing any research work into the injuries of children resulting from inappropriate design of bicycle parts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory is conducting a study of cycling accidents involving adults and children. Information is being collected about the contributory factors and the severity and location of injuries sustained. This will enable us to assess the relationship between bicycle part design and children's accidents and injuries.

Road Safety

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is aware of any research that has been undertaken in the United Kingdom to assess the effectiveness of medical tests for the renewal of driving licences in promoting road safety in general and that of elderly road users in particular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am aware of a study of London Transport bus drivers carried out in the 1970's. This indicated that notification of ill-health led to substantially more retirements of drivers on medical grounds than did routine age-related medical examinations.

All applicants for driving licences (first-time and renewal) are required to answer health questions. Current licence holders must notify the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre of any medical condition which may affect their ability to drive safely. Where appropriate the DVLC can investigate the medical condition of any licence holder or applicant. Given the evidence that medical condition does not constitute a significant factor in accidents, there seems no case for changing these arrangements.

Lorries (Speed Limits)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the non-compliance rates of heavy goods vehicles with statutory speed limits.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No data have been collected on heavy goods vehicle speeds since the limits were raised in March 1984. Earlier information was published on page 21 of Road Accidents Great Britain 1983. A copy is in the Library.

Buses (Children)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department is currently undertaking or funding any research into the problem of bus transport of children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department has a comprehensive programme of research into all aspects of the deregulation of local bus services, and this will cover any problems which arise with the transport of children.

Bicycle Riders (Helmets)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to issue any advice to bicycle users on the availability of an effectively protective helmet for both children and adults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am keen that cyclists should be able to identify helmets that offer a defined standard of protection. The British Standards Institution is preparing an appropriate standard for pedal cycle helmets suitable for both children and adults and we expect this to be published next year.

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to amend the construction and use regulations governing public service vehicles to specify features to improve access for disabled people with particular reference to step height, position of handholds and lighting levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are well aware of the difficulties encountered by elderly and disabled people when they use public transport, especially buses. We have carried out research in order to find ways to improve access to buses and have to put to the bus industry detailed proposals on steps and hand rails derived from this research as a basis for an amendment to the Construction and Use Regulations.

We are still consulting the bus industry on which of the research findings are appropriate for incorporation in regulations and which are more appropriate to a voluntary code of practice.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct British Rail to consult fully with all relevant bodies to produce an agreed plan to promote use of the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I shall of course want to see that all realistic options for the future of this line have been properly considered before I reach a decision; and I am sure that British Rail would be ready to discuss any such proposals the local authorities might put forward. But it would be inappropriate for me, in advance of reaching my decision, to give any directions to the Board.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide additional funding for relevant local authorities to promote the leisure use of the Settle to Carlisle railway line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is normally a matter for local authorities to determine in the light of their priorities and the resources available to them.

Motorways

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the procedures for alerting and forewarning drivers on motorways by the broadcasting authorities following accidents; and what is the cost to his Department of this service.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We cannot compel radio stations or other media to broadcast traffic news. We do seek to persuade them that regular traffic bulletins and up-to-date traffic reports are of great value to their listeners. We also encourage them to liaise closely with the police who are usually the first source of information about accidents and their effects on traffic.

The Department of Transport presently contributes towards the operating costs of the BBC's motoring and travel unit which co-ordinates travel information broadcast on national networks and local programmes. The cost to the Department in the current year is £78,000.

We are constantly seeking to encourage an improved flow of traffic information to BBC and ILR radio stations, much of which is provided by the AA. Recent improvements in the AA's roadwatch unit should help to improve the quality and immediacy of that information.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates of hourly traffic flow at peak periods were made by his Department when preparing for the direct link between the M1 and M25 motorways; what has been the actual outturn; and to what extent his traffic forecasts assume uninterrupted traffic flow at normal motorway speeds during peak periods.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 4 December 1986, c. 724]: The traffic predictions were based on 16-hour annual average weekday flows; from which peak hour flows were derived. The forecasts, made in 1979 for the design year 1998, were:

	Peak-hourly flow in both directions (vehicles)
M25 (west of M1) to and from M1	2,700 to 3,900
M25 (east of M1) to and from M1	1,900 to 2,800

Traffic counters on the connecting roads between the M1 and M25 will be fully in operation early in 1987. The connecting roads were designed to provide the capacity for the predicted peak hourly traffic flows assuming a design speed of 80 kph (50 mph) and normal motorway operating conditions.

M5 (Roadworks)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the emergency services and his Department took to forewarn drivers using the M5 in Somerset of roadworks on 25 October; and if he will list the radio stations that were notified.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A press notice was issued on 20 October 1986 to local radio and television stations, motoring organisations, the BBC motoring unit and newspapers circulating between Bristol and Exeter, warning of the contraflow starting in late October on the M5 in Somerset between junctions 24 and 25.

Press notices are not normally issued for smaller works of shorter duration such as those scheduled to take place between junctions 21 and 23.

The police sent out a telex at 11.45 am on 25 October warning of a three-mile tailback due to roadworks between junctions 21 and 22, advising drivers to take alternative routes to avoid the delays. This was sent to the following radio stations:

BBC motoring unit
Radio Bristol
GWR (independent radio)

Motorways (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define the factors his Department takes into account when assessing peak hours on all motorways in England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department, when estimating the benefits of road improvement schemes, calculates them separately for the traffic flows at peak times and other periods of the day. The peak time calculations are based on the predicted traffic flows during the 380 hours of the year when experience generally indicates the highest traffic levels are experienced: this represents the worst weekday morning and evening peaks of approximately 45 minutes duration. For urban roads the peak calculation covers 500 hours because the peak period is generally longer.

M25 (Contractors)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the performance of all the contractors used during the construction of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are satisfied in general that high standards have been achieved by the many contractors involved in this massive project. The condition of the motorway will be regularly monitored. Where problems arise, these are investigated.

M25 (Safety)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent assessment he has made of the safety of the dual carriageway sections of the M25; and whether any accidents have occurred in that stretch on the northern orbital.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The M25 is two lanes in each direction through junction 5 (with A21) in the south and junctions 25 (A10) and 27 (M11) in the north. Traffic flows now and in the foreseeable future do not justify three lanes.

Between July 1983 and June 1986 there were one fatal and two serious accidents at junction 27. Between January 1980 and August 1986 there was one slight injury accident at junction 25.

Motorways are our safest roads. The M25 compares well with other motorways.

SCOTLAND

Chapelcross

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the calculations of radiation doses affecting the critical group of members of the public near the British Nuclear Fuels Limited Chapelcross site were last reviewed or revised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The most recent assessment of annual dose levels affecting the critical group was made on the basis of monitoring results for 1985, which showed that radiation exposure of the public arising from operations at Chapelcross has remained well within internationally recommended dose limits. Information so far available for 1986 does not suggest any change in that position.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list showing for each of the last four years the (a) calculated critical group exposures associated with radioactive discharges from British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Chapelcross and (b) proportion that such discharges bear to the maximum authorised limit in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information is published by the Scottish Development Department in statistical bulletins which are placed in the Library. The most recent information, which is being prepared for publication, confirms that disposals of waste from Chapelcross have been within the authorised limits and that any radiation exposure of the public arising from the disposal has continued to be well within the internationally recommended dose limit.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe the certificates of authorisation for radioactive discharges from British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Chapelcross, identifying the date of authorisation of each certificate; whether each such certificate specifies numerical limits for each type of discharge; and when each such certificate is next due to be reviewed.

Mr. Ancram: The nature and content of authorisation certificates is described in Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin No. 1/1986 which is available in the Library. Revised certificates for Chapelcross were issued in April 1986: they impose numerical limits on both liquid and gaseous discharges. Authorisations for all nuclear installations in the United Kingdom are currently subject to a programme of review which is due to be completed by 1989.

Bus Deregulation

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 2 December, Official Report, column 570, if he will now make it his policy to collect directly from regional councils in general and the Central regional council in particular, information about savings made and additional routes established since bus deregulation.

Mr. Ancram: I do not consider that it would be productive, or merit the interruption to ongoing work which would be involved, to remove the responsibility for collecting compatible information on the financial effects of deregulation from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. As regards changes in the route network, it would not be practicable at this stage to add new areas to those already selected for comparative pre- and post-deregulation study.

Advisory Committees

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments which are not listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publication issued by the Management and Personnel Office of the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Rifkind: Committees (other than committees of officials) set up to advise me or my Department and having a life of more than 12 months are listed in "Public Bodies". Records are not maintained centrally of committees set up to consider specific topics and which have a life of less than 12 months.

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all advisory committees to which he makes appointments and which have not been listed in the annual "Public Bodies" publications of the Management and Personnel Office; and which have been abolished since the beginning of 1982.

Mr. Rifkind: Advisory committees with a life of more than 12 months to which I make appointments are listed in "Public Bodies". No central record is maintained of committees with a life of less than 12 months, but among those not listed in "Public Bodies" which have been wound up since 1982 are as follows:

Museums Advisory Board
Denny and Bonnybridge Morbidity Review
Committee of Inquiry into the Pay and Conditions of Teachers in Scotland
Working Group on Suicide Precautions at Glenochil
Committee for Clinical Nursing Studies

The Committee for Clinical Nursing Studies did not appear in "Public Bodies" because it was wound up before NHS bodies were first included in that publication (1983 edition).

Capital Projects

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the operation of section 94, controls on expenditure on capital projects undertaken by councils where long leaseback arrangements are made with (a) private sector organisations, (b) public sector bodies and (c) limited companies in which the local authority has a majority interest.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Aberdeen and Dundee Colleges of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland under what statutory regulations, and under what Scottish Joint National Council (Further Education), procedures it is proposed that the two Boards of Governors of Aberdeen and Dundee Colleges of Education should appoint Mr. D. Adams as principal designate of the college proposed in the final report on the proposed merger of Aberdeen and Dundee colleges of education.

Mr. John MacKay: The identification of a principal designate of the proposed merged college would be entirely a matter for the governing bodies of the two existing colleges.

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sections of the Torness emergency plan were approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate before fuelling of the reactor was started; and if he will arrange for a copy of these sections to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 411-12]: The fuel load stage of commissioning at Torness nuclear power station has not started. A limited number of channels have been loaded with fuel for the purpose of gas flow tests and interim emergency arrangements specific to this phase were approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate beforehand. These comprise section B of the "Interim Emergency Manual, Issue 1." The South of Scotland Electricity Board has undertaken to place a copy of that section in the Library.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what sections of the Torness emergency plan are required to be approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate before commissioning procedures beyond the fuelling of the reactor; when these sections were or are likely to be approved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 411-12]: Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate requires that the South of Scotland Electricity Board has an emergency plan commensurate with the requirements of each particular stage of commissioning. At each stage the board has had and will have suitable emergency arrangements as required by HMNII.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the full emergency plan for Torness nuclear power station to be approved by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 411-12]: The full emergency plan for Torness nuclear power station will be approved when Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate is fully satisfied with the plan and the demonstration of its application. I cannot say at present when that will be.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Investment Depreciation

Mr. Budgen asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effect on revenue which would follow from replacing the present 25 per cent. reducing balance method of depreciating investment for tax purposes by a 25 per cent. straight line system as urged on him by the Confederation of British Industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer yesterday to my right hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Sir E. du Cann).

Departmental Manpower

Mr. Key asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October.

Mr. MacGregor: At 1 October 1986 there were 598,782 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 504,521 were non-industrials and 94,261 industrials.

West Midlands Freeport

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what investment there has been of public money in the west midlands freeport either (a) by the West Midlands county council or (b) by any other public body; how that investment is supervised by public representatives on the board; and if he will name these representatives indicating the size and sources of their emoluments.

Mr. MacGregor: West Midlands county council and Solihull borough council have invested £1,000 and £500 respectively in purchasing shares in West Midlands Freeport Ltd. (total share capital £10,000) which is the designated freeport authority. Presently Councillor G. W. R. Boakes of Solihull metropolitan borough council is a director of the company and Councillors J. A. W. Bird and C. J. Kirk (West Midlands joint committee) have been designated to replace Councillors B. Smith and C. Beardwood (West Midlands county council) as directors. Members of the board of West Midlands Freeport Ltd. receive no emoluments or expenses.

No public funds have been used to develop the freeport site.

Local Authorities (Capital Projects)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the financial effects of local authorities undertaking capital projects and arranging leaseback deals with other public sector organisations or companies in which they have a majority interest.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of (a) the share of public spending going to the north-west region, (b) the per capita share of public spending going to the north-west region, and (c) the per capita share of public spending for the nation as a whole.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: Apart from expenditure which is the responsibility of the territorial departments, most public expenditure is planned on a national basis and it is not possible to identify separately expenditure in the English regions. Per capita public spending for the United Kingdom in 1985-86 was £2,359.

Money Transactions

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances a financial institution is obliged by regulation to inform the police of international money transactions.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: There is no obligation on financial institutions to take the initiative to inform the police in legislation for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible, although the Bank of England, the director of savings and the Building Societies Commission have powers to disclose information to the police in certain circumstances.

Friendly Societies

Sir Peter Hordern sked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has received the report from the steering group of friendly societies: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986]: A copy of the Report entitled "The Friendly Societies in the Welfare State", prepared by Professor E. V. Morgan for the Steering Committee of the National Conference of Friendly Societies was received on 27 November. Professor Morgan's report makes a number of recommendations for change which will be considered carefully.

DEFENCE

NATO

4. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the secretary general of the Northern Atlantic Treaty Organisation; and if he discussed the role of United States bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Younger: I met the NATO Secretary General at the meeting of the defence planning committee last Thursday and Friday. A copy of the communiqué issued after that meeting has been placed in the Library. There was no discussion specifically of the role of US bases in the United Kingdom.

Polaris

15. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has commissioned studies on the safety of Polaris nuclear warhead convoys in the event of accident.

Mr. Stanley: As I have started previously, the arrangements for the safe transport of nuclear weapons remain constantly under review.

Strategic Defence Initiative

16. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of strategic defence initiative contracts won by United Kingdom departments and companies to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that the overall value of SDI research awards to the United Kingdom has now risen to $34 million. It is a year ago almost to the day since the US/UK SDI memorandum of understanding was signed and I believe that this figure represents a solid beginning to the United Kingdom's involvement in this important research programme.

39. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now publish in full the memorandum of understanding on the agreement reached between Britain and the United States of America on participation in the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The United States/United Kingdom memorandum of understanding on United Kingdom participation in the United States SDI research programme is classified.

Trident

17. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs which will be created during the construction and operation of the Trident programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is estimated that the Trident programme will create an average of 8,000 direct and 7,000 indirect jobs in United Kingdom industry throughout its procurement period. The number of jobs needed to operate the Trident programme is not readily available.

19. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the radar under construction at Krasnoyarsk for the effectiveness of the Trident system.

Mr. Stanley: No developments in Soviet defences are currently foreseen which are likely to negate the deterrent effect of the Trident force within the lifetime of the system.

22. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton).

33. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will estimate the number of jobs directly and indirectly dependent in the northern region on the Trident programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Estimates of the total number of United Kingdom jobs dependent on the Trident programme are not made on a regional basis. However the building of the first-of-class Trident submarine, HMS Vanguard, is expected to provide direct employment for about 4,000 people in Barrow.

47. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the use of the Holy Loch by Trident 1(C-4) armed United States nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarines.

Mr. Stanley: A number of questions have been asked on this matter by hon. Members. I am not aware of any representations in recent public correspondence that is readily available.

Royal Navy

18. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many frigates, corvettes and minesweepers are currently in service with the Royal Navy.

Mr. Stanley: The Royal Navy currently has 52 frigates and destroyers in service and 42 mine counter-measures vessels. The Royal Navy has had no corvettes for some years.

Military Installations (Cumbria)

20. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to close down any military installations in Cumbria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. We have no plans to close any installations in Cumbria.

Warship Procurement

21. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining his plans for the future of warship procurement for the next 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We intend to maintain a substantial warship procurement programme as we have done over the last seven years.

Bigeye Bomb

23. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if equipment for use in storing the Bigeye nerve gas bomb is now stationed at Royal Air Force, Welford.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 4 December.

Falkland Islands

24. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the deployment and role of Her Majesty's forces in the south Atlantic.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 6 November at columns 576-7.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the value and amount and type of Government equipment sold recently in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply 3 December 1986, c. 664]: Details of Ministry of Defence surplus equipments sold locally in the Falkland Islands between 1 April and 30 November 1986 are as follows:

Items	Amount received
2 Naval Fleet Tenders 2 Naval Ammunition Barges 1 HMP Falkland Sound Vessel 1,000 metres Cable 2 Water Tanks Cast vehicles (various)
Miscellaneous items: Fenders Tool kits Girders Inner tubes Cotton rags Batteries Light unit Boots	£45,399·00

Note: Details of individual prices are commercial in confidence.

Defence Requirements

25. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the implications for British defence requirements of the Reykjavik summit.

Mr. Stanley: My Department has received 15 letters calling for the abandonment of the Trident programme and other nuclear weapons since the Reykjavik summit. At Camp David on 15 November the President of the United States reaffirmed the United States' intention to proceed with its strategic modernisation programme, including Trident. He also confirmed his full support for the arrangements made to modernise Britain's independent nuclear deterrent with Trident.

Frigates

26. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the frigate ordering programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Chemical Weapons

27. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Government's policy in respect of chemical weapons.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Gentleman the Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies) on 28 April at column 665.

32. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have made provision at Royal Air Force, Welford for the storage of chemical weapons in times of crisis.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 4 December.

European Fighter Aircraft

28. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied with progress on the European fighter aircraft project; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress so far achieved in construction of the European aircraft project.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The European fighter aircraft project is making satisfactory progress. In October my right hon. Friend signed the general memorandum of understanding for the programme with his fellow Defence Ministers from Germany, Italy and Spain. The international project definition phase ended in September and the nations are currently evaluating the outcome, with a view to deciding whether to proceed to full development, which is currently planned to begin in the latter half of next year. In the meantime industry is continuing to work on risk-reducing activities with the aim of refining the design of the aircraft and engines.

Bramley Camp, Basingstoke

29. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department will cease to have any further use for Bramley camp, near Basingstoke; and if he will make a statement about the future of the camp and his Department's housing in the area.

Mr. Freeman: The final review of possible further defence use of Bramley camp is nearly complete, but I regret that none seems likely. I expect a final decision to be made early in the New Year, when I will write to my hon. Friend. Because of increased requirements for accommodation in the area, no MOD housing will be declared surplus on the closure of the depot.

Arms Sales

30. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria Her Majesty's Government use to make decisions on arms sales.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All arms sales require an export licence. Before this is granted a wide variety of considerations is taken into account. These considerations will vary depending on individual circumstances but they will always include the need to safeguard the United Kingdom's political, strategic and security interests, the possible effect a sale might have on the stability of a region and the likelihood of the equipment being used to violate human rights.

Territorial Army

31. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the most recent position on his proposals to increase the strength of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals for the phase II expansion of the TA were set out in defence open government document 84/02 entitled "Territorial Army Expansion 1986-90". Phase II formally commenced on 1 April 1986 and has begun well, with many of the new units already formed and recruiting.

Petty Officer John Black

34. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the departmental review into the death of Petty Officer John Black, unlawfully killed by person or persons unknown in Spain over the Christmas holiday period in 1983.

Mr. Freeman: The Departmental review of the documents in our posession relating to the death of Petty Officer Black is nearing completion. I will inform my hon. Friend of its outcome as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

35. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions his Department has received representations regarding section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 from each of (a) hon. Members, (b) members of the public, (c) members of the armed forces and (d) the organisation The Section Ten Abolition Group; and if he will make a statement on his policy regarding this matter.

Mr. Freeman: For practical reasons I shall confine my answer to written representations received this year. Representations from hon. Members total 141 and those from other sources total approximately 325. It is not possible to allocate the 325 to the categories requested since it is frequently unclear whether an approach is from a member of the Section Ten Abolition Group or simply someone sympathetic to its demands. In addition two petitions have been received—one each from the Section Ten Abolition Group and the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association. The hon. Member will be aware from the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Brinton) yesterday that the Government have decided that section 10 should be repealed.

Single Role Mine Hunter

37. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to announce the next round of orders for the single role mine hunter.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 28 October at column 76.

Defence Vote

40. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are estimated to be employed under the Defence Vote; in what categories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to section 4 of volume II of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-II) and in particular to tables 4.4, 4.7, and 4.9 for details of MOD manpower.

Exports

41. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the level of defence exports in 1985.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Exports of British defence equipment have risen strongly in recent years, at a rate of about 12 per cent. per annum in real terms. Orders reached £2·9 billion in 1985, representing over 5 per cent. of British manufacturing exports and accounting for some 120,000 jobs in many of the most advanced technologies. Action by the Government has helped to improve the competitiveness of the industry and performance is continuing to improve; including the sale of aircraft to Saudi Arabia, the value of contracts signed in 1986 is currently expected to be in the region of £5 billion.

42. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of defence exports in the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockport (Mr. Favell) earlier today.

44. Sir Antony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the future of the defence export sales organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future of the Defence Export Services organisation is as bright as its past. Since it was set up in 1966 by the then Labour Government it has provided invaluable support to defence exports which sustain some 120,000 direct and indirect jobs in this country and which achieved overseas contracts worth some £3 billion last year. This figure does not include the massive Tornado contract in Saudi Arabia in which the DESO played and continue to play a crucial role. It would in the view of this Government be economic madness to do other than to continue with this organisation and its good work.

Excercise Monkfish

43. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the recent army exercise known as Monkfish.

Mr. Stanley: A routine training exercise, known as Monkfish, to test emergency planning was held in October at RAF Machrihanish and involved military units from all three services.

Hong Kong (Gurkha Troops)

45. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to increase the number of Gurkha troops in Hong Kong.

Mr. Stanley: There are no plans to increase the number of Gurkhas stationed in Hong Kong above the present number of about 5,000 including trainees.

Submarines

46. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many submarines are under design or construction in the United Kingdom for the Royal Navy by (a) type and (b) shipyard.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Submarines under construction for the Royal Navy are as follows:

Number	Type	Shipyard
1	Trident class SSBN (05)	VSEL Barrow
4	Trafalgar class SSNs (16-19)	VSEL Barrow
1	Upholder class SSK (01)	VSEL Barrow
1	Upholder class SSK (02)	VSEL/CL Birkenhead

In addition, two further Upholder class SSKs are on order from the VSEL/CL Group but construction has not yet started. Also, VSEL have been invited to tender for the second Trident class SSBN and have a number of contracts covering preliminary design work for future submarines.

Amphibious Capability

48. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received to improve the amphibious capability of the British forces; and if he will make a statement.

50. Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make a statement on amphibious shipping and the future of Her Majesty's Ships Fearless and Intrepid.

Mr. Younger: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) earlier today.

Defence Contracts

49. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will review the arrangements for post costing defence contracts.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no need for a further review. As explained in the answer given on 11 February 1986, the arrangements for post costing are already subject to review by the independent review board for Government contracts and by the Committee of Public Accounts.

Cleveland

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state (a) on how many occasions since 1980 there has been a period of seven consecutive days, commencing on a Monday and ending of a Sunday, when the average temperature in Cleveland, or at the nearest meteorological office, recorded over such a seven-day period was minus 1·5 degC or less and (b) on how many occasions during the last 50 years such an average temperature for such a period has been recorded either for Cleveland or by the nearest meteorological office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The only location within Cleveland for which the Meteorological Office receives temperature data is the voluntary climatological station at Hartburn Grange, near Stockton-on-Tees. At this location there has been a total of five weeks since 1980 during which the average temperatures were below −1·5 degC. The only nearby station with records going back 50 years is the voluntary climatological station at Durham University. Here there has been a total of 26 weeks with average temperatures −1·5 degC or lower since 1936.

Chemical Agents and Munitions

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to which chemical agents and munitions the Warsaw pact could deploy against United Kingdom targets.

Mr. Stanley: An unclassified description of the Soviet Union's chemical warfare capability, including the chemical agents known to have been developed by the Soviets is to be found on pages 72-76 of "Soviet Military Power 1986" published by the United States Department of Defence, a copy of which is in the Library. We cannot rule out the possibility that the Soviet Union might use its longer range chemical weapons capability against targets in the United Kingdom.

Married Quarters

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) houses and (b) flats and maisonettes are available for use as married quarters for service men and their families in the Woolwich area; and how many of these were occupied at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Freeman: There are currently 783 married quarters in the Woolwich area provided by the Ministry of Defence, of which 462 are houses and 321 are flats. As at 31 July 1986, 59 houses and 59 flats were vacant, but of these, 37 houses and 20 flats were allocated to incoming families. A further 22 houses and 22 flats were empty while undergoing repairs, and the balance of 17 flats were being held against future requirements. The hon. Gentleman will wish to know that 21 flats were let to the local council in June 1986 on a short term renewable lease.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) houses and (b) flats and maisonettes are currently owned or leased by his Department for use as married quarters; and how many of these were occupied at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Freeman: As at 31 July 1986, the stock of married quarters owned by the Ministry of Defence in the United Kingdom totalled 82,777 and a further 144 were leased as hirings; of this total, 14,381 were vacant. Of the vacant married quarters, 5,030 were undergoing or awaiting repair, 2,617 were allocated to incoming families, 1,999 were held against future requirements and 842 were being processed for disposal. The remaining 3,893 houses are surplus to requirements and will be passed in due course to the Property Services Agency for disposal.

The Ministry of Defence also has a stock of 47,359 married quarters overseas, of which 5,264 are owned and the balance are either leased as hirings or are made available by the host nation.

I regret that to break the figures down into the categories requested by the hon. Gentleman would require a disproportionate amount of effort.

Naval, General and Air Staff Target 1236

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if naval, general and air staff target 1236 in relation to the long-range stand-off missile includes a requirement to carry a nuclear warhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The NATO staff target to which studies are being directed is for a conventional weapon and does not include a nuclear option.

RAF Tornado Squadrons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those Royal Air Force Tornado squadrons which have been strike-declared to the Supreme Allied Commander, Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 404 and Annex E of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986" (Cmnd. 9763-1). These Tornado squadrons, together with a number of aircraft on the Tornado weapons conversion unit, are strike-capable and assigned to SACEUR. Since the statement was published, one of the United Kingdom squadrons (9 Squadron) has deployed—as planned—to RAF Germany.

SP-70 Howitzer

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if (a) the SP-70 howitzer and (b) its possible replacement will have a nuclear capability in British Army service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Harrier GR5

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Harrier GR5 will have a nuclear as well as a conventional role in Royal Air Force service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no plans to give Harrier GR5 a nuclear strike role.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear weapon tests by (a) the United States of America, (b) France and (c) China have been recorded by his Department so far in 1986.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: One of Her Majesty's Government's principal objections to a comprehensive test ban treaty is the lack of an effective procedure to discriminate between small natural seismic events, chemical explosions and nuclear explosions. It is consequently not possible to say how many of the seismograms recorded by MOD are produced as a consequence of nuclear weapons tests.

Tomahawk Sea-launched Cruise Missile

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Her Majesty's Government treat the United States Navy Tomahawk sea-launched cruise missile as a new class of nuclear weapon for the purpose of prior consultation regarding its deployment in United Kingdom-based facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: As I replied to the hon. Member on 19 November, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence would expect to be consulted by the United States authorities should they wish to base a new class of nuclear weapon in Britain. In this context, the United States navy Tomahawk sea-launched Cruise missile would be considered a new class of nuclear weapon.

Warsaw Pact (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has that Warsaw treaty organisation air forces are constructing underground storage vaults for air-delivered nuclear weapons beneath hardened aircraft shelters on airfields in Eastern Europe.

Mr. Stanley: It is not our normal practice to comment on our intelligence assessments.

NATO Infrastructure Programme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military construction projects undertaken in the United Kingdom since 1979 which have been partially or wholly funded by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom has, since 1979, undertaken approximately 170 military construction projects which have been partially or wholly funded by the NATO infrastructure programme. It is not the practice to publish details of operational facilities provided at individual locations. However, listed below, against the appropriate NATO Infrastructure category, are the main types of infrastructure funded military construction projects, which have been implemented in the United Kingdom in the period in question.

NATO Category	Projects
1. Airfields	Airfield Survival Measures Conversion Works for various Aircraft. Provision of Essential Operating Facilities. Provision of Physical Protection Facilities. Fuel Storage Facilities. Restoration/Construction of Taxitracks/Roads. Construction of Avionics Workshops
2. Communications	Erection of control buildings and aerial masts. Cabling works. Construction of Ground Terminals.
3. War Headquarters	Restoration/New Construction at Allied War Headquarters
4. POL (Petrol Oil Lubricants)	Provision/restoration of fuel pipelines
5. Naval Bases	Restoration/New Construction at Naval Bases to provide storage of POL/Ammunition/Weapons Processing Facilities. Jetty improvements/restriction
6. Training Installations	Provision of facilities in support of training for NATO forces.
7. Radar Warning Installations	Provision of radar installations.
8. Surface to surface Missile Installation	Ground Launched Cruise Missile (GLCM).

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for defence whether any civilian facility is eligible for funding under the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. The NATO infrastructure programme is established to provide military facilities to fulfil the defined minimum operational requirements of the NATO military authorities.

Binary Chemical Weapons

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received any request from the United States authorities for the basing of handling or storage equipment for binary chemical weapons or their components at RAF Welford, Berkshire.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Government's policy towards the deployment of United States binary chemical weapons in Britain applies to storage and handling equipment for these weapons as well as to the weapons themselves.

Mr. Stanley: Yes.

RAF Welford

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of construction work carried out at RAF Welford since 1982.

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of construction work carried out at RAF Welford since 1982 has been to enhance the station's effectiveness as an ammunition storage facility made available for use by the United States forces in the United Kingdom.

US Weapons (Deployment)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any formal agreements or provisions between the United States Government and Her Majesty's Government which set out the definitions of new classes of United States weapons whose deployment on British territory or in British territorial waters requires prior consultation with Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Stanley: The basing of United States weapons in this country is covered by a wide range of agreements and understandings between the United Kingdom and United States Governments, the details of which are confidential.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 10 December 1986

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"The Poor Man's James Bond"

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Attorney-General whether he intends to recommend to the Director of Public Prosecutions that any action be taken against the sale of "The Poor Man's James Bond" in the United Kingdom.

The Attorney-General: The investigation of any alleged criminal offence is a function of the police. If the hon. Member considers that any offence may have been committed, the proper course is for him to refer the matter to the police so that if, after proper investigation, it is appropriate, a report may be submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service.

TRANSPORT

Heavy Vehicles (Overturning)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the percentage of heavy freight vehicle accidents which involve overturning.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Injury accidents involving heavy goods vehicles: GB: 1983 to 1985:

	1983	1984	1985
Number of accidents	12,328	12,950	13,073
Percentage where an HGV overturned	4·5	4·6	4·5

M25 (Lighting)

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects completion of overhead lighting for the whole of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans for lighting the whole of the M25. I expect completion of lighting of junction 6 by late 1988. Lighting for junction 11, which was planned for completion by late 1988, is now being considered in conjunction with widening proposals between junctions 11 and 13.

The need for further lighting on M25 will be kept under review. The proportion of M25 lit is higher than for an average motorway (43 per cent. compared with 25 per cent.).

Lorries (Nuisance)

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to seek to reduce noise, dust and vibration from heavy lorries using narrow roads in built up areas;

(2) whether he will introduce legislation to extend compensation for excessive noise levels to residents living in narrow streets and roads subject to noise, dust and vibration from lorries carrying industrial loads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New noise limits for lorries were agreed in the European Community in 1984 (as set out in column 419 of the Official Report on 22 October 1984). The limits are to be made compulsory from the earliest dates permitted by the directive. Current regulations require loads to be so secured that they are not likely to cause nuisance by being blown from the vehicle. The Department's code of practice gives detailed advice on this. Local authorities already have — and make extensive use of — powers to control the routeing of lorries in built-up areas. A study of the effects of traffic vibration on buildings is nearing completion. We shall consider the implications of the report as soon as it is available.

In the light of all the measures taken to mitigate the environmental effects of lorries, we are not convinced that it would be appropriate to go for an extension of current rights to compensation.

Coaches (Pollution)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to monitor the pollution levels caused by coaches in London parked without their driver but with engine running; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to do so. The question of avoidable pollution from parked coaches in London has been raised at the coaches working party, chaired by Westminster city council. We shall urgently consider any recommendations that it makes to deal with this question.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to control pollution by motor vehicles in general and coaches in particular.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Emissions from motor vehicles are controlled by regulations which require new vehicles to comply with European Community directives. Large diesel-engined vehicles, including coaches, have to comply with a directive which regulates smoke emissions, and the Community is now considering Commission proposals for gaseous emission limits for large diesel-engined vehicles. Smoke from heavy vehicles, including coaches, is checked as part of the annual test.

Road Congestion

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has of the costs of road congestion to the state and to the community as a whole.

Mr. Moore: There are no estimates of the costs of road congestion in general terms of the type requested. Estimates of the cost to road users of delays to traffic are generally made only in the context of specific proposals which will affect traffic conditions. Such proposals include road improvement schemes and arrangements during major maintenance. For proposed trunk road and motorway schemes, estimates are therefore made of the benefits from faster and safer journeys compared with conditions which would have existed had the improvement not been built.

Roads

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those road schemes, for which he has issued contracts, but which are either incomplete, or have not begun, showing the cost of each scheme.

Mr. Moore: The information requested for schemes costing more than £1 million is as follows:

Route	Title	Works cost estimate £ millions
A1	Baldersby Junction improvement	2·5
A1	Clifton to Stannington bridge	4·8
A1	Wetherby bypass	9·7
A10	Buntingford bypass	4·0
A11	Wymondham to Cringleford	8·3
A12	Martlesham bypass	9·1
A19	Riccall and Barlby bypass	5·2
A1M	Hatfield tunnel electrical and mechanical works	7·3
A2	Barham crossroads grade separated junction	2·5
A2	London boundary to M2 improvement	1·4
A20	Sidcup bypass main contract	32·1
A21	Pembury bypass	12·9
A27	Havant to Chichester bypass	33·1
A30	Exeter to Okehampton stage 3	15·0
A30	Okehampton bypass	17·0
A303	Furze Hedge improvement	1·2
A303	South Petherton to Broadway	14·1
A303	Thruxton to Amesbury	10·0
A34	East Ilsey to Chilton improvement	4·0
A35	Bridport link road	3·4
A36	Warminster bypass	9·1
A38	Belvedere cross	1·3
A38	Saltash bypass	9·6
A39	Bideford bypass	16·0
A406	South Woodford to Barking ancillary works	10·7
A406	South Woodford to Barking contract 1	11·4
A406	South Woodford to Barking contract 2	22·1
A406	South Woodford to Barking contract 3	18·6
A406	South Woodford to Barking contract 4	12·4
A422	Stratford northern bypass	12·3
A43	Brackley bypass	10·0
A43	Towcester bypass	6·3
A435	Evesham bypass	7·7
A47	Peterborough, Westwood junction	1·5
A47	Peterborough, Longthorpe junction	1·2
A47	Wardley Hill improvement	1·7
A48	Chepstow bridge	4·8
A483	Chester southern bypass to Welsh border	6·6
A483	Oswestry bypass and A5 improvements	17·4
A52	Barthomley link to M6	6·6
A595	Thursby bypass	1·3
A6	Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass	27·7
A616	Stocksbridge to M1	17·5
A629	Kildwick to Beechcliffe	22·7
A64	Seamer/Crossgates bypass	5·0
A65	Settle to Giggleswick bypass	5·5
A69	Eighton Lodge junction improvement	4·0
A69	Newcastle western bypass advance works	8·0
M5	Rashwood to Catshill	22·3
M5	Warndon to Catshill ancillary works	9·1
M5	Warndon to Rashwood	16·6
M5/M42	M42 and M5 contract 1	4·8
M63	Stretford to Eccles improvement stages 1 and 2	18·8
M63	Stretford to Eccles improvement stage 3	2·5
M63/M66	Portwood to Denton	55·5

Note:

The works cost estimates shown above are estimates of total scheme costs in cash terms and in most cases include some non-contract items such as statutory undertakers' fees and other ancillary works items. In the case of some larger schemes, ancillary items are the subject of a separate works contract.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all those road schemes which his Department has planned and budgeted, showing the cost of each scheme, the anticipated commencement date, and the duration of the project.

Mr. Moore: Details of the Department's national construction programme are given in "National Roads England 1985". Four schemes have been added since publication of the report in June 1985.

Route Number/Scheme		Estimated Works cost (£ million)	Programmed Start
M20	Widening Junctions 5-8	14·0	April 1989 onwards
M25	Widening Junctions 11-13	18·0	Autumn 1987
A69	Haltwhistle Relief Road	4·0	April 1989 onwards
A259	New Romney Bypass	3·0	April 1989 onwards

The periods for construction of the works will be specified in individual contracts, although there are many variables which can affect the final duration of the works.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent by his Department in fees to private consultants for road building in each year since 1979; and how much each company providing these services has received in total since that date.

Mr. Moore: The total amount paid in fees to private consultants engaged in the design and supervision of new motorway and trunk road schemes in each year since 1979 is as follows:

	£ millions
1979-80	24·7
1980-81	22·5
1981-82	34·1
1982-83	57·4
1983-84	62·0
1984-85	73·6
1985-86	84·2
1986-87[1]	94·1

[1] Provisional

It is not possible to give details of total fees paid to individual consultants except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Forman asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the reports on the London assessment studies will be published; and whether he is prepared to review his present proposals for trunk road improvements elsewhere in the light of the report's findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These reports, which will be published shortly, deal with only the first stage of the assessment studies covering the gathering of factual information and opinions relating to the areas studied. The reports will not affect road schemes in other areas.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much the London corridor assessment studies have cost so far.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: £3 million. Two thirds of this has been spent on extensive data collection and on public consultation about problems. These data will provide a firm basis for the next stage of the work and will be made available to local authorities in the areas concerned to assist them in their planning.

Vehicles (Thief-proof Locks)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce amendments to the vehicle construction and use regulations requiring the fitting of more effective thief-proof locking systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Part I of a new British standard on "Vehicle Security BSAU 209" was published in November. It covers mechanical locking systems for passenger cars and car-derived vehicles. Parts II and III covering in-car entertainment equipment and identification etching on glazed surfaces should be published next spring. Further parts dealing with central-power door-locking systems and the general security of glazing are expected to be completed before the end of 1987.

Car buyers and users are increasingly conscious of the need to keep their vehicles secure and the manufacturers are responding to that in the design of their vehicles. Any regulatory action would need to be taken in agreement with the European Community, and we shall be keeping the Community informed of developments here.

Merchant Fleet

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps the Government propose to take to help ensure the availability of adequate manpower on British merchant vessels in time of war or emergency.

Mr. Moore: I am opening consultations with shipowners and representatives of seafarers about ways in which the Government might help with training and with the cost of transporting crews to and from vessels operating away from this country. These measures would contribute to the retention of British nationals on board British vessels. In an emergency it might be necessary to replace foreign seafarers on some ships with United Kingdom nationals, and to facilitate this the Government propose to create a Merchant Navy Reserve of trained personnel willing to return to the sea if needed. I envisage a small annual payment to those who are prepared to register.

Following consultation, it would be my intention to seek the necessary powers from Parliament at the earliest opportunity.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Scott: The following changes have been made by the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office.

(i) Department of Finance and Personnel

1. 1979 — The Northern Ireland Family Expenditure Survey discontinued as an Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication.

2. 1980 — Revised estimates of Gross Domestic Fixed Capital Formation for private sector introduced.

3. 1981 — Northern Ireland Family Expenditure tables published in Northern Ireland Annual Abstract of Statistics.

4. The "Digest of Statistics Northern Ireland" discontinued in 1981 and replaced by the "Northern Ireland Annual Abstract of Statistics" in 1982. In the interim a publication entitled "Social and Economic Trends in Northern Ireland" was produced.

5. 1982 — Estimates of Consumers' expenditure introduced.

6. 1983 — Estimates of number of operatives in Construction Industry by type of work discontinued.

7. 1983 — Estimates of value of output and of new orders in Construction Industry discontinued.

8. 1984 — Monitors reporting preliminary results of newly instituted Continuous Household Survey (NI) published. Also a specific monitor on Religion. Data from the Continuous Household Survey has, since becoming available, been incorporated in the Northern Ireland Annual Abstract of Statistics.

9. 1984 — Revised index of Construction Industry output introduced, old index discontinued.

10 1984 — Level of detail in Personal Income Statistics increased.

11. 1984 — Industrial data released on new Standard Industrial Classification.

12. 1985 — Revised estimates of Consumer expenditure introduced.

13. 1986 — The first in a quarterly series of House Price Monitors published. It reports changes in house prices on a quarterly and annual basis.

(ii) Department of Economic Development

UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

1. 1981 — Changed benefit regulations mean that June school leavers cannot claim benefit until September when they are included in the count. For June, July and August each year a special count of school leavers registered at Jobmarkets is provided.

2. 1981 — Introduction of long-term rate of supplementary benefit for males aged 60+ on supplementary benefit for over 1 year reduced the unemployment count.

3. 1982 — Changes of basis for unemployment statistics from registrants at Employment Service Offices (including full-time non-claimants and excluding severely disabled) to claimants of benefit at DHSS Social Security Offices

4. 1983 — 1983 budget measures gave males aged 60 and over:—

(a) the long term rate of supplementary benefit without waiting for 1 year

(b) automatic National Insurance credits without signing on. Such persons were therefore excluded from the unemployment count.

5. 1984 — Unemployment figures for the revised Travel-to-Work areas produced.

6. 1985 — Reconciliation of Department of Economic Development computer records with DHSS Social Security Office manual records reduced the unemployment count.

7. 1986 — Unemployment figures compiled each month 2 weeks later than previously.

8. 1986 — Additional unemployment rate introduced based on employees in employment, unemployed, self-employed and armed forces ("the working population").

PRODUCTION STATISTICS

9. 1980 — The collection of information on Northern Ireland exports to overseas markets, as part of the Annual Census of Population, discontinued.

10. 1981 — The Northern Ireland Index of Production produced on a quarterly instead of a monthly basis, at the same time the production and publication of quarterly Production Sales information ceased.

11. 1983 — The Northern Ireland Index of Production published with 1980 as the base year.

REDUNDANCY STATISTICS

12. 1983 — Statistics on redundancy rebate payments ceased to include redundancies in respect of which rebate was not payable

13. 1984 — Confirmed redundancy series introduced.

JOB VACANCY STATISTICS

14. 1981—Seasonally adjusted series introduced.

15. 1984—Series for unfilled vacancies published.

EMPLOYEES IN EMPLOYMENT

16. 1983 — Northern Ireland Training executive reclassified to Public Sector.

17. 1983 — Quarterly estimates of employees in employment revised back to September 1979 following production of results from the 1981 Employment Census.

18. 1984 — British Telecom and Ulster Polytechnic reclassified from Public to Private sector.

NEW EARNINGS SURVEY

19. 1983 — Since 1982 gross weekly and hourly earnings results have been published for males and females on adult rates. Prior to this results were published for men aged 21 and over and women aged 18 and over.

LABOUR FORCE SURVEY

20. 1979, 1981—In these years full-time students and those on Government Training Schemes were shown as economically inactive.

21. 1981, 1983, 1984—Labour supply estimates have been revised as Labour Force Survey Results became available.

22. 1984 — Labour Force Survey changed from a biannual to annual survey.

23. 1985—Persons on government training schemes shown as employees, and students aged 16 and over recorded as employees if they did any paid work and unemployed if they were seeking work and were available to start within two weeks.

(iii) Department of Health and Social Services

1. 1981—"Hospital Statistics" first published.

2. 1981 — "Trends in Health and Personal Social Services" first published.

2. 1983 — "Northern Ireland Social Security Statistics" first published.

3. 1983 — "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Northern Ireland" — contents reduced to exclude statistical material published elsewhere.

(iv) Department of Education

1979: — The single annual publication of statistics covering Northern Ireland education sectors abolished and replaced by a series of discrete statistical bulletins issued either on an annual basis or bi-annual basis.

(v) Department of Agriculture

1980: — Basis for increasing farm size from "standard man-days" to "European Size Units".

1981: — The December Agricultural Census moved from a full census to a sample basis — the practice of publishing preliminary results discontinued and only final figures made available. The publication of County results discontinued.

Information on "minor" holdings began to be published. Information on poultry ceased to be collected in the April and August sample Censuses.

1982: — Details regarding forestry in the "Annual Abstract of Statistics" expanded to include additional information on state and private forestry.

1983: — Information on inputs, outputs and net farm income from the Farm Management Survey began to be published in the form of a Press Release.

1986: — Aggregate Farming Income data began to be published separately.

(vi) Northern Ireland Office

1981 — Statistics covering terrorist activity and the persons convicted of scheduled offences in Northern Ireland changed from quarterly to bi-annual publication in Hansard.

1985: — "A Commentary on Northern Ireland. Crime Statistics" first published.

The following future changes are proposed:

(i) Department of Finance and Personnel

1. Presentation of Northern Ireland central government expenditure conforming with National Accounting conventions.

2. Revised estimates of value of output in Construction Industry to be introduced.

3. The Publication of Continuous Survey Reports.

4. The extension of monitors to cover Northern Ireland Family Expenditure Survey data.

(ii) Department of Economic Development

1. The "Employees in Employment" series for Northern Ireland to be revised back to 1981 in the light of the results of the 1984 Census of Employment.

2. It is intended to revise the allocation of agricultural workers between self-employment and employees in employment so that the methodology used in Northern Ireland conforms more closely with that in Great Britain.

(iii) Department of Health and Social Services

It is intended to change from a calendar year to a financial year basis for the presentation of health and social services statistics within the next 2 years.

(iv) Department of Agriculture

The Annual Report on the Sea and Inland fisheries of Northern Ireland to be amalgamated with the Annual General Report of the Department.

Francis Bradley

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet able to say what has been the result of investigation into the events leading to the shooting of Francis Bradley in County Derry on 18 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: On completion of its inquiries into Mr. Bradley's death the Royal Ulster Constabulary submitted a file to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland. On 29 July he directed that none of the soldiers involved should be prosecuted. A date for an inquest has not yet been arranged.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the current level of student grant; and what plans he has to alleviate the problems students currently face.

Mr. Walden: The level of grant reflects the necessity for the consideration of student needs to be balanced by an assessment of what taxpayers can reasonably be expected to contribute. My right hon. Friend will announce rates of grant for the academic year 1987-88 shortly.

Future arrangements for students' financial support are the object of a comprehensive review.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mrs. Rumbold: Regarding changes to the presentation of statistics by my Department, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 5 December, at columns 839-40. Further changes may result from Government policy needs, quinquennial reviews of regular statistics or for statistical and technological reasons.

Educational Change (White Paper)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he expects to publish a White Paper setting out his latest proposals for educational change.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's policies for improving school education were set out in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469). Those are now being implemented.

Initial Teacher Training

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students entered courses of initial teacher training in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: About 16,945 students entered courses of initial teacher training in 1986, an increase of some 220 over 1985. Recruitment to primary teacher training increased, while recruitment to secondary training remained stable. It is clear that many people, particularly graduates, perceive teaching to be an attractive career: entry to PGCE courses increased by 4 per cent. compared to 1985.

I particularly welcome the 24 per cent. increase in recruitment to one and two-year courses in mathematics, physics and craft, design and technology. The availability of the Government bursary for these students will have been an incentive. We will continue with our efforts to eliminate these long-standing shortages.

PRIME MINISTER

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister for what reason the Cabinet Secretary believed that the particular person to whom he went first in his preliminary inquiries had passed information about the Solicitor-General's letter of 6 January to the Press Association.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November, at columns 49-50.

Gas Appliances

Sir William Clark asked the Prime Minister what steps she proposes to take to remove the present overlap in responsibilities for the safety of gas appliances between the Secretary of State for Employment and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: I have decided that from today the responsibilities for safety in the construction and design of gas appliances not intended for use at work which are now exercised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment should be transferred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. These responsibilities include the development of national and European Community standards.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report the official visits she has made overseas since January 1984 to date, and the total costs of each visit to public funds.

The Prime Minister: My official visits overseas since January 1984 and their cost to my Office[1] are:

Year	Destination	Cost £
1984
January	Italy	8,817
January	France	3,038
February	Hungary	12,469
February	Soviet Union	28,767
March	Belgium	14,982
April	Portugal	22,276
May	France	3,000
June	France	12,369
November	India	81,441
November/December	France	13,016
December	Hong Kong/China/USA	106,024
December	Republic of Ireland	12,509
1985
January	Germany	6,556
February	United States of America	50,113
March	Belgium	8,990
March	Soviet Union	28,669
April	South East Asia/Saudi Arabia	108,341
May	Germany	13,615
June	Italy	43,755
July	United States of America	33,530
September	Egypt/Jordan	37,761
October	Bahamas/United States of America	168,539
November	Belgium	3,945
December	Luxembourg	20,934
		Estimated Cost £
1986
January	France	4,820
March	Italy	5,340
May	Japan/Korea	120,360
May	Israel	47,090
June	Netherlands	21,100
July	Canada	32,300
September	Germany	12,220
September	Norway	14,350
November	France	3,690
November	United States of America	46,830
December	France	8,500

Notes:

[1] The costs given are the costs charged to the Prime Minister's Office. These include, for example, travel and subsistence costs for the No. 10 party, but exclude recoveries made from other Departments and from journalists travelling with the party.

Research and Development

Mr. Lawler asked the Prime Minister what measures the Government are adopting to improve the exploitation by industry of publicly funded research and development.

The Prime Minister: It is essential that advances in science, whether they occur in universities, Government laboratories or industry, are rapidly exploited to develop new products and improved services for sale by British industry and commerce in world markets. To this end we are giving particular priority to the development of improved partnership arrangements between industry, Government Departments and research institutions of all kinds. I attach great importance to this work, which will receive further impetus under an initiative called LINK.

Under LINK, the Government will spend £210 million over the next five years on research programmes which will bring together industry and publicly funded scientists on a collaborative basis. Industry will meet at least half the cost of these programmes, which will cover a wide range of new science and technology. All Government Departments with a significant R and D expenditure will take part in LINK, but the principal sponsors will be the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Education and Science, which will be announcing today further details of the programme.

The total of Government expenditure on R and D is very substantial, both absolutely and as a proportion of the national income, and bears comparison with all other technologically advanced countries. But the excellence of British science has not been matched by a rapid pace of application by British industry of the newly emerging technologies. Nor is the private sector investing as much of its own resources in R and D in this country as are our more successful competitors. For their part the Government are therefore actively reviewing their R and D programmes across all Departments, defence as well as civil, with the objective of increasing their contribution towards improving the efficiency, competitiveness and innovative capacity of British industry. Both the Advisory Council on Applied Research and Development (ACARD) and the Advisory Board on the Research Councils (ABRC) are assisting in this exercise and an assessment office on science and technology has been established in the Cabinet Office under the chief scientific adviser.

Mr. Sumberg asked the Prime Minister when the 1986 "Annual Review of Government Funded (R & D)" will be published.

The Prime Minister: "The Annual Review of Government Funded R & D 1986", the fourth in the series, will be published through Her Majesty's Stationery Office on Thursday, 11 December. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

"The Annual Review of Government Funded R & D" was first announced in the Government's response (Cmnd. 8591) to the House of Lords Select Committee report "Science and Government" in 1982. The review is prepared annually by the chief scientific adviser, Cabinet Office under the guidance of the interdepartmental committee of chief scientists.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Fletcher asked the Prime Minister whether there has been any change in the Government's policy towards the tapping of telephones of Members of Parliament since her answer on 31 October 1983, Official Report, c. 255; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As I made clear in my letter to Mr. Speaker of 8 December 1986, I can confirm that the Government's policy on the interception of the communications of Members of Parliament remains as stated in the undertaking given by the then Prime Minister, Lord Wilson of Rievaulx, on 17 November 1966, at columns 834-41, and reaffirmed by me on 6 February 1980 and on 31 October 1983 and by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary on 11 December 1984.

WALES

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing each of the readings of radioactive caesium found in sheep and lambs in Wales since 1 May, which were over 3,000 bequerels per kilogram, together with the date, the precise radioactivity levels, and the approximate location.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested, up to 4 November 1986, is given in the following table:

Date	District	Total radiocaesium level (Bq/Kg)
10 June 1986	Aberconwy	4,216
2 July 1986	Meirionnydd	3,704
11 July 1986	Montgomery	3,951
22 July 1986	Aberconwy	3,246
21 August 1986	Aberconwy	3,492
21 August 1986	Aberconwy	4,862
21 August 1986	Aberconwy	4,950
5 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,646
5 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,325
8 September 1986	Meirionnydd	3,999
8 September 1986	Meirionnydd	4,233
8 September 1986	Meirionnydd	3,317
11 September 1986	Aberconwy	4,166
12 September 1986	Montgomery	4,163
24 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,517
24 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,432
24 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,025
24 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,174
24 September 1986	Aberconwy	3,234
16 October 1986	Meirionnydd	3,060
17 October 1986	Meirionnydd	3,048
21 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,375
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,492
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,510
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,303
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,043
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,222
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,528
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,627
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,519
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,645
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,204
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,303
30 October 1986	Aberconwy	3,069
4 November 1986	Arfon	3,645
4 November 1986	Arfon	3,267
4 November 1986	Arfon	3,213
4 November 1986	Arfon	3,906
4 November 1986	Arfon	3,042

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Recent changes in statistical presentation of information will be dealt with when I write in response to a question of 3 December, at column 662, from the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould). I will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

There are no plans to make major alterations to the present statistical coverage, though we shall of course continue to review the quality and breadth of presentation and to produce occasional papers on matters of interest as appropriate.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each health authority the hospital out-patient waiting list in each health authority in 1978 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers of persons on hospital out-patient waiting lists at 30 June of each year since 1978 are given in the following table:

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Clwyd	4,597	5,072	5,211	4,832	5,604	6,415	7,368	8,204	8,822
East Dyfed	4,285	4,757	5,154	4,899	3,896	5,087	5,476	6,170	5,648
Pembrokeshire					1,806	1,732	2,545	2,352	2,156
Gwent	10,542	8,924	7,756	8,318	8,278	8,849	11,142	12,124	11,359
Gwynedd	2,916	3,198	2,922	2,943	3,520	3,027	3,620	3,909	4,145
Mid Glamorgan	12,475	14,629	14,737	12,945	15,835	15,975	17,757	19,967	18,393
Powys	289	169	159	231	223	325	314	363	654
South Glamorgan	10,366	13,096	11,128	12,067	15,183	15,295	15,079	16,169	16,239
West Glamorgan	12,200	12,378	13,003	13,029	14,530	12,803	15,254	17,339	16,296
WALES	57,670	62,223	60,070	59,264	68,875	69,508	78,555	86,597	83,712

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the urgent hospital in-patient waiting list for each health authority, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than one month, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their ranking in Wales by that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 31 March 1986, and is given in the following table:

Urgent cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists

	Total Number	Number waiting for more than 1 month	Number waiting for more than 1 month as a percentage of the total
East Dyfed	14	—	—
Powys	—	—	—
Gwynedd	22	5	22·7
Clwyd	256	91	35·5
West Glamorgan	647	411	63·5
South Glamorgan	1,300	913	70·2
Mid Glamorgan	412	301	73·1
Gwent	1,029	760	73·9
Pembrokeshire	456	388	85·1

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the non-urgent hospital in-patient waiting list for each health authority, together with the number of non-urgent cases waiting more than one year, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their ranking in Wales by that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 31st March 1986, and is given in the following table:

Non-urgent cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists

	Total Number	Number waiting for more than 1 year	Number waiting for more than 1 year as a per centage of total
Powys	46	2	4·3
Gwynedd	2,021	142	7·0
Clwyd	4,532	409	9·0
East Dyfed	2,179	220	10·1
West Glamorgan	4,453	469	10·5
Gwent	7,813	1,812	23·2
South Glamorgan	6,644	1,953	29·4
Mid Glamorgan	8,634	2,636	30·5
Pembrokeshire	1,991	1,121	56·3

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the total hospital in-patient waiting list for each health authority, the total population living in that area of that authority, the percentage the former represents of the latter and their ranking in Wales of that percentage.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The latest available information relates to 30 June 1986, and is given in the following table:

	Cases on hospital in-patient waiting lists	Estimated population mid-1985 (thousands)	Number of cases waiting per 1,000 population
Powys	70	111·4	0·6
Gwynedd	2,013	233·6	8·6
East Dyfed	2,101	226·6	9·3
Clwyd	4,872	397·9	12·2
West Glamorgan	4,955	364·1	13·6
Mid Glamorgan	9,090	533·9	17·0
Gwent	7,998	440·2	18·2
South Glamorgan	7,764	394·8	19·7
Pembrokeshire	2,794	109·3	25·6

THE ARTS

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Luce: There have been no significant changes during that period in the presentation of statistical information for which my Department is responsible, and none is currently being planned.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Visas

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas have been issued in (a) Ghana, (b) Bangladesh, (c) India and (d) Pakistan since the scheme began; and how many of these were issued without an interview.

Mr. Waddington: The information currently available centrally on entry clearances issued is given in the following table. It is usual practice to interview applicants for an entry clearance for settlement. It is estimated that in November the proportion of visitors, students and transit passengers dealt with who were not interviewed was about half in Ghana, negligible in Bangladesh, two thirds in India and over three quarters in Pakistan.

Persons issued with an entry clearance[1] to the United Kingdom in October-November 1986

Number of persons[6]

Country	Purpose			Total
	Settlement[2]	Other purposes
	October 1986	October 1986	November 1986[3]	October 1986
Ghana	—	[4]320	[5]1,600	—
Bangladesh	250	660	630	900
India	290	8,100	5,600	8,400
Pakistan	400	3,600	3,300	4,000

— Not available

[1] Entry certificates were issued to Bangladeshi and Indian citizens prior to 15 October, and to Ghanaian citizens prior to 23 October, otherwise the data relate to visas issued.

[2] Wives, children, persons for immediate settlement, husbands and fiance(e)s.

[3] Visitors, students and transit passengers.

[4] For period 1 to 22 October.

[5] For period 23 October to 30 November.

[6] Provisional data.

Police Manpower

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the relevant chief constables as to the total number of police in Surrey, Sussex, Essex, Hertfordshire, Kent and Buckinghamshire, respectively, and as to what numbers of those are engaged on traffic duties in each county.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Police Force	Police strength on 31 October 1986	Number of police officers allocated to traffic divisions on 31 October 1986
Surrey	1,624	214
Sussex	2,809	258
Essex	2,699	276
Hertfordshire	1,591	155
Kent	2,893	278
Thames Valley[1]	3,424	325

[1] Buckinghamshire is part of the Thames Valley police area and it is not possible to provide figures for Buckinghamshire alone.

Prisons (Fire-Fighting)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how often a fire-fighting exercise takes place at each prison in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy towards the presence in each prison in the United Kingdom of a prison officer with special fire-fighting responsibilities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether fire-fighting equipment is kept in each wing of prisons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: Governors of penal establishments in England and Wales nominate a prison officer known as the fire officer to be responsible to them for all fire matters. Arrangements are made for him to receive training as necessary with the local fire brigade. It is the fire officer's duty to familiarise himself with the fire precautions in force at the establishment and to develop such fire precautions as are considered necessary. He also trains other prison officers in the use of fire-fighting equipment.

Subject to any overriding security or control considerations a full fire pratice, which include a drill with fire-fighting equipment, should be held at least every six months. Where practicable, the exercises also includes the evacuation of selected buildings and calling the local fire brigade. Fire fighting equipment is located according to advice given by local fire authorities, which would normally result in equipment being placed in each prison wing.

Responsibility for penal establishments in Scotland and Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Prisoners (Central Criminal Court)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek to reduce traffic disruption by arranging for high security prisoners held in remand, who are on trial at the Central Criminal Court, to be lodged during the period of their trials at a secure place close to the court in place of Brixton prison.

Mr. Mellor: In the longer term the new prison and adjacent Crown court at Woolwich should reduce the need for high security escorts. In the meantime there is no suitable accommodation nearer to the Central Criminal court than Brixton prison.

Buckinghamshire (Councillors)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police on the progress of inquiries into allegation of a failure to declare pecuniary interests by Buckinghamshire county councillors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that an investigation into this matter is continuing; a report will be submitted to the DPP in due course.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the new contract wheel clamping service for the level of illegal parking by coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner has informed me that wheel clamps suitable for fixing to coaches are available to all the wheel clamping teams. As with any vehicle, where the driver is present the police will normally direct the driver to move the vehicle rather than fixing a wheel clamp.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to a question from the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould).

Changes now being considered or planned include:

A survey of the ethnic origin of clients of the probation service on 31 March 1987; publication of regular statistics on the segregation of prisoners under Rule 43; alterations to the returns on experiments on animals to reflect the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act; revised returns on the operation of immigration control at the ports; and monitoring of the operation of new visa arrangements.

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986, c. 633]: Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made from time to time in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in legislation and in the administrative systems on which some series are based, the development of new statistical techniques and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data. When such changes are made they are fully documented in the relevant statistical publications.

The main changes which have been made since 1979 to the statistics regularly collected and published by the Home Office include the following:

1980

Regular collection and publication of deaths in police custody.

Frequency of collection of statistics on liquor licensing changed from annual to triennial.

Compilation of statistics of passenger arrivals for EC nationals discontinued with the abolition of landing cards.

1981

Collection of information on those arrested during incidents of public disorder; repeated in 1985.

Collection of more detailed information on immigration from the Indian subcontinent.

Discontinuation of collection of statistics of deaths from drownings.

Introduction of annual statistical bulletin on deaths reported to coroners.

1982

Returns on domestic proceedings in magistrates' courts dropped.

First British Crime Survey carried out; repeated in 1984.

Publication of Bulletin in statistics of mentally disordered offenders; repeated in 1985.

1983

Publication of ethnic crime statistics for the Metropolitan Police District; repeated in 1984.

Regular publication of statistics on deportations began.

Publication of new analyses on causes of accidental fires.

1984

New returns on domestic proceedings in magistrates' courts.

Collection of information on the ethnic origin of prisoners established; first results published June 1985.

Basis of collation of statistics on prison medicines changed from doses dispensed to number administered.
Publication of long-term projections of the prison population.
Publication of statistics on decisions on variation of leave and on appeals dealt with by immigration appellate authorities commenced in the Immigration and Nationality Department Report.

1985

New returns on waiting times in magistrates' courts.
Analysis of reconvictions and recalls of life licensees.
Collection began of information on nationality of prisoners.
New returns on special service calls to fire brigades and incidents involving dangerous substances.
Prison medical statistics improved and extended.

1986

Returns on the operation of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; returns on the operation of Section 62 of the Criminal Law Act 1977 discontinued.
First annual Statistical Bulletin on refugee statistics.

Vehicles (Theft)

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reported crimes in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 involved theft of vehicles or theft from vehicles.

Mr. Hurd: Numbers of offences of theft from vehicles, theft or unauthorised taking of motor vehicles and theft of pedal cycles recorded in the last 10 years were published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1985" (Cmnd. 10, table 2.12).

Industrial Counterfeiting

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the levels of fines imposed or cases involving industrial counterfeiting.

Mr. Hurd: In 1985, the average fine imposed on offenders convicted under section 1 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 was £203, broken down as follows:

	Magistrates' Court £	Crown Court £
Males	172	242
Females	79	135
Companies	227	1,129

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the level of penalties available for industrial counterfeiting.

Mr. Hurd: Offences under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, to whom representations about the Act are normally made. I hope to reply shortly to my hon. Friend's letter to me on 11 November on this subject.

Police Consultative Committee (Camden)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the first meeting is due to be held of the new statutory police consultative committee in Camden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that a meeting is being arranged for 22 January.

State Security

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his statement of 3 December, Official Report, column 939, in what form he gives direction and guidance to the director general of MI5 as to how the Security Service goes about its business.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to the full account I gave on 3 December of my responsibility for the Security Service, at columns 937-45.

Heroin Addicts

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the Government's estimate of the number of herion addicts in each year since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: Because of the nature of the activity, it is not possible to make any reliable estimate of the total number of heroin addicts in the United Kingdom. Information on addicts notified to the Home Office in the years 1979 to 1984 who were reported as addicted to heroin, alone or in combination with other notifiable drugs, is given in table 11 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs in the United Kingdom, 1984", (Home Office statistical bulletin 23/85). Corresponding figures for 1985 will be published shortly. Some research carried out in 1981 in two urban areas in England suggested that the number of notified addicts was about one fifth of the actual number of opioid addicts in the local population at that time. Researchers believe that there are considerable local variations in such "multipliers" and that they may also change rapidly over time.

SCOTLAND

Tourism

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which local authorities in Scotland have published tourism strategies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available centrally. I understand from the Scottish tourist board that all area tourist boards, which include local authority representation, are in the process of producing local tourism strategies. These will complement the board's national business and marketing plans.

Migrant Workers (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dundee, West on 25 November, Official Report, column 176, how many of the migrant workers in Dundee are reported to be working overseas or at sea.

Mr. Lang: From the 1981 census of population, it is estimated on the basis of a 10 per cent. sample that about 200 people whose area of residence was in the city of Dundee were working overseas or at sea.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will instruct the local authorities in Glasgow and Edinburgh to produce detailed evacuation plans for a maximum credible accident under adverse meteorological conditions at the nearest nuclear power station.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no powers to direct local authorities on these matters. It is for the authorities concerned to draw up contingency plans for responding in the unlikely event of an accident at a civil nuclear installation, including arrangements for assisting with evacuation where this is considered advisable. The plans should be compatible with those prepared by nuclear site operators and other appropriate bodies, including the emergency services.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are in existence for the emergency supply of water following a nuclear accident for Edinburgh and Glasgow.

Mr. Ancram: Government plans for civil nuclear emergencies, and those of nuclear site operators, include arrangements for notifying water authorities whose supplies may be affected, for monitoring these supplies and for advising authorities accordingly. While drinking water would rank very low as a health risk following a nuclear accident, if monitoring results indicated a need for action the responsible water authority would implement plans to introduce alternative supplies.

Fast Reactors

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list in tabular form the sums paid by the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro Electricity Board in each year since 1973 for research, design and demonstration of fast reactors; and for each year and for each category who are the recipients of such funding.

Mr. Lang: I shall ask the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Motor Accidents

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were injured, where motor accidents were involved, in the parliamentary constituency of Midlothian in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and to the nearest available date in 1986; and if he will give the figures in calendar months of the respective years.

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of people injured in, on or by motor vehicles in Midlothian district were as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	[1]1986 (6 months)
January	26	25	11	24
February	28	35	30	27
March	16	31	25	40
April	23	22	27	31
May	22	20	46	44
June	26	32	23	25
July	21	18	32	—
August	20	19	35	—
September	32	34	49	—
October	34	42	30	—
November	24	19	26	—
December	15	33	27	—
TOTAL	287	330	361	191

[1] Provisional.

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many motorists were killed in driving accidents in the parliamentary constituency of Midlothian in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and to the nearest possible date in 1986; and if he will give the figures in the calendar months of the years referred to.

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of car drivers killed in road accidents in Midlothian district were as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	[1]1986 (6 months)
January	—	—	—	—
February	—	—	—	—
March	1	—	1	—
April	—	—	1	—
May	—	—	—	—
June	—	—	—	—
July	—	—	1	—
August	1	3	—	—
September	—	1	—	—
October	—	—	—	—
November	1	—	—	—
December	—	—	—	—
TOTAL	3	4	3	Nil

[1] Provisional.

Figures include drivers of taxis, estate cars, three and four wheeled cars, minibuses and motor caravans.

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many motorists were killed or injured in driving accidents in Scotland in the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and to the nearest available date in 1986; and if he will give the figures for the calendar months of the years mentioned.

Mr. Ancram: The numbers of car drivers killed or injured in road accidents in Scotland were as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986 (6 months)[1]
January	23	13	21	13
February	10	16	3	12
March	16	12	17	7
April	7	5	10	12
May	14	2	12	12
June	9	10	17	8
July	6	9	12	—
August	10	14	15	—
September	14	19	20	—
October	20	13	10	—
November	6	14	13	—
December	11	23	23	—
TOTAL	146	150	173	64

[1] Provisional.

Figures include drivers of taxis, estate cars, three and four wheeled cars, minibuses and motor caravans.

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give an estimate of the costs involved of every fatality in a motor accident and of every injury in such accidents; and how such estimates are calculated.

Mr. Ancram: The average costs per accident, at 1985 prices, are estimated as follows:

	£
Fatal	204,200
Serious injury	11,420
Slight injury	1,550

A single accident may involve the death of, or injury to, more than one person. A description of the way in which these costs are estimated is contained in "Road Accidents, Scotland, 1985" a copy of which is in the Library.

New Towns

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is now able to respond to the submissions from district councils with new towns concerning an end to the housebuilding moratorium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 5 December at column 755. The submissions from district councils, which were taken into account in reaching decisions, were discussed when I met representatives of the local authorities, together with the hon. Members for Livingston (Mr. Cook) and for Cunninghame, South (Mr. Lambie), on 3 October 1986.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to new town development corporations concerning communicating the decisions of development corporation boards to the press and public.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend continues to encourage the development corporations to take whatever steps they consider appropriate to provide the press and public with as much information as possible about the decisions of the boards and about the corporations' activities generally.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the urgent hospital in-patient waiting list for each health board, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than one month, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their ranking in Scotland by that percentage.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the non-urgent hospital in-patient waiting list for each health board, together with the number of non-urgent cases waiting more than one year, the percentage of the latter represents of the former and their ranking in Scotland by that percentage.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the total hospital in-patient waiting list of each health board, the total population living in each health board area, the percentage the former represents of the latter and their ranking in Scotland by that percentage.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

	Waiting list as at September 1985	Population as at June 1985	Waiting list as per cent. of population	Ranking
Argyll and Clyde	7,209	446,637	1·61	7
Ayrshire and Arran	5,120	375,212	1·36	8
Borders	318	101,705	0·31	13
Dumfries and Galloway	2,687	146,562	1·83	1
Fife	5,816	344,019	1·69	4
Forth Valley	2,593	272,426	0·95	11
Grampian	8,641	500,566	1·73	3
Greater Glasgow	16,006	968,801	1·65	5
Highland	2,543	198,617	1·28	9
Lanarkshire	6,605	568,077	1·16	10
Lothian	13,381	745,229	1·80	2
Orkney	58	19,351	0·30	14
Shetland	145	23,440	0·62	12
Tayside	6,494	394,322	1·65	6
Western Isles	61	31,545	0·19	15
Scotland	77,677	5,136,509	1·51	—

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the hospital out-patient waiting list in each health board in 1978 and each subsequent year.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 26 November Official Report column 274, if he will publish the formal comments of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate on the exercise that was conducted at Torness power station on 18 September, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 1 December 1986, c. 451]: No. It is not the policy of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to publish correspondence with licensees. I am aware, however, that following the demonstration of the South of Scotland Electricity Board's emergency arrangements for Torness nuclear power station on 18 September 1986, a number of adjustments and improvements have been required and these are being implemented. The inspectorate requires a satisfactory demonstration of the emergency arrangements before fuel loading is permitted.

Local Authorities (Capital Projects)

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the operation of section 94, controls on expenditure on capital projects undertaken by councils where long leaseback arrangements are made with (a) private sector organisations, (b) public sector bodies and (c) limited companies in which the local authority has a majority interest.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 9 December 1986]: While we keep their operation under review, my right hon. and learned Friend and I are content that the controls on Scottish local authority capital expenditure operate satisfactorily in relation to projects of the kinds described in my hon. Friend's question.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exports

4. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the export performance of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: Non-oil exports have been at their highest ever level in recent months. The volume of non-oil exports should rise further in 1987 reflecting faster growth in the United Kingdom's overseas markets and our improved competitiveness.

44. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the current level of exports from the north-east region.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is not available as export figures are not collected on a regional basis.

Cement Industry

15. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he proposes to take to protect the United Kingdom cement industry from unfair overseas competition.

64. Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what active steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to protect the British cement industry from the effects of the dumping of subsidised Greek cement in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department will continue to monitor very closely the trend in imports of cement and take action where the threat of unfair competition emerges. In the case of subsidised Greek cement my continuous pressure for action has brought results. I expect the European Commission to reach agreement before Christmas on the phasing out of Greek export subsidies with a safeguard clause enabling immediate action to be taken in special cases such as cement. The Greek Government have also recognised the need to ensure that cement exports do not unfairly disrupt our market and I hope that complementary discussions will also be concluded before Christmas.

Shipbuilding

16. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions in the European Economic Community on shipbuilding.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I told the House in the debate on the new draft directive on shipbuilding on Monday, we already have the prospect of a regime which will allow our builders to compete more fairly, and to do so within an overall level of subvention that is greater than present arrangements permit. These are already considerable improvements on the present fifth directive. We shall seek agreement on the new directive at the Industry Council arranged for 22 December. With the support of this House, we shall continue to press the Commission for a higher aid ceiling than the 26 per cent. of cost which it has proposed.

23. Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals on aids to shipbuilding he will be putting to the next meeting of the European Community Council of Industry Ministers on 22 December.

Mr. Giles Shaw: May I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I have just given to the hon. Member for Jarrow (Mr. Dixon). I stress that we shall spare no effort in pressing for a higher aid ceiling than the Commission has proposed.

Manufacturing Industry

17. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the comparable figure for the same month seven years ago.

Mr. Pattie: The hon. Member will appreciate that monthly data can be erratic. However, since the trough of the recession in 1981, manufacturing output has increased by over 13 per cent. to reach a level of 105·6 in September 1986, based on 1980 equal to 100. This was some ½ per cent. lower than the level of output in September 1979.

28. Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the current level of investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Pattie: Investment in manufacturing rose by nearly 6 per cent. in 1985, and was 25 per cent. higher than in 1983. In the first three quarters of this year it was slightly lower (2½ per cent.) than in the same period last year. But the underlying determinants of manufacturing investment —continuing growth in the economy, buoyant profits, improved profitability and a low rate of inflation— remain favourable. Most forecasters expect a significant increase in manufacturing investment next year.

40. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he proposes to take to encourage regeneration of the manufacturing industry and an increase in output.

Mr. Pattie: We shall continue to pursue policies which encourage sustained economic growth, falling inflation and competitive enterprise. And we shall continue to monitor and adjust where necessary the comprehensive range of support which my Department makes available to help industry develop its competitive strength.

47. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Pattie: Investment in manufacturing rose by nearly 6 per cent. in 1985, and was 25 per cent. higher than in 1983. In the first three quarters of this year it was slightly lower (2½ per cent.) than in the same period last year. But the underlying determinants of manufacturing investment —continuing growth in the economy, buoyant profits, improved profitability and a low rate of inflation — remain favourable. Most forecasters expect a significant increase in manufacturing investment next year.

60. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the most recent statistics for capital investment by manufacturing industry; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: Investment in manufacturing rose by nearly 6 per cent. in 1985, and was 25 per cent. higher than in 1983. In the first three quarters of this year it was slightly lower (2½ per cent.) than in the same period last year. But the underlying determinants of manufacturing investment —continuing growth in the economy, buoyant profits, improved profitability and a low rate of inflation — remain favourable. Most forecasters expect a significant increase in manufacturing investment next year.

61. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the cumulative deterioration in the balance of trade in manufacturing since 1978.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first 10 months of 1986 trade in manufactures was in deficit by £4·6 billion compared with a surplus of £5·1 billion in 1978 as a whole.

Research and Technology Programme

18. Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the objectives and progress so far of his Department's small firms merit award for research and technology programme; if he is considering any changes to the programme for the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The small firms merit award for research and technology is intended to encourage new and innovative companies in research and development initiatives. The first 20 awards were made in October and all the winning projects will be monitored and considered for further support next October. I consider that the scheme has been very successful in stimulating good innovative projects, although it will be some time before their commercial prospects become clear. I shall consider how the scheme might be developed in the light of experience of this pilot scheme.

41. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current situation for research and development funding from his Department.

Mr. Pattie: My Department plans to spend £415 million in 1986-87 on support for research and development.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

19. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average interval between reference of a merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and submission of a report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in (i) 1982-83 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: The average period taken by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for investigation into mergers referred in the years 1982 and 1983 was about six months. The average for mergers referred in 1986 has so far been about five months.

Rover Group

20. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the state of the Government's proposals for the privatisation of the Rover Group.

Mr. Channon: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made on 2 December.

25. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Government have any plans to give further financial support to Rover plc; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The question of any further financial support for Rover Group operations will be addressed in the context of the 1987 corporate plan which the Government expect to receive around the end of the year.

52. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Rover Group plc.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As my right hon. Friend explained in his statement on 2 December, Mr. Day's review of the plans of all Rover Group operating companies will form the basis of the 1987 corporate plan. My right hon. Friend will announce the Government's response when Mr. Day's recommendations have been received and fully considered.

Manufactured Goods

21. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the trade deficit in manufactured goods.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend meets the CBI regularly at the National Economic Development Council and on other occasions. At present he has no plans for a special meeting on this subject.

Leicester

22. Mr. Greville Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps taken by Her Majesty's Government have stimulated a revival in the traditional industries of the city of Leicester.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This Government's economic and industrial policies are creating the right conditions for sustainable growth in jobs and output. The traditional industries of Leicester have also benefited from the wide range of schemes operated by my Department to assist industry in adjusting to the needs of today's market.

Compulsory Training Levies

24. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had any recent discussions with the Confederation of British Industry about the implications for industry of compulsory training levies.

Mr. Pattie: No.

Takeovers

26. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to amend companies legislation in order to provide safeguards against takeovers leading to asset-stripping exercises which involve the closure of branch factories.

Mr. Howard: No. Current legislation enables my right hon. Friend to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission any merger which qualifies under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act and which he considers raises questions of public interest which deserve further consideration. The question of changes to the legislative controls over mergers falls for consideration in the review of mergers and restrictive trade practices. If the hon. Gentleman has any particular points which he would like the review to consider, I invite him to put them to my Department.

Invisible Trade

27. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the trend of Great Britain's invisible trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The surplus on invisible trade has increased in the three years to 1985 and the figures in respect of the first three quarters of 1986 indicate that this trend is continuing.

59. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the method of calculation invisibles in the balance of trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: None. The method of calculating the balance on invisible trade has not been changed for many years.

Rolls-Royce

29. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the proposed privatisation of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Pattie: Work is continuing on preparations for the privatisation of Rolls-Royce. Further announcements will be made in due course.

Confederation of British Industry

30. Mr. Charles Wardle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Channon: I last met Sir Terence Beckett at the National Economic Development Council on 23 September. I have since met the CBI's overseas committee, on 16 October, to discuss the launch of the new GATT round.

32. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the director general of the Confederation of British Industry.

Mr. Channon: I meet the director general regularly at the National Economic Development Council and on other occasions. The next meeting of NEDC is on 7 January 1987.

Lawnmowers

31. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to ensure compliance with the European Economic Community's Lawnmowers (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Under section 7 of the Lawnmower (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations 1986 the Secretary of State has powers to carry out periodic checks, but it is envisaged that these powers will be exercised only when there are grounds for thinking that a manufacturer or importer is failing to comply with the directive. In such circumstances the inspection would be carried out by officials of the Department of Trade and Industry, assisted if necessary by suitable technical experts.

Regional Policy

33. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will define the Government's regional policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The aim of the Government's regional industrial policy is to reduce on a stable long-term basis regional imbalances in employment opportunities. This is achieved through encouraging the indigenous potential of the assisted areas particularly by generating wealth creating schemes in areas of high unemployment.

Textile Industry

34. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next proposes to meet the Trades Union Congress's textile committee to discuss prospects for the textile industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have no plans to do so at present. My hon. Friend the Minister for Trade met the committee on 5 March and 25 July to discuss the position on the multi-fibre arrangement. Officials dealing with textiles and clothing matters also hold periodic meetings with the committee and have kept in regular touch with it on the progress of the MFA and related issues.

Bankruptcies

35. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many bankruptcies there have been in the last 12 months.

Mr. Howard: The provisional estimate is 7,129 bankruptcies in England and Wales in the 12 months to 31 October.

Counterfeiting

36. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to announce the Government's proposals following consultations with the automotive spare parts industry on the White Paper, "Intellectual Property and Innovation".

Mr. Pattie: The Government are currently looking at ways in which legislation implementing the unregistered design right proposed in the White Paper might be drafted to ensure that competition in spare parts is not prevented. I cannot, however, promise an early announcement of our conclusions because of the need to consider the consequential effects on all sectors of industry.

M. P. B. Russell and Company Limited

37. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint inspectors under the sections 431 and 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to look into the affairs of M. P. B. Russell and Co. Limited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. The company is in compulsory liquidation. Investigation is a matter for the Official Receiver at Atlantic house, Holborn viaduct, London EC1N 2HD.

Inward Investment

38. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's estimate of the number of jobs resulting from inward investment since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department's estimate of the number of jobs resulting from inward investment since 1979 is over 222,000.

Training Facilities

39. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to encourage industry to provide more facilities for training.

Mr. Pattie: My Department encourages industry to increase its investment in training by providing a range of assistance for training development, particularly in the field of new technology. For example, my Department offers learning packages on the application of a range of microelectronics-led technologies, supports the development of distance learning video courses and assists interactive video projects which result in new training or educational programmes to be used in industry and commerce. My Department is also involved in joint projects with the Department of Employment, the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Education and Science in the training field.

Steel Industry

42. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to ensure that European competition with the public and private sectors of the British steel industry is fair.

Mr. Giles Shaw: An essential condition for fair competition is strict control over subsidies. The Government therefore supported the agreement in the Council of Ministers in October 1985 to stop nearly all state aids to the Community steel industry from January 1986. I was pleased that the Council which I chaired on 20 October this year confirmed unanimously its agreement to the strict new code on subsidies now in force, and urged the Commission to enforce it strictly.

Development Agencies

43. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy for the establishment of development agencies in England; and if he will agree to the formation of a development agency for Devon and Cornwall.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the particular circumstances of England I see no overall advantage in the establishment by central Government of regional development agencies. I do, however, welcome local initiatives aimed at creating regional development companies—such as that recently created in the north of England by employers, employee representatives and local authorities there—where local interests feel that such companies would be appropriate and successful.

South Africa

45. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the latest information on the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and South Africa; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: United Kingdom trade with the Republic of South Africa for the nine months ending September 1986 showed a crude balance of trade deficit of £27·1 million. For the same period in 1979 there was a crude balance of trade surplus of £36·5 million.

51. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to publish an annual list of wage levels in South Africa relevant to the European code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am placing in the Library of the House the table published by the University of South Africa of supplemented living level (SLL) requirements for August 1985 and Februry 1986. These are the figures relevant to the latest completed reporting period for which companies are now submitting their returns under the code. It is, of course, stated clearly in the code that pay based on the SLL for an average sized family must be considered the absolute minimum and further explanatory guidance to British companies is contained in Cmnd. 9860.

58. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with progress by companies reporting under the European Community code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa in eliminating segregation at the work place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 1984-85 reporting period, for the fourth successive year, companies continued to make encouraging progress in this respect. But desegregation at the workplace was not yet universal and there is accordingly still some scope for improvement by a small minority of the companies concerned.

Austin Rover

46. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to meet the chairman of Austin Rover to discuss that company's future.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend and I meet Mr. Day, the chairman of Austin Rover and Rover Group from time to time to discuss matters of mutual interest. As my right hon. Friend told the House on 2 December we expect the 1987 corporate plan to set out a positive course for the continuation of Austin Rover as a major producer and leading exporter of cars made in Britain. It is due to be received around the turn of the year.

Airbus

48. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received regarding launch aid for the A330 and A340 Airbus projects.

Mr. Pattie: My Department has received representations in favour of launch aid being provided for the A330/A340 from a number of hon. Members and from others with an interest in these projects.

50. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on Government support for Airbus.

Mr. Pattie: The Government support, in principle, the development of the Airbus family of aircraft to cover a wider market range and hope that British Aerospace will participate in the new Airbus projects which prove to have strong prospects of commercial viability. The importance to the United Kingdom civil aircraft industry of participation in the Airbus programme is also recognised by the Government. British Aerospace's application for launch aid, which was submitted on 17 October, is being carefully considered. The Government will announce their decisions on BAe's application in due course.

"Eighth Company Law Directive"

49. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has so far received on his Department's consultation paper on the "Eighth Company Law Directive"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As of this morning, my Department had received 17 responses to the consultative document. My officials have also had a number of useful discussions with representatives of the professional bodies. Further discussions are planned.

Copyright

53. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to protect British copyright industries.

Mr. Pattie: The Government have already announced their proposals for the reform of the United Kingdom copyright law in the White Paper "Intellectual Property and Innovation" (Cmnd. 9712) and intend to legislate when the parliamentary timetable permits.

With regard to protection overseas the Government continue to press upon countries where protection is inadequate the need for comprehensive and enforceable copyright law. The United Kingdom will also be giving its full support to the objective recently agreed by the contracting parties to the GATT that the new round of international trade negotiations should address the need to promote effective and adequate protection of intellectual property rights.

Imperial Chemical Industries

54. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to meet either the present or future chairmen of ICI or both.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have no plans to meet either Sir John Harvey-Jones or Mr. Denys Henderson in the near future, although my Department has frequent contact with ICI at all levels of the company.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

55. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects the bilateral negotiations arising from the multi-fibre arrangement to be concluded.

Mr. Alan Clark: Bilateral agreements have now been initialled with all the Community low-cost suppliers under the multi-fibre arrangement, as I explained to the House in the debate on 2 December 1986. Details of the quota levels negotiated both for the Community as a whole for the whole five year period and on a provisional basis for individual member states for 1987, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Industrial Training

56. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives he has taken to encourage industrial firms to step up their training programmes.

Mr. Pattie: My Department encourages industry to increase its investment in training by providing a range of assistance for training development, particularly in the field of new technology. For example, my Department offers learning packages on the application of a range of microelectronics-led technologies, supports the development of distance learning video courses and assists interactive video projects which result in new training or educational programmes to be used in industry and commerce. My Department is also involved in joint projects with the Department of Employment, the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Education and Science in the training field.

Foundry Industry

57. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current position of the foundry industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Demand for castings continues at a depressed level and output in many sectors is running lower than in previous years. The foundry industries, however, continue to modernise and to take steps to increase both productivity and competitiveness.

BTR-Pilkington

62. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he proposes to refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the bid by BTR for Pilkingtons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The proposed acquisition of Pilkington Brothers plc by BTR plc is being considered by the Director General of Fair Trading. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make his decision on whether to refer the proposed acquisition to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the light of the director general's advice.

Package Holidays

63. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received during 1986 concerning people who had booked package holidays with reputable British travel firms and were then forced to share their hotel room because of overbooking.

Mr. Howard: I have received one such representation, regarding a relatively small travel firm which is not a member of ABTA.

United States (Formal Protest)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the points of principle he raised in his formal protest to the United States on 26 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government's protest was concerned with our objections to United States extraterritorial re-export regulations and the action taken against Systime plc under those regulations.

EC (Third World Imports)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify in detail Her Majesty's Government's proposals to the European Economic Community for improved access to the European Economic Community for Third world products in the forthcoming general agreement on tariffs and trade negotiations.

Mr. Alan Clark: The declaration of GATT Ministers on opening the Uruguay round, agreed on 20 September, establishes the basis of negotiations for all 92 contracting parties to GATT. The declaration provides, inter alia, that the negotiations shall aim to bring about further liberalisation and expansion of world trade to the benefit of all countries, especially the less developed, including the improvement of access to markets; also to improve the multilateral trading system, and to bring about a wider coverage of world trade under GATT disciplines. The declaration records the developing countries' expectation that as their economic and commercial situations improve they will participate more fully in the framework of rights and obligations under the general agreement. All the major concerns of both developed and developing countries will therefore be addressed. A copy of the declaration has been placed in the Library.

Kangaroo Skin

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to require goods containing kangaroo skin to carry a mark to distinguish them from products devoid of such skin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no present plans to do so.

Transworld Festival Company

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will institute an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the liquidation of Transworld Festival Company.

Mr. Howard: Transworld Festival Company was a trading style used by Transworld Leisure plc against which a winding-up order was made in the Liverpool district registry of the High Court of Justice on 10 October 1986. Accordingly, the Official Receiver, who is also liquidator of the company, is under a statutory duty to investigate its affairs and his inquiries are continuing.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Counterfeiting

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the trend in the use of the United Kingdom as a base for the production of counterfeit goods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The production in the United Kingdom of counterfeit goods is a covert activity on which there is no firm information. I have received representations alleging that such production is increasing and am considering these representations carefully.

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to increase the penalties for offences of industrial counterfeiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EEC Trade Statistics

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total value of the manufactured goods which the United Kingdom sent to and imported from the European Economic Community in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures for the rest of the world.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the year ending October 1986, United Kingdom exports of manufactures to the European Communities totalled £23½ billion and imports £34 billion. Exports to the rest of the world were £30 billion and imports £26¼ billion. These figures are on the overseas trade statistics basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Small Businesses (VAT)

65. Mr. Wallace asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of small businesses likely to be subjected to the new non-mitigable penalties for late submission of value added tax returns; if he will arrange a review of the effects of such penalties on small businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Following a recent substantial improvement in VAT compliance I expect only a minority of all registered businesses to become liable to surcharge. I regret that it is not possible to make separate estimates in regard to small businesses. Otherwise, I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown).

66. Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the likely effects on small businesses of the new non-mitigable penalties for late submission of value added tax returns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: A number of representations have been received from trade associations and individual businesses about the effects on cash flow of adhering to the due date for the payment of VAT on Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

The recent consultation paper, "VAT: Small Business Review" makes a number of important proposals for assisting small businesses in regard to the accounting requirements for the tax. The Government are also committed to a full review of the operation of the new penalties and default surcharge system before the 1988 Budget.

Black Economy

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the current size of the black economy (a) overall and (b) in the construction industry;

(2) what information he has concerning the size of the black economy in each of the last 10 years;

(3) if he will estimate the total cost to the Exchequer in lost revenue of the black economy in each of the last 10 years;

(4) if he will estimate the total cost to the Exchequer in lost revenue as a result of the black economy in the construction industry in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: By its nature, it is not possible to form any reliable estimate of the size of the black economy, or whether it is growing or contracting, either overall or in relation to the construction industry. I regret, therefore, that it is not possible reliably to estimate the cost in lost revenue attributable to the black economy.

Construction Industry (VAT)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in view of the level of value added tax evasion in the construction industry, he will introduce a nil value added tax threshold for that industry.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Gross National Product

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of gross national product will be taken up by public expenditure in the current financial year; and what are the comparable percentage figures for the United States of America, Germany, and Japan in the most recent annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor: General Government expenditure as a percentage of GDP is expected to be 43¼ per cent. in 1986-87, as published in Table 2.1 of the autumn statement. In 1983-84 it was 45¾ per cent. The internationally comparable measure calculated by the OECD, general Government outlays as a percentage of GDP, was 48 per cent. in the United Kingdom in 1984. The comparable figure for Germany was 48 per cent. and for Japan 33 per cent. The 1984 figure for the United States is not yet available; the 1983 figure was 38 per cent.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer of 25 November, Official Report, c. 240-2, if he will give a breakdown between all Government Departments and agencies of the figures given in that answer; and whether all expenditure on behalf of Government Departments and agencies on advertising was made through the Central Office of Information.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures on the arrears of rent outstanding to each local authority in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have today arranged for the information to be placed in the Library. The figures were, in the majority of cases, supplied to the Department by the local authorities in their subsidy claim forms. They show, disappointingly, that at 1 April 1986 rent arrears in England amounted in total to over £210 million. This is about 5·7 per cent. of the total annual rent roll and there has been no reduction overall in this proportion since 1985.

In the worst individual case, an authority has reported to us figures which show arrears equal to almost two thirds of its annual rent roll. The 20 worst authorities have each reported arrears above 8 per cent. and together have a debt burden of over £100 million. Arrears on this scale are damaging to both tenants and ratepayers. It cannot be good for the wellbeing of individual tenants who owe rent to allow them to go on incurring further debts without seeking lasting solutions to their problems. The majority of tenants who are not in debt have to make good the interest charged, and ratepayers bear the costs if the debts are written off. Rents forgone in this way reduce the resources available to local authorities for vital maintenance and repair work.

Over 300 local housing authorities have managed to keep their arrears below 5 per cent. of their annual rent roll and well over 100 of these authorities have arrears below 2 per cent. There are authorities with social and economic characteristics similar to those among the worst performers which yet have much lower proportions of arrears. This demonstrates that there is a clear failure on the part of a minority of authorities to face up to their responsibilities, both to their tenants and to their ratepayers.

I recognise that there are doubts about the accuracy of some of the figures supplied by authorities. When I met representatives of the local authority associations earlier in the year to discuss the 1985 figures, we agreed that our officers should get together with the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accounting to develop a system of returns to provide more accurate information. That work is under way.

I am looking to the associations to develop also, with officers of my Department, an improved basis for comparing authorities with similar problems. By that means, the factors that cause large levels of arrears can be better identified and guidance developed on good practice in controlling the levels. Advice is, of course, already available from specialists in the Department and our aim is to develop that in the light of this exercise.

Inner Area Programme

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report those local authorities involved in the inner area programme giving classification and date of admission to the programme.

Mr. Tracey: The table shows the local authorities in England which currently submit inner area programmes as urban programme partnership or programme authorities, and other districts designated under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978.

Authority	Present status	When admitted
Barnsley	Designated	September 1978
Birmingham	Partnership	December 1978
Blackburn	Programme	April 1983 (designated September 1978)
Bolton	Programme	September 1978
Bradford	Programme	September 1978
Brent	Programme	April 1983 (designated September 1978
Burnley	Designated	April 1983
Coventry	Programme	April 1983
Doncaster	Designated	September 1978
Ealing	Designated	September 1978
Gateshead	Partnership	December 1978
Greenwich	Designated	September 1981 (part of Docklands Partnership 1979-81, first designated September 1978)
Hackney	Partnership	January 1979
Hammersmith and Fulham	Programme	September 1978
Haringey	Designated	September 1978
Hartlepool	Designated	September 1978
Islington	Partnership	January 1979
Kingston upon Hull	Programme	September 1978
Knowsley	Programme	April 1983
Lambeth	Partnership	January 1979
Langbaurgh	Designated	April 1983
Leeds	Programme	September 1978
Leicester	Programme	September 1978
Lewisham	Designated	September 1981 (part of Docklands Partnership 1979-81, first designated September 1978)
Liverpool	Partnership	December 1978
Manchester	Partnership	December 1978
Middlesbrough	Programme	September 1978
Newcastle	Partnership	December 1978
Newham	Designated	September 1981 (part of Docklands Partnership 1979-81, first designated September 1978)
North Tyneside	Programme	September 1978
Nottingham	Programme	September 1978
Oldham	Programme	September 1978
Rochdale	Programme	April 1983 (designated September 1978)
Rotherham	Designated	September 1978
St. Helens	Designated	September 1978
Salford	Partnership	December 1978
Sandwell	Programme	April 1983 (designated September 1978)
Sefton	Designated	September 1978
Sheffield	Programme	September 1978
South Tyneside	Programme	September 1978
Southwark	Designated	September 1981 (part of Docklands Partnership 1979-81, first designated September 1978)
Sunderland	Programme	September 1978
Tower Hamlets	Designated	September 1981 (part of Docklands Partnership 1979-81, first designated September 1978)
Walsall	Designated	April 1983
Wandsworth	Programme	April 1983 (designated September 1978)
Wigan	Designated	September 1978
Wirral	Programme	September 1978
Wolverhampton	Programme	November 1978

Marine Pollution

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the incidence of new synthetic substances being discharged into Britain's rivers, estuaries and coastal waters; and what is his policy towards taking decisions on whether such xenobiotic substances should be discharged on the basis of technically available reduction options.

Mr. Waldegrave: New synthetic substances can only be placed on the market following notification to the Government and presentation of environmental information to enable an assessment to be made of their potential hazards, including those to the aquatic environment.

There exists limited information on discharges of synthetic substances to waters either from manufacture or from use, or from point and diffuse sources. Decisions on the control of discharges are taken on the basis of the quality objective approach and may require substitution or control of use as well as discharge controls.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has any plans to revise and update the estimated loads of contaminants carried by British rivers into the North sea quoted in the final report prepared for his Department by the Institute of Offshore Engineering (May 1984) entitled "Input of Contaminants to the North Sea from the United Kingdom"; what assessment has been made of the reliability of the 1984 calculation techniques and of the river monitoring programme on the basis of which the load estimates were made.

Mr. Waldegrave: The loads of contaminants entering the North sea via rivers and by direct discharge have been re-estimated as part of the preparations for the forthcoming North sea conference. This re-assessment has been based on a better method of calculation and on more sensitive analyses.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance Her Majesty's Government issue to industry about measures to prevent pollution of sediments at source or prior to discharge.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government do not issue advice to industry concerning measures to prevent the pollution of sediments by discharges. Discharge consents for aqueous effluent are set by water authorities and in setting these consents they consider the effects of the discharge on the aqueous environment—including sediments.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies Her Majesty's Government have conducted into the technical and economical feasibility of reducing hydrocarbon discharges into the freshwater, marine and estuarine eco-systems to 5 ng/L. from oil refineries operating within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government have conducted no such studies. It is possible, but very expensive, to reduce the oil content of refinery discharges to 5mg/l, but there are no good environmental reasons to require such a standard in all cases. I am assuming that "5ng" in the hon. Member's question is a misprint for "5 mg". The difference is a factor of a million.

Publicly Owned Land

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many acres of publicly owned land are currently underused or underdeveloped.

Mr. John Patten: The register of unused and underused publicly owned land maintained by my right hon. Friend under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 showed 101,000 acres of such land in England on 30 November 1986. Since the registers were first established in 1981, some 45,000 acres of land have been removed from the register, most of which through being sold or brought back into use by the owner.

Liverpool Garden Festival Site

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will discuss with Merseyside development corporation and the local authorities on Merseyside the reopening under public management of the Liverpool garden festival site in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: Merseyside Development Corporation has already decided that the riverside park and festival hall will open to the public next summer. Almost certainly this will be managed by the corporation. The detailed arrangements have yet to be sorted out. The corporation plans to dispose of the former theme gardens on the other side of the spine road, preferably for a horticultural business in a garden setting.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public subsidy was received by the Transworld Festival Gardens Company, now in the hands of the receiver.

Mr. John Patten: The decision to release the garden festival site to Transworld Leisure plc was made on commercial grounds by Merseyside Development Corporation and no public subsidy was involved.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how Transworld Festival Gardens Company was selected to manage the Liverpool garden festival site.

Mr. John Patten: Merseyside Development Corporation negotiated with over 80 prospective operators of the garden festival site. Only Transworld offered to take over and operate the site commercially. The financial package was carefully vetted. In the corporation's view, Transworld submitted a well developed business plan and, on this basis Transworld's bid was accepted.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he proposes to make announcements regarding allocations for local authority capital programmes for 1987-88;

(2) when he proposes to announce the housing investment programme allocations for local authorities for 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend announced the level of public expenditure provision for 1987-88 for the services covered by the main local authority capital cash limit in England in his reply of 6 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) at column 499. He will shortly be letting authorities know their individual allocations in respect of the services for which he is responsible.

Conservation Areas

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish figures showing the area of each national park in England and Wales;

(2) if he will give the approximate length of each heritage coast in England and Wales;

(3) if he will give the approximate area of each confirmed area of outstanding natural beauty and each area of great landscape value, respectively, in England and Wales.

Mr. Waldegrave: Details of national parks, confirmed areas of outstanding natural beauty and heritage coasts as at 31 March 1986 are provided in the Countryside Commission's "Annual Report 1985-86", copies of which are available in the Library. There have been no changes since that date.

Areas of great landscape value are proposed by local authorities in their development plans, and contain policies to protect rural areas not defined under any statutory provision. There is no common approach to the definition of these areas and each local authority is free to propose its own set of particular types. No figures are available for the amount of land covered.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many conservation areas there are in each county, London borough and metropolitan borough in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am afraid that this information could be obtained only by inquiring of individual local authorities. Designation of conservation areas does not require my right hon. Friend's approval. We believe that about 5,000 areas have been designated in England overall.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the approximate area of each established green belt in England and the percentage of the area of each county, London borough and metropolitan borough, which the green belt covers.

Mr. Waldegrave: I regret that information in the form requested is not available. The approximate areas of approved green belts in England are as follows.

Green Belt	Area thousand acres
Metropolitan	1,200
West Midlands	650
Greater Manchester, Central Lancashire / Merseyside/Wirral G.B.	750
Tyne and Wear	200
Nottingham/Derby	200
York	50
South and West Yorkshire	800
Oxford	100
Avon	150
Gloucester Cheltenham	20
Stoke-on-Trent	125
Cambridge	27
South West Hampshire/South East Dorset	220
Burton/Swadlincote	2
Lancaster and Fylde Coast	6

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number and approximate area of each site of special scientific interest in each county, London borough and metropolitan borough in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested by my hon. Friend is being compiled and I shall write to him as soon as it is available.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his estimate of the total number of listed buildings by each grade in each county, London borough and metropolitan borough in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although this information is available within my Department, it needs to be specially compiled in the form requested. I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly.

National Tree Week

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about events and activities sponsored by his Department relating to National Tree Week from 29 November to 7 December.

Mr. Waldegrave: One major event was the planting of the first trees following the Department's initiative on forestry in the Black Country. Other activities were organised by local authorities and various voluntary bodies with the Tree Council, which is supported by my Department.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give guidance to local planning authorities aimed at speeding up the planning appeals process.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy is to speed up the planning appeals process and make it more efficient, without any loss of quality of decision. We can achieve this by cutting out unnecessary delay, by encouraging better communication between planners and the public, and by setting and achieving targets for handling times.

In a circular to local authorities published today we have set out guidelines for the handling of the 85 per cent. of appeals decided on the basis of written representations and a site visit. It includes a revised timetable for the handling of these appeals and as a further measure we intend to publish shortly a consultation paper on proposals for regulations to help speed up written representations appeals. To facilitate earlier decisions the regulations would in particular enable time limits to be prescribed for the various stages of the procedures. In this way we can reduce the period of uncertainty for all who may be affected by an appeal decision.

Today's circular also sets out to revise procedures under which the planning inspectorate will fix earlier inquiry dates for those appeals where a public local inquiry or hearing is to take place.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 3 December 1986 to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould).

Further changes to statistical information published by my Department will be documented as they arise.

ENERGY

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish details of the research programme into the proposed Severn barrage; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will outline the proposed consultation procedures with conservation and other interests while the research into the proposed Severn barrage proceeds;

(3) if he will make it his policy that the study team on the Severn barrage will, in connection with the construction of a lock or locks for shipping, consult with port authorities, existing port users, major industries already established in the region and potential users of the Severn estuary on an international basis;

(4) if he will place in the Library a list of the interested parties with whom it is intended that consultation should take place on the lock or locks necessary for ships in the proposed Severn barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: Discussions with the Central Electricity Generating Board and the Severn tidal power group on the work programme and consultation arrangements for the Severn estuary studies are expected to be completed shortly. It is intended that the work programme should be widely circulated for comment initially and that there should be ongoing consultation with all interested parties. I shall place copies of the work programme and the proposed arrangements for consultation in the Libraries of both Houses as soon as they are available.

Nuclear Accident

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will instruct the local authorities within Durham, Cleveland, Tyne and Wear, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Kent, Greater London, East Sussex, Dorset, Somerset, Avon, Gloucestershire, Gwent, South Glamorgan, Gwynedd, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Lancaster, and Cumbria to prepare detailed emergency evacuation plans to deal with a maximum credible accident under adverse meteorological conditions at their nearest nuclear power stations; and whether he will issue the same instruction to all local authorities in major population centres within a 50 mile radius of a nuclear plant.

Mr. Goodlad: No. The precautions taken in the design and construction of nuclear installations, and the very high safety standards applied in operating them make it highly unlikely that accidents could occur which might affect the public. But however remote the risks, all operators of nuclear installations are required to prepare emergency plans for dealing with an accidental release of radioactivity. These plans cover both the emergency procedures at the site and the off-site arrangements to protect the public, including monitoring out to about 20 miles and evacuation up to 1·5 miles. Local authorities, the police and emergency services are closely involved in the preparation of these plans, and they are tested regularly in exercises which are monitored by the nuclear installations inspectorate. In the extremely improbable event of proving necessary, evacuation and other measures would be extended to a wider area around the site.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the movement of radiation plumes following a major nuclear accident would be predictable with sufficient accuracy for decisions to be made on which areas should be evacuated;

(2) what studies have been undertaken by his Department on the movement of radiation plumes.

Mr. Goodlad: No such studies have been undertaken by my Department. Experimental work on the movement of radiation plumes is carried out by a number of institutions and organisations, including the CEGB. Work on modelling such movements is co-ordinated by the National Radiological Protection Board.

The results of this research are taken into account by the operators in formulating their site emergency plans, and by HMNII in its assessments of those plans.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list all studies commissioned or undertaken by his Department on emergency plans for nuclear installations within the last five years; and if he will place copies of all such studies in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: Emergency plans are subject to continuous review. Papers connected with such reviews are confidential.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the capacity to extend the emergency plan detailed in "Emergency Plans for Civil Nuclear Installations" has ever been tested by a full-scale exercise at any of the nuclear installations at Dounreay, Hunterston, Chapelcross, Windscale, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell, Torness or Hartlepool;

(2) whether he will list the dates on which the emergency plans have been exercised for the nuclear installations at Dounreay, Hunterston, Chapelcross, Windscale, Wylfa, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Berkeley, Hinkley Point, Winfrith, Dungeness, Bradwell, Sizewell, Torness or Hartlepool; and, in each exercise, whether all aspects of the plan were exercised;

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the validity of assessments of the worth of nuclear power station emergency plans in the absence of full scale exercises.

Mr. Goodlad: Each year site emergency plans must be exercised as realistically as possible to the satisfaction of the nuclear installations inspectorate. These plans are drawn up in consultation with local authorities and the emergency organisations responsible for public protection, who have their own contingency plans and participate in exercises. The dates of the most recent exercises are:

Nuclear installation	Date of exercise
Wylfa	26 November 1986
Trawsfynydd	17 September 1986
Oldbury	9 July 1986
Berkeley	1 October 1986
Hinkley Point	11 December 1985
Dungeness A	4 June 1986
Dungeness B	20 May 1986
Bradwell	18 June 1986
Sizewell A	27 August 1986
Hartlepool	19 March 1986
Chapelcross	19 February 1986
Sellafield	4 November 1986
Hunterston	20 November 1986
Torness	19 September 1986
Dounreay	9 June 1986
Winfrith	16 March 1986

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether any assessment has been made by his Department since 1979 of the implications for the United Kingdom of the maximum credible accident at the Superphenix fast reactor at Malville.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate that the containment at the Malville Superphenix fast reactor is designed to withstand the effects of at least a design-based accident.

The maximum radioactive release levels offsite associated with a design-based accident would be below emergency action reference levels, and would therefore have no implications for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what studies have been commissioned or undertaken by his Department or the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate into accident sequences at nuclear power stations involving external impacts or missiles, and terrorist explosions; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what information is available to him on the safety assessment of Magnox nuclear power reactors in relation to external impacts, missiles or terrorist explosions in the vicinity of fuel cooling ponds; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The nuclear installations inspectorate or, in the case of the UKAEA, its safety and reliability directorate, requires a detailed safety analysis to be carried out for all nuclear power stations as a prerequisite to the issue of a nuclear site licence. The risk of gas cloud explosions and crashing aircraft are assessed during the design of new reactors and during the safety reviews of old ones.

The assessment of external impacts and missiles in the vicinity of fuel cooling ponds of Magnox nuclear power stations are included as part of the investigations referred to above.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the ability of the containment of United Kingdom nuclear reactors to withstand all foreseeable internal accident conditions.

Mr. Goodlad: Reactor containments have to meet HMNII safety assessment principles, which are designed to ensure that releases to the environment are limited to internationally agreed levels for all foreseeable internal accident conditions.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment his Department has made of the extent to which all possible accident sequences in nuclear reactors can be predicted, the extent to which full theoretical analysis of these conditions can be carried out, and the extent to which such theoretical analysis can be experimentally verified.

Mr. Goodlad: Sequences which embrace the full range of possible accidents can be predicted. The analysis of these sequences is based on computer models that use well established theoretical principles, and are verified by experimental testing and reactor commissioning tests.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what steps are taken to ensure that all possibilities of system failure, human error and mismanagement of United Kingdom atomic reactors are anticipated and taken into account.

Mr. Goodlad: A prime aim in United Kingdom design is to make the plant tolerant to system failures and human errors by either inherent features or automatic safeguards. Systematic studies are carried out to ensure that the consequential effects of such failures are acceptable. The site licence contains mandatory operating rules and written procedures the application of which by licensees is supervised by HMNII, which can require changes in operating practices at any time, and can if necessary revoke operating licences.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest assessment of the possibility of a Chernobyl-scale accident occurring in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: The Chernobyl accident occurred because of a combination of design weaknesses in the reactor system, as the Russians themselves have acknowledged, and deliberate failures by staff to observe prescribed safety procedures. The reactor was of a completely different design to any operating in, or proposed for the United Kingdom, and would not have been licensed here.

The United Kingdom has a rigorous system of nuclear safety licensing which is administered by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate. The highest standards of safety are used in the design, construction, operation and maintenance of all our nuclear plants, and give confidence that a similar accident could not happen in the United Kingdom.

Fast Reactors

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list, for each year since 1973, the sums paid by the Central Electricity Generating Board for research, design and demonstration of fast reactors to each of the National Nuclear Corporation, United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and Schnellbriter-Kemkraftwerks gmbH.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall ask the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member.

Aircraft Flight Restrictions (Violations)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what equipment is installed at civil nuclear installations to detect any violations of aircraft flight restrictions that apply to such installations; and if he will make a statement:

(2) how many representations his Department has received about incidents in the past 10 years concerning violation of aircraft flight restrictions in the vicinity of nuclear power facilities.

Mr. Goodlad: There is no installed equipment at United Kingdom nuclear installations to detect any violations of aircraft flight restrictions that apply to such installations. Reports of visual sightings are made direct to the Civil Aviation Authority or the Ministry of Defence, as appropriate. The number of such instances is small, and it would be possible to extract details from archive records only at disproportionate cost.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual expenditure on research and development in renewable sources of energy in each year since 1970.

Mr. David Hunt: Expenditure by my Department on research, development and demonstration in renewable sources of energy since the programme's inception in 1974 to 1985-86 is given in the table below:

	£ million
1975-76	0·5
1976-77	1·0
1977-78	2·5
1978-79	3·6
1979-80	8·9
1980-81	12·3
1981-82	19·2
1982-83	17·9
1983-84	13·7
1984-85	18·2
1985-86	15·3

Notes:

1. Where available figures include expenditure on waste as a fuel and passive solar under the energy efficiency demonstration scheme, contributions from external contractors and the European Commission.

2. Information on spend by contractors is estimated from the contractual link with departmental spend in many cases and thus may not be exact. In particular it may be a few months out in its allocation and therefore spend from one year may have been moved to another year.

Nuclear Civil Research

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the expenditure on nuclear civil research in each year since 1970.

Mr. Goodlad: Since 1970-71 the Department of Energy — and its predecessors — has funded civil nuclear research through the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority by grant (up to 1983-84), grant-in-aid (1984-85 and 1985-86) and under programme letters (from 1986-87). The funding in each year is as follows:

	£ million (cash)
1986-87[1]	180·5
1985-86	189·6
1984-85	196·2
1983-84	203·8
1982-83	214·8
1981-82	205·4
1980-81	186·2
1979-80	145·5
1978-79	127·4
1977-78	100·1
1976-77	110·0
1975-76	93·4
1974-75	61·6
1973-74	47·5
1972-73	47·4
1971-72	45·0
1970-71	37·1

[1] Provision.

In addition the Department of the Environment funds civil nuclear research in the area of radioactive waste management. Its total funding since 1978-79, including provision of £11·5 million for 1986-87, is £73·9 million. Details of its funding prior to this period are not readily available.

Other organisations such as the electricity generating boards and BNFL also carry out or provide funding for civil nuclear research. Details of their expenditure are not held centrally.

Coal Industry (Investment)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual investment in the coal industry in each year since 1970.

Mr. David Hunt: Investment in the coal industry since 1970 was as follows:

	£ million
1970-71	73
1971-72	[1]79
1972-73	89
1973-74	[1]79
1974-75	145
1975-76	217
1976-77	279
1977-78	350
1978-79	481
1979-80	661
1980-81	807
1981-82	812
1982-83	842
1983-84	702
1984-85	[1]371
1985-86	660

Source: NCB Report and Accounts.

[1] Years in which significant industrial action took place.

Energy Preservation

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual expenditure on energy preservation in each year since 1970.

Mr. David Hunt: Such statistics do not exist. However, expenditure by my Department, since its creation in 1974, on promoting energy efficiency is given in the table below:

	£ million
1975-76	0·5
1976-77	1·0
1977-78	2·5
1978-79	1·0

	£ million
1979-80	4·0
1980-81	6·6
1981-82	8·3
1982-83	9·6
1983-84	11·8
1984-85	17·5
1985-86	22·5

Note

1. Prior to 1978-79 the energy efficiency programme formed part of the renewable energy sources programme. Separate figures for energy efficiency are not available.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of today to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould). As in the past the necessary information about future changes will be given when they are implemented.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy further to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 301, what theatre groups were involved in public relations activities on behalf of his Department; when and where.

Mr. Peter Walker: Five theatre groups have been sponsored by my Department since 1979. During Energy Efficiency Year the groups have played to 90,000 children. Their plays have been highly successful in motivating teachers and pupils to develop project work on energy and related topics. They have visited virtually every part of the United Kingdom.

Exploration Licences

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has made any licence awards following the invitation to existing exploration licensees announced in the House on 22 July.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have today announced the conditional award of seven new-style exploration licences, for blocks in England and Scotland until now covered by the old style exploration licence. These new licences will enable operators to proceed to the drilling stage. However, the licences do not give an automatic right to drill any well. Precise plans for a well are subject to planning permission and to my consent, which will not be given unless the operator provides evidence that planning permission has been obtained.

Details of the awards made today have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what volume of spent fuel and what quantity of plutonium have been subjected to safeguards oversight by Euratom inspectors during reprocessing since March.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 21 November 1986, c. 351-2]: The volume of civil reprocessing work which has been subject to safeguards oversight by Euratom at Sellafield and Dounreay since March 1986 is broadly in line with the total of 707 tonnes of spent fuel, containing approximately 2 tonnes plutonium, reprocessed at both sites in the financial year 1985-86.

Statistics

Mr. Gould asked the Secretry of State for Energy if, in respect of the statistics kept and published by his Department, he will publish in the Official Report any changes since 1979 in (a) the statistical series which are published, including those which have been introduced and those which have been dropped, (b) the basis on which any elements in the statistics are estimated, calculated or presented, (c) the periods over which, and the dates on which the series are collected or published and (d) any other respects in the ways in which the statistics are collected, recorded, presented, evaluated or published; and if he will explain the reasons for any such changes.

Mr. Peter Walker [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986, c. 674]: My Department publishes energy and fuel statistics in "Energy Trends" each month, in the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics" annually and in my annual report on the "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom"—the Brown Book. The most important changes to the published series since 1979 are set out below, but there have been many other small changes.

Fuel Prices

Introduction of a new industrial price series for electricity. Changes to the domestic electricity price series to cover different consumption levels. New price series introduced for petrol and DERV motor fuels. Industrial fuels price series revised on two occasions following changes to the survey panel.

Oil

New statistics and changes to existing statistics of North sea activity to reflect growth in North sea trade and operations. Detailed monthly statistics of oil stocks introduced.

Gas

Some statistics of town gas manufacture deleted. Revisions to gas production statistics. Introduction of stock change statistics following the use of the Rough gas field as a storage facility.

Electricity

Revisions to some annual electricity tables to simplify presentation and avoid duplication with other sources. Series for foreign trade in electricity re-introduced.

Solid Fuels

Reduction in the statistics for coal industry operations and finance. Coal stocks data deleted from annual publication to eliminate duplication with similar data published monthly. Analysis of external trade in coal by grade introduced.

Energy

Revisions of format of annual energy balances with addition of greater detail. Foreign trade in electricity introduced. Certain graphs presented as tables to save space.

Where necessary these changes were mentioned in the relevant publications at the time of the change. Changes in the basis of compilation, presentation and publication of statistical series are made in response to the Government's requirements for statistical information, changes in the statistics provided by the fuel industries and the administrative systems on which some series are based. Changes also result from the development of new statistical techniques, revisions to systems of classifications and technological developments affecting the compilation and dissemination of statistical data.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Calls

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby of 5 December, what information on telephone calls from hon. Members offices in the Palace of Westminster is logged.

Mr. Biffen: The logging equipment stores the date and time of each call made from a given extension on telephones connected to the Palace of Westminster telephone exchange. It also stores the number dialled, the duration of the call, and its cost. As I made clear in the reply to which the hon. Gentleman refers, there are no facilities for recording telephone conversations.

Details of international calls, which must be routed through the Palace of Westminster operators, are not covered by the logging equipment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 5 December, who has access to the logged information on telephone calls in the Palace of Westminster; and who gives access to it.

Mr. Biffen: Within the Staff of the Palace of Westminster, only the Communications Manager and her Deputy have access. In addition, the managing director and four senior staff of the firm which supplied the logging equipment have access for engineering reasons.

The Serjeant at Arms and his Deputy exercise very close control over the accessing of the information stored by the equipment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Pensions

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report tables showing for those below pensionable age the estimated number of taxable incomes by range of income, distinguishing between single persons, married couples without wife's earned income and married couples with such income; and if he will provide an estimate of the amount which would be collected in each instance in the current financial year by way of national insurance contributions for employees and employers, respectively, if the upper limit to the employee's contribution were abolished;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report tables showing for those below pensionable age the estimated number of taxable incomes by range of income, distinguishing between single persons, married couples without wife's earned income and married couples with such income; and if he will provide an estimate of the amount which would be collected by way of national insurance contributions from employees if the rate of contribution were to be reduced as follows (a) single persons — 5 per cent. of earnings above £2,000, (b) married couples — 4 per cent. of earnings over £5,000, assuming (c) a transferable allowance in the case of two-earner households paying contributions and (d) the abolition of the upper earnings limit and the reduced rate for married women and widows.

Mr. Major: I have been asked to reply.

The information on incomes is as follows:

Estimated number of total earned incomes received by persons aged less than 65 by range of income: 1986-87 (Thousands)

Range of Total Earned Income (lower limit)	Single Persons	Married Couples without Wife's Earned Income	Married Couples with Wife's Earned Income
£3,000	768	89	58
£4,000	956	120	55
£5,000	985	186	65
£6,000	845	252	89
£7,000	775	232	123
£8,000	554	334	200
£9,000	531	391	273
£10,000	523	651	653
£12,000	327	616	1,105
£15,000	190	377	1,132
£20,000	88	234	830
Total	6,544	3,481	4,582

The Government Actuary's Department estimates that for 1986-87:

(1) £13·1 billion will be due from employers and £11·75 billion from employees for class 1 national insurance contributions taking account of the reduced rates for those in contracted out employment. If the upper earnings limit were abolished, an extra £0·8 billion would be due from employees, assuming that the contracted out rebate continued to apply only to earnings between the lower and present upper earnings limits. It is not possible to break down estimated contributions liability by the groups in the table.

(2) Assuming that the rates and other changes to employees' class 1 contributions were as described in the second of the hon. Member's questions, and contributions liability were assessed on annual rather than weekly or monthly earnings, the gross yield from employees' contributions would be £4·7 billion. It is not possible to estimate the effect of the contracted out rebate and this figure therefore compares with an estimated notional gross yield under the existing rates structure of £13·2 billion.

DEFENCE

Education (Research)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the main area of interest of his Department's funded research in universities and institutes of higher education.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The defence research establishments commission work with universities and other institutes of higher education across the full range of their research programmes. The largest value of such agreements is currently in major field A which covers air vehicles, aerodynamics, structures and materials.

Nimrod

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether a replacement airframe would be required for the export of the Nimrod early warning system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is really a question for the company but GEC Avionics Ltd. does see an export market for the Nimrod mission system avionics in alternative airframes. Together with the Lockheed Georgia Company it has announced plans to develop and market jointly an AEW version of the Lockheed C-130 aircraft using a variant of the Nimrod AEW MSA.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of developing a Nimrod system in an alternative airframe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the scope for enhancement with (a) the Nimrod system and (b) the E3A airborne warning and control system, to meet evolving requirements through the lifetime of the systems.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The potential for enhancement to meet evolving requirements is one of the factors we shall consider when reaching a decision on the outcome of the competition to meet the Royal Air Force's airborne early warning requirement.

Equipment (Exports)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those countries in respect of which Her Majesty's Government have refused applications for the selling of military, security or police equipment on account of the human rights record of the Government concerned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the practice of this and previous Governments not to disclose information concerning individual defence exports or their consideration.

1939-45 Medal

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to provide Dunkirk clasps to the 1939-45 medal for surviving veterans of that event; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. All significant operations and battles of the 1939-45 war were carefully considered by the Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals in 1946. The importance of the Dunkirk operations was recognised by waiving for those involved the normal qualifying period for the 1939-45 star. It has remained the policy since 1946 that no further awards should be introduced in respect of service in the 1939-45 war.

United States Aircraft

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what United States aircraft are located at Royal Air Force Woodbridge and Royal Air Force Bentwater; and whether such aircraft use training ranges located in the United Kingdom for firing guns or cannons, missiles or for dropping bombs.

Mr. Stanley: A-10 Thunderbolt mark II aircraft are based at both RAF Woodbridge and RAF Bentwater. HC-130 Hercules aircraft and HH-53 helicopters are also based at RAF Woodbridge. Only the A-10 uses ranges located in the United Kingdom for weapons training.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information is available to him about violations of flight restrictions by United States aircraft in the vicinity of civil nuclear installations; and what arrangements exist to enforce the observance of such flight restrictions.

Mr. Freeman: The United States Air Force based in the United Kingdom is bound by the same strict low flying regulations as the Royal Air Force. These exist to eliminate any unnecessary activity and to control the flying that must take place. Military pilots are instructed to avoid civil nuclear installations although aircraft may still be seen in the general surrounding areas. The information available to me about breaches of the restrictions in the vicinity of civil nuclear installations is similar to that on breaches concerning any other part of the United Kingdom low-flying regulations.

We conduct covert surveys of low-flying aircraft activity taking place and disciplinary action may be taken when a serious breach of the regulations is established. I am always prepared to investigate specific incidents which suggest that low-flying regulations have been broken and if the hon. Member has such an incident in mind he is welcome to write to me about it.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Stanley: Before 1980 information on the strength of the armed forces, defence budget expenditure and defence balance of payments was presented in annexes to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates". Additional information on accommodation, aircraft accidents, health, land holdings and qualifications was published in the "Annual Abstract of Statistics" by the Central Statistical Office.

In 1980 defence statistics were published for the first time in a separate volume (volume II) of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates" and the coverage was extended to include data on accommodation, aircraft accidents, civilian manpower, defence services, education, entertainment, equipment, fishery protection, health, HM dockyards, hydrographic services, land holdings, Meteorological Office activities, royal ordnance factories, research and development, salaries and trade. The range of statistical information published has been broadly the same since 1980, but amendments to the detailed tables have been made, reflecting changes in the administrative systems on which the data are based, editorial decisions, and suggestions for improvements including those contained in the reports of the House of Commons Defence Committee.

The content of the quarterly tri-service manpower press release was changed in June 1979 to include outflow data and to provide a uniform coverage of all categories of service personnel, since when there has been little amendment.

No major changes in presentation are planned.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated total spending by his Department on press and public relations in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: It is estimated that total spending on MOD press and public relations in the current year will be in the region of £7·9 million. This figure includes estimated staffing costs together with likely expenditure on films, exhibitions, publications, equipment, and so on.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what will be the estimated spending by his department on television, radio and newspaper advertising, respectively, and other promotional literature in the current year; and what was the total in 1979-80 and each intervening year;

(2) what will be the estimated spending by each of the armed forces on television, radio and newspaper advertising, respectively, and other promotional literature in the current year; and what was the total in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Freeman [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 226]: The information for 1985-86 and 1986-87 (estimated) is as follows:

£ million

	TV/Film etc		Radio		Newspapers		Promotional Literature
	85/86	86/87	85/86	86/87	85/86	86/87	85/86	86/87
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	0·044	0·005	Nil	Nil	1·460	1·420	0·030	0·030
Army	0·578	0·528	0·005	0·004	2·762	3·508	0·490	0·742
Royal Air Force	0·198	0·201	0·014	0·015	2·120	2·288	0·501	0·419
Others	—	—	—	0·004	0·480	0·696	0·011	0·027

With regard to total spending in the years from 1979-80 to 1984-85 (inclusive) I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 8 May 1984 at column 299-300 and on 28 January 1986 at column 450.

Additionally, the following information is also available on amounts spent on promotional literature and radio:

£ million

	Armed Forces		Others
	Radio	Promotional Literature	Promotional[1] Literature
1979/80	0·040	0·128	0·009
1980/81	0·168	0·842	0·009
1981/82	00·42	1·027	0·010
1982/83	0·071	1·016	0·016
1983/84	0·072	1·880	0·024
1984/85	0·023	1·501	0·013

[1] No radio expenditure.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Services (Capital Allocation)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the capital allocation to the social services block for (i) London borough of Waltham Forest and (ii) all local authorities in each financial year since 1979-80; and if he will provide an additional list indicating the subsequent years' allocation at 1979-80 prices.

Mr. Newton: Information on personal social services capital expenditure allocations and actual net capital spending is set out in the table. Figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not directly comparable with those for subsequent years because a different capital control system was adopted in 1981-82. The level of allocations nationally was reduced in 1985-86 to reflect the significant underspend of personal social services provision in previous years.

£ thousands

	London borough of Waltham Forest				All English local authorities
	Allocations[1]		Actual net spending[1]		Allocations[1]	Actual net spending[1]
	Cash	1979-80 prices	Cash	1979-80 prices	Cash	1979-80 prices	Cash	1979-80 prices
1979-80	463	463	491	491	46,369	46,369	57·284	57·284
1980-81	728	614	521	439	47,848	40,334	73·371	61·848
1981-82	572	439	699	536	88,644	68,014	70·488	54·083
1982-83	1,171	838	1,087	778	103,832	74,295	67·481	48·285
1983-84	849	581	792	542	109,156	74,749	72·993	49·985
1984-85	702	461	82	54	115,988	76,169	77·621	50·974
1985-86	516	320	1,021	633	69,992	43,361	[2]75·504	46·775
1986-87	345	208	not yet available		73,007	43,911	[3]86,000	51,726

[1] The actual net spending figures include personal social services urban programme capital expenditure. Allocations for this category of expenditure are issued by the Department of the Environment and are not included in the allocation figures shown above.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Estimated.

The figures do not fully reflect the funds available for capital expenditure on personal social services, which include the prescribed proportion of capital receipts. In addition local authorities are free to make use of capital allocations made in respect of other service blocks. The figures also exclude any contribution made by health authorities under the joint finance arrangements.

Private Patients

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish for each health authority in England the number of cases and the average length of stay for each of private patients and National Health Service patients for each specialty covered by National Health Service statistical returns.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Physiotherapists

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the demand for physiotherapists in the National Health Service in (a) 1990, (b) 1995, and (c) 2000; and if he will take steps to ensure that adequate training facilities will be available to meet that demand.

Mr. Newton: The demand for physiotherapists and the necessary training facilities are matters for health authorities to determine in the light of local circumstances. The manpower component of their strategic plans, which address the demand and training implications for physiotherapists up to the year 1994, are currently subject to discussion and refinement between regional and district health authorities. The strategies will of course be monitored through the planning and review process.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the level of provision of speech therapists;

(2) what plans he has to increase the number of practising speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of provision of speech therapy in the light of local circumstances, their assessment of priorities and the available resources. The number of speech therapists employed by health authorities in England increased from 1,500 (wte) in 1979 to 2,340 (wte) in 1985.

Wte = Whole time equivalent.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what plans he has to improve the quality of available data on which to base the planning of speech therapy services.

Mr. Newton: Improved information to assist health authorities plan their speech therapy services will be available after 1 April 1988 following the implementation of the recommendations of the Korner steering group on health services information. It will relate to patients treated by NHS speech therapists in all NHS premises, at schools and in patients' homes instead of the purely hospital based information provided at present. Details of the sex, age group and the source of referral (e.g. general practitioner, community nursing, social services or a "self-referral") of patients will also be available, together with the number of episodes of care completed in each year and their duration.

Communication Disorders

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people who suffer from severe communication disorders and from moderate language handicap.

Mr. Newton: Information is not collected on the number of people in the population suffering from communication and language disorders and therefore it is not possible to make any reliable estimate of the numbers of sufferers.

Diet

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to examine the cost of healthy eating and its effect on low-income families.

Mrs. Currie: This matter is kept under continuous review. I am advised that at any point along the normal range of family expenditure on food it should not be difficult to devise a healthy diet. The effect on low income families should be to reduce the risk of coronary heart disease.

Doctors (Spouses)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department proposes to introduce a scheme, in conjunction with the General Medical Council, to extend the ancillary staff reimbursement scheme to spouses of general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton), on 30 October at columns 237-38.

Hypothermia

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths have been recorded (a) nationally and (b) for the county of Cleveland, during each of the past five years where (i) hypothermia was given as the reason for death and (ii) hypothermia was noted as a contributory factor resulting in death for each of the following age-bands: 0 to 2 years, 3 to 5 years, 6 to 16 years, 17 to 64 years and 65 years and over.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows at (a) the number of deaths in England and Wales, and for usual residents of the county of Cleveland, where hypothermia was assigned as the underlying cause of death. At (b) is given, for the same areas and age-groups, the number of deaths with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death.

Number of deaths (a) with hypothermia as underlying cause of death and (b) with any mention of hypothermia on death certificate, England and Wales, usual resident of County of Cleveland; persons by age-group 1981 to 85

	Age-group
	0 to 2	3 to 5	6 to 16	17 to 64	65+	Total
(a) Underlying cause ICD (9)[1] 778.3 and 991.6
1981
England and Wales	2	2	—	48	224	276
Cleveland	—	—	—	1	1	2
1982
England and Wales	2	—	1	65	258	326
Cleveland	—	—	—	2	2	4
1983
England and Wales	2	—	—	40	179	221
Cleveland	—	—	—	—	—	—
1984
England and Wales	2	1	3	45	215	266
Cleveland	—	—	—	—	2	2
1985
England and Wales	3	—	—	63	374	440
Cleveland	—	—	—	1	2	3
(b) Any mention
1981
England and Wales	9	2	—	100	574	685
Cleveland	—	—	—	1	2	3
1982
England and Wales	19	—	2	102	541	664
Cleveland	1	—	—	3	2	6
1983
England and Wales	9	—	—	79	450	538
Cleveland	—	—	—	—	1	1
1984
England and Wales	3	1	4	85	462	555
Cleveland	—	—	—	1	4	5
1985
England and Wales	11	—	4	103	709	827
Cleveland	1	—	—	1	5	7

[1] International Classification of Diseases 9th revision.

Elderly People

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to issue further guidance to local authorities about the recommendations contained in the document enitled "Staying at Home — Helping Elderly People"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We and the Department of the Environment (DOE) held a series of meetings, and a seminar in March of this year, with health, social services and housing authorities and voluntary bodies to discuss how the recommendations could be taken forward by them. Further joint guidance to local authorities is now under consideration with DOE.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the cost of implementing each of the recommendations contained in the document "Staying at Home — Helping Elderly People".

Mrs. Currie: The recommendations set out broad principles for the planning of schemes to provide community support for elderly people rather than suggesting that services should be developed in a particular way. The report suggests that community care with innovatory schemes and a package of other support services costs less to public funds in all cases than hospital care and in nearly every case less than residential care or sheltered housing.

Benefits

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for the estimated take-up of supplementary benefit derived from the 1984 family expenditure survey on the same basis as his reply of 30 November 1983 to the hon. Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold), Official Report, columns 532-34.

Mr. Lyell: Estimates of take-up of supplementary benefit based on the family expenditure survey are produced biennially. The latest available figures are for 1983. For those I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Thorne) on 30 October at columns 231-34.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for sickness benefit were submitted in each quarter since 1979.

Mr. Lyell: The information is available for broad quarters — 12 to 16 weeks — only. Numbers include claims for invalidity benefit and, up to April 1983, for non-contributory invalidity pensions. Numbers are affected by self certification for the first week of sickness, introduced in June 1982, and statutory sick pay which was introduced in April 1983 for periods of up to eight weeks, extended to 28 weeks in April 1986.

Year	First quarter	Second quarter	Third quarter	Fourth quarter
1979	2,160,620[1]	2,738,139[2]	2,106,298[2]	3,086,454[3]
1980	2,402,766[2]	2,368,149[2]	1,975,074[2]	2,613,817[3]
1981	1,939,192[2]	1,873,705[2]	1,514,038[2]	2,297,542[3]
1982	1,937,728[2]	1,926,029[2]	1,347,311[2]	1,824,185[3]
1983	1,581,272[2]	1,443,071[4]	300,280[2]	344,326[2]
1984	490,434[3]	294,610[2]	289,854[2]	338,463[2]
1985	483,606[3]	315,542[2]	302,953[2]	344,024[2]
1986	479,895[3]	222,055[2]	203,572[2]	—

[1] 10 week period only (December 1978 data not available).
[2] 12 week quarter.
[3] 16 week quarter.
[4] 20 week period (to bring in change to counting period).

Orthopaedic X-rays

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance he gives to health authorities in England and Wales on the advisability of retaining orthopaedic X-rays for future reference.

Mrs. Currie: X-rays are regarded as part of the personal health records held by National Health Service hospitals. Health authorities were advised in 1980 that personal health records should be retained for at least a minimum of eight years after the conclusion of treatment.

Guidance to health authorities is contained in DHSS Circular HC(80)7 and Welsh Office Circular WBC(80)9. Copies of both circulars are available in the Library.

Abortions

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last issued guidance to the Northern regional health authority concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what was that guidance.

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last issued guidance to the North West Thames regional health authority concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what was that guidance.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last issued guidance to the North-East Thames regional health authority concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what was that guidance.

Mr. Benyon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last issued guidance to the Oxford regional health authority concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what that guidance was.

Mr. Newton: Specific guidance about the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 has not been issued to health authorities. However, encouraged by the Department, the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists established a working party which recommended in its 1985 report, "Fetal Viability and Clinical Practice" that the reference to 28 weeks gestation in the 1929 Act was now out of date in view of advances in medical techniques. In the light of this recommendation the report was sent in October 1985 to all regional health authorities and drawn to the attention of regional medical officers.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information health authorities are required to provide to his Department about its role in the implementation and enforcement of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions.

Mr. Newton: The Department does not require health authorities to provide information of the kind specified in the question. Abortions are monitored through scrutiny of the abortion notification forms which the individual doctor performing an abortion is required under the abortion regulations to submit to the chief medical officer. Any notification giving a gestation period which suggested that an offence under the Infant Life (Preservation) Act might have occurred would be followed up.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Fowler: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further representations his Department has received from the chairman of the Social Services Committee of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities about implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; what reply he is sending; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I received a letter dated 24 November from the chairman of the social services committee of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities asking for an early meeting to discuss the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. I have replied today agreeing that such a meeting would be useful when officials from the Department have met officials from the local authority associations to clarify some outstanding issues on the costing of the various provisions of the Act, and indicating that I would be asking my office to make the necessary arrangements.

Benefits (Costs)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of the additional £1·7 billion allocated to social security expenditure for 1987-88 in autumn statement was in respect of the estimated cost of (a) real increases in benefit rates, (b) increase in number of retirement pensioners, (c) increase in number of unemployed people claiming benefit, (d) increase in number of people claiming because of long term sickness disability, (e) increase in the number of single parents claiming benefit, (f) increased cost of administering a larger number of claims specifying how much is due to the expected increase in the number of staff, (g) increased cost of implementing the Social Security Act specifying how much is in respect of (i) replacement staff to enable permanent staff to be trained in the changes and (ii) extra staff costs in respect of conversion to income support and (h) other factors.

Mr. Major: A detailed explanation of the changes to the programme will be published in the 1987 Public Expenditure White Paper in the normal way.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give region by region the hospital out-patient waiting list for each district at 31 March and 30 September in 1978 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Information on numbers awaiting out-patient appointments is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will set out region by region district health authority in-patient waiting lists, the total populations living in each district, the percentage which the former represents of the latter and their national ranking by that percentage;

(2) if he will set out region by region the hospital urgent in-patient waiting list in each health district, together with the number of urgent cases waiting more than a month, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking in England by that percentage;

(3) if he will set out region by region the hospital non-urgent in-patient waiting list in each health district, together with the numbers of non-urgent cases waiting more than a year, the percentage the latter represents of the former and their national ranking in England by that percentage;

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library the replies he received from health authorities to his request for information on their proposals to reduce hospital in-patient waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: No. These were working documents which now require further development as a result of the increased resources which the Government are making available. Announcements on further action to reduce waiting lists will be made as soon as possible.

Hospital Specialties

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the Government's policy on the hospital specialties which should be provided by each health district.

Mr. Newton: The Government's policy is that all patients should have access to the services they need; and that services should be provided in the most effective way, bearing in mind that for the more highly specialised services some degree of centralisation may be needed to maintain levels of clinical expertise or to make efficient use of costly equipment. The majority specialties, such as general medicine, general surgery, paediatrics, geriatrics, and mental illness, would be expected to be provided in every health district.

At the opposite extreme, some services, such as heart and liver transplantation have been designated as supra-regional services and will be provided only in a small number of national centres. In between it is for regional and district health authorities to determine the best way to provide services in the light of the general principles set out above and of local geographical factors.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the Government's estimated number of heroin addicts using National Health Service drug rehabilitation centres in each year since 1979 and the number who have ceased to be addicts.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many in-patient beds for heroin addicts are available in the National Health Service region by region.

Mrs. Currie: In-patient beds are not set aside for the treatment of heroin addicts and most people admitted for drug misuse are treated in general psychiatric wards. The table contains the latest information on the number of beds available in special in-patient units exclusively for the treatment of drug misusers.

Beds available in special in-patient units for drug misuse at 31 December 1985: Mental Illness hospitals and units in England

Region	Beds available
South East Thames	48
Wessex	1
Oxford	11
North Western	6
Special Health Authority	21
TOTAL	87

Midwives

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many midwives are currently employed in each district health authority area; and how far short this is of full establishment in each area.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Nurses

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses have been employed directly by the National Health Service; and how many have been hired as agency nurses, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table:

National Health Service nursing and midwifery staff: 30 September England

	Whole-time equivalents[1]
	Nursing and midwifery (including Agency)	Agency staff
1979	358,450	4,030
1980	370,080	4,220
1981	391,770	3,760
1982	397,080	3,040
1983	397,120	2,440
1984	397,490	3,750
1985	401,150	4,120

Source: DHSS annual census of non-medical manpower.
[1] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents. No adjustment has been made for the reduction in the working week introduced during 1980.

X-ray Mammography

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many health authorities have the radiographic resources to provide X-ray mammography for 100 per cent., 50 per cent., and 25 per cent, respectively of women over 50-years-old and over 30-years-old, respectively;

(2) how many health authorities currently provide any X-ray mammography for all women aged over 50 years, and all women aged over 30 years respectively.

Mrs. Currie: There is at present no national programme for screening symptomless women by mammography, so information on the useage of mammographic machines is not collected centrally. Most existing machines are used in the diagnosis of women of all ages with breast symptoms. In January 1986 117 health authorities had such machines.

Embryo Research

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a consultation document on the issues on which the Warnock committee considered legislation was necessary or desirable.

Mr. Newton: The Government have published today a consultation document "Legislation on Human Infertility Services and Embryo Research" (Cmnd. 46) which is being sent to interested bodies for comment. The views of individuals and other organisations will also be welcome —particularly on the issues highlighted in the document which have not, so far, been much debated in public. The comments and views received will assist the preparation of legislation for introduction in the next Parliament. I hope that those who are interested in these important and sensitive issues will make full use of this opportunity to let us have their views. Comments should reach us by 30 June next year.

Health Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many non-medical staff are employed by each regional health authority and each health district.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1986, c. 213]: Tables giving the information requested have been placed in the Library. The figures shown are the latest available to this level of detail and relate to 30 September 1985.

AIDS

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that all blood supplies used for transfusion purposes are free from the acquired immune deficiency syndrome virus; whether some acquired immune deficiency syndrome viruses are not detectable in blood supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 28 November 1986, c. 405]: The virus known to cause AIDS is HIV but there have been recent reports suggesting that the disease may also arise from other strains of virus.

The safety of the blood supply in the United Kingdom is maintained in two ways. The first is that those who may have been exposed to known particular risks of infection are asked not to donate blood. This covers those who may have been exposed to HIV or other viruses linked to AIDS. The second is that all donations are tested.

No cases of HIV transmission through blood transfusion have been reported since testing was introduced. Although there is as yet no corresponding test for new strains, there is no evidence from preliminary monitoring to suggest that these are prevalent in the United Kingdom. Thus there is no reason to believe that blood supplies are at risk from this source although we are keeping the matter under close review.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General how many people are (a) employed and (b) unemployed in Basildon.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the Basildon parliamentary constituency was 6,159.

Employment statistics for local areas are not available except for dates when censuses of employment are taken. The latest available figures are from the 1981 census of employment when there were 39,000 employees employed in the constituency. More up-to-date employment estimates, relating to September 1984, will become available early in the new year. Between censuses, employment estimates are based on small scale sample inquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than the standard economic regions.

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been (a) created and (b) lost in Basildon for each year of the past three years.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available. Net changes in the numbers of jobs may be calculated by comparing employment figures at different dates, but these are not available for areas smaller than regions except from censuses of employment. The latest available figures are from the September 1981 census of employment. More up-to-date employment estimates, relating to September 1984, will become available early in the new year.

Mr. Dubs asked the Paymaster General what is the latest figure for the number of unemployed in Inner London.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the boroughs[1] that make up Inner London was 201,161.

[1] Camden, City of London, City of Westminster, Greenwich, Hackney, Hammersmith and Fulham, Islington, Kensington and Chelsea, Lambeth, Lewisham, Southwark, Tower Hamlets, Wandsworth.

Strikes

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General if he will give a breakdown of the number of strikes and days lost by region for each year since 1979, indicating separately those attributable to the miners' dispute.

Mr. Lee: The information requested for all industries and services is given in tables 1 and 2 below.

The miners' dispute over pit closures which began in March 1984 and ended in March 1985 is counted as one stoppage in the total for the United Kingdom and as one in each of the regions in which it occurred.

The distribution of working days lost through the dispute by region is given in table 3.

In 1984 the dispute accounted for 82 per cent. of the total 27·1 million days lost and in 1985 for 63 per cent. of the total of 6·3 million days lost.

Table 1
Working Days Lost Through Industrial Disputes

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
				Thousand
All industries and services
South East	4,487	439	843	1,220	962	1,522	492
East Anglia	548	58	80	109	57	87	43
South West	2,423	117	171	170	88	393	87
West Midlands	4,199	838	613	471	289	1,368	275
East Midlands	2,351	725	116	319	196	2,908	475
Yorkshire and Humberside	3,115	2,832	449	575	415	9,354	2,076
North West	4,516	533	692	989	765	1,381	403
North	2,164	2,006	341	447	241	4,211	890
Wales	1,642	2,918	292	283	353	3,527	940
Scotland	3,298	1,447	599	634	308	2,333	681
Northern Ireland	730	49	69	97	79	52	40
United Kingdom	29,474	11,964	4,266	5,313	3,754	27,135	6,402

Table 2
Stoppages of Work Due to Industrial Disputes

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
			Stoppages in progress in year
All industries and services
South East	306	179	183	224	202	247	173
East Anglia	45	34	26	19	17	28	25
South West	125	68	48	39	34	45	33
West Midlands	270	127	101	137	120	158	94
East Midlands	111	67	95	96	95	68	75
Yorkshire and Humberside	340	283	291	359	325	171	171
North West	301	141	177	223	164	161	122
North	159	107	121	119	99	80	97

	Stoppages in progress in year
	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Wales	191	116	127	107	108	89	86
Scotland	266	197	160	201	164	168	112
Northern Ireland	62	44	32	33	42	41	42
United Kingdom[1]	2,125	1,348	1,344	1,538	1,364	1,221	903

[1] The number of stoppages by region may not sum to the total for the United Kingdom as some disputes which affect more than one region have been counted once only in the United Kingdom total.

Table 3
Working days lost through miners' dispute[1]

	Working days lost thousand March 1984 to March 1985
South East	494
East Anglia	—
South West	—
West Midlands	856
East Midlands	3,109
Yorkshire and Humberside	10,461
North West	591
North	4,592
Wales	4,112
Scotland	2,174
Northern Ireland	—
United Kingdom	26,391

[1] Includes days lost through supporting action by workers in industries other than coal extraction.

Overseas Nationals

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate the number of (a) European Economic Community nationals and (b) foreign nationals working in London and the south-east.

Mr. Lee: Estimates from the 1985 labour force survey of the number of European Community and other foreign nationals in employment, resident in Greater London and the south-east region are as shown in the following table:

European Community[1] and other foreign nationals in employment
Thousands: Spring 1985

Area of residence	European Community[2] nationals	Other foreign nationals[3]
South-East region[4]	223	379
Greater London	135	243

[1] European Community 12, including Spain and Portugal.
[2] Excluding United Kingdom nationals.
[3] Including British Overseas and Dependent Territories Citizens.
[4] Including Greater London.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Paymaster General if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Changes in the presentation and publication of statistical series produced by the Department of Employment have always been made from time to time, before and after 1979. These are in response to the requirements of Government and other users of statistical information, changes to the administrative system on which some series are based and the development of new statistical techniques. When such changes are made they are fully documented, usually in the Employment Gazette.

The main changes since 1979 are as follows. They have been grouped by subject matter: minor amendments to Employment Gazette tables and notes have been omitted. The overall effect of these changes has been to increase the amount and extend the range of statistical information given by my Department.

Price Indices

There have been no changes in the presentation of information on the general index of retail prices and price indices for pensioner households since 1979. Following recommendations of the retail prices index advisory committee presented to the House in July 1986 (Cmnd. 9848) some technical changes will be made early next year. The reference base of the index will be changed to January 1987 and there will be some changes in the way the details of index are structured and presented.

The publication of indices of movements in additional costs for people working in inner and outer London was discontinued in 1982.

Employment

In April 1981 part-time female employees were separately identified in the quarterly estimates by industry.

A service industry total—both seasonally adjusted and unadjusted was introduced in September 1982.

In June 1983 the Department introduced an additional "supplementary" series of employment estimates, for very broad industry aggregates at national level only, which included an adjustment intended to compensate for the persistent undercounting which had been observed in the employment estimates. In July 1984, after data from the labour force survey had confirmed that the "supplementary" estimates were more accurate, the adjustments for under-counting were spread across industries and regions, and the Department ceased publishing estimates which did not include the adjustment. Employment estimates classified by the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification (replacing the 1968 classification) were first published in December 1983. Labour turnover figures were converted to the new industrial classification in February 1984 and the number of industries for which these estimates were available was reduced from 78 to 21. We will re-examine the industrial detail published regularly in Employment Gazette in the light of the results of the Census of Employment for 1984.

Unemployment

Following the introduction of the computerised count of unemployment benefit claimants in 1982, a greater amount of information flows on and off the count has become available and been published regularly in the Employment Gazette. In September 1984, ward based figures for unemployed benefit claimants were introduced. This change enabled accurate figures to be produced for local authority districts, counties and parliamentary constituencies, as well as the revised travel-to-work areas. The former figures for jobcentre areas were discontinued.

In July 1985, a consistent series of seasonally adjusted adult unemployment according to the current coverage was first introduced, allowing for previous discontinuities in the claimant count.

In July 1986, new regional and national unemployment rates were introduced showing the numbers as a percentage of the whole working population including the self-employed and HM Forces. The previous narrower based rates, however, continue to be available for the purpose of comparison with rates for travel to work areas for which data on self-employment are not available.

Vacancies

In October 1985 some revisions were made to the series of vacancies reported to jobcentres to bring the figures into line with those used by MSC for operational purposes. In addition, community programme vacancies were shown separately and excluded from the seasonally adjusted series.

Tourism

In March 1980 the quarterly inquiry on catering turnover was discontinued.

In April 1980 a new monthly series was indtroduced on visits to/from the United Kingdom by foreign and United Kingdom residents respectively, based on the international passenger survey. This replaced the discontinued quarterly series of "foreign arrivals in the United Kingdom" derived from Home Office information.

In November 1984 a quarterly series of 'employment in tourism — related industries' was introduced. This was originally included in British Business but was transferred to the Employment Gazette in 1986.

Earning

Seasonal adjustment of the average ernings index (new series) was introduced in Juoy 1980 and separate series for manufacturing and production were first published in October 1980, with the old series average earnings index being discontinued in February 1981.

The index of underlying increases in average earnings was introduced in April 1981. The base date of the indices was changed to January 1980 = 100 in October 1983 at which time the industry classification was revised from SIC (1968) to SIC (1980). A service industries index was introduced in September 1986.

As a result of a Rayner review a number of regular surveys on earnings were discontinued frm 1980. These included all but one of the April surveys on manual employees, in May 1980. Together with the January occupation survey. The October non-manual surveys and the June occupation surveys were discontinued in April 1981. The one remaining April survey, on aerospace employees, was discontinued in May 1986.

From October 1980 the results of the October manual survey was changed from an age-related basis to employees on adult rates and the industry classification of this survey was changed from SIC (1968) to SIC (1980) in October 1984.

General and publications

In October 1980, the layout of the Employment Gazette was improved, with the introduction of the "yellow pages" section on labour market data.

January 1983. The publication, "Time Rates of Wages and Hours of Work" was changed from an annual bound volume to a loose-leaf publication updated on a monthly basis. The associated leaflet, "Changes in Rates of Wages and Hours of Work" was discontinued.

In February 1984 the average earnings index notice was expanded to include employment, hours and unit wage costs. The basic wage rates series was discontinued at this time.

In April 1986, a new combined press notice containing all the latest labour market data was introduced. This was made possible without undue delay to the statistics, as a result of the change in timing of the compilation of the unemployment figures.

Facilities for analysing labour market data including local employment, unemployment and vacancy figures have been enhanced, using a new computerised data base, which has been available to hon. Members since 1984.

Greater Springburn Enterprises Ltd.

Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General what public funds have been made available from the Manpower Services Commission to Greater Springburn Enterprises Ltd. in each of the past two years; what Manpower Services Commission schemes it has been involved in; and how many people have taken part in the schemes.

Mr. Lee: Since November 1985 Greater Springburn Enterprises Ltd. has sponsored four projects under the community programe. The projects, two of which are still current, are part of the community programme agency run by the Glasgow council for voluntary service. Details of the projects including their estimated cost are:

CP project	Year	Numbers involved	Estimated cost £
Home visiting	November 1985-November 1986	1 supervisor; 12 participants	55,500
Home visiting	November 1986-November 1987	2 supervisors; 26 participants	118,500
Gardening	June 1986-28 November 1986	1 supervisor; 17 participants	34,000
Local history	June 1986-29 May 1987	11 participants	43,000

The community programme is the only scheme administered by the Manpower Services Commission in which Greater Springburn Enterprises Ltd. has been involved.

Training Schemes (Income)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply of 28 November, Official Report, column 390, whether providers of practical work experience will make payment to job training scheme managing agencies for the work done and any consequent income generated by trainees; and whether he can give any indication of the likely level of such payments.

Mr. Trippier: Job training scheme managing agents will expect providers of practical experience to pay a fee which will be used to help meet the costs of the training provided. There is no set rate for the fee which will be negotiated between the parties concerned.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General whether, pursuant to his reply of 28 November, Official Report, column 390, he will make it his policy that participation in the job training scheme after pilot stage will continue to be voluntary and that benefit sanctions will not apply to persons who do not accept offers or who leave courses prematurely.

Mr. Trippier: I cannot anticipate whether the job training scheme pilots will be extended, or the terms on which that extension would take place.

Skillcentres

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General what steps the Government are taking to encourage manual and technical skills training courses for women in skillcentres; and how many women-only manual and technical skills courses in skillcentres there are nationally.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986, c. 835-37.]: Single-sex training courses which prepare people to enter occupations in which their sex is seriously under-represented can lawfully be run under the provisions of section 47 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975. The Government encourage training providers, including the Skills Training Agency, to make use of these provisions where they will help to overcome relevant skill needs in the economy.

Women-only courses in manual and technical skills are currently being run in four skillcentres. The Skill Training Agency has embarked on a programme to improve access to skillcentre training by introducing modularisation and open learning methods which should be of particular benefit to women.

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Barking on 28 November, why the closure of the women's introduction to manual skills courses at Deptford skillcentre was carried out without consultation with the London boroughs of Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich, and whether the Manpower Services Commission has received representations alleging racism and sexism at Deptford skillcentre.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986, 835-37]: Consultation took place prior to the decision to move the course, at a meeting with representatives of the three London boroughs on 24 July 1986.

The Manpower Services Commission (MSC) has received representations alleging racism and sexism at Deptford skillcentre. All representations have been investigated and responded to by MSC management.

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General if he will instruct the Manpower Services Commission to co-operate with the inquiry sponsored by the London boroughs of Southwark, Lewisham and Greenwich to look into the allegations of racism and sexism at the Deptford skillcentre.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986, c. 835-37]: The Manpower Services Commission investigates any allegation made of discriminatory behaviour by its staff, and co-operates fully with all inquiries in respect of racial and sex discrimination initiated by statutory bodies with legal responsibilities.

Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General how many (a) women and (b) men are currently undergoing training courses at skillcentres in the Greater London area; how many are currently undergoing courses at the Deptford skillcentre; and which courses they are taking.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 5 December, 1986 c. 835-37]: There are 108 women and 768 men currently undergoing training courses at skillcentres in the Greater London area, of whom 48 and 170 respectively are at the Deptford skillcentre. Numbers currently on courses at the Deptford skillcentre are shown on the following table.

Course	Women	Men
Bricklaying	0	11
Carpentry and Joinery	3	20
Engineering Production	0	7
Heating and Ventilation	0	12
Heavy Vehicle Repair and Maintenance	1	9
Industrial Electronics	1	7
Light Fabrication and Welding	0	9
Motor Vehicle Body Repair and Maintenance	0	9
Motor Vehicle Repair and Maintenance	2	9
New Technology Access	20	4
Office Machinery and Servicing	0	9
Painting and Decorating	0	3
Plastering	1	11
Plumbing	1	12
Radio and TV Service and Maintenance	0	8
Sheet Metal Working	0	8
Silk Screen Printing	4	6
Specialist Woodworking	2	11
Women's Introduction to Manual Skills	3	0
Work Related Skills Assessment	10	5
TOTALS	48	170

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will make a statement regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(2) if he will make a statement about representations made to him from community leaders regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(3) if he will make a statement about representations made by local community relations councils regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(4) if he will make a statement about representations made to him by local black and Asian representatives regarding the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed;

(5) whether the proposed ethnic monitoring of the unemployed will be entirely voluntary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 15-16]: The collection of ethnic minority unemployment statistics was a regular practice from 1963 to 1982 and gave rise to no complaint. However ethnic monitoring of unemployed people was discontinued in August 1982 following the introduction of voluntary registration for employment at jobcentres. We are now going to undertake pilot tests early in the new year to assess the best method of resuming the collection of these statistics.

I believe that it is desirable to resume the collection of such statistics in order to measure the extent of relative disadvantage amongst different groups seeking jobs in each locality. The figures will be used to target more effectively schemes aimed at improving the employment prospects of ethnic minorities and measuring the comparative success or failure of policies in this area over a number of years. The collection of such statistics should be welcomed by anyone interested in genuine equality of opportunity in employment.

The pilot tests will take place in the unemployment benefit offices in Leeds, Handsworth and Nottingham for a period of two weeks from Monday 12 January 1987. The ethnic origin of the unemployed people will be classified under one of three broad categories—Afro-Caribbean, Asian and others. Participation will be voluntary. Two methods of assessment will be piloted—one involving visual assessment by benefit office staff, and the other involving self-assessment by claimants. Posters will be prominently displayed to ensure that individuals are aware that the exercise is taking place and that they can opt out if they wish.

I undertook a series of visits last month to the three pilot areas where I met local community representatives. At the meetings I gave details of the method and purpose of the proposed pilots and invited questions and comments. Some reservations were expressed but there were no fundamental objections to the pilots. My officials undertook to keep representatives informed and invited them to attend the pilot offices during the tests.

Inner City Initiatives

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to pilot any specific inner city employment initiatives directed at disadvantaged residents and their communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 16]: We have been piloting numerous employment initiatives in our eight inner city task force areas which we set up in April 1986. Our task forces operate in areas where the problems of the residents are typical of the disadvantages faced by people, many from the ethnic minority communities, who live in our inner cities.

Through these task forces we are pressing ahead with a wide variety of projects to stimulate employment and enterprise, and are ensuring that department's national programmes are focused on the ground on helping overcome the employment disadvantages of the people living in these areas.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 12 December 1986

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Students

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were in (a) higher education and (b) universities in each of the years 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Walden: Information for home full-time and sandwich and part-time students are shown in the following table. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Home student numbers in higher education, Great Britain

Thousands

Academic year beginning	Full-time and sandwich		Part-time
	University	All Higher education	University[1]	All Higher education[1]
1979	255·1	451·2	99·6	268·0
1980	262·9	465·5	99·7	288·2
1981	265·6	488·9	104·2	297·1
1982	262·1	504·9	108·0	302·6
1983	257·9	517·9	110·9	311·7
1984	256·0	524·9	113·3	312·6
1985 (provisional)	255·0	528·0	114·0	328·0

[1] Including the Open University.

Higher Education

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures the Government are taking to bring about a reduction in the per capita cost of higher education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: Since 1979 the number of home students in higher education in Great Britain has increased by 18 per cent. Over the same period total public expenditure on higher education has remained roughly constant in real terms. For the university sector, my right hon. Friend has agreed a programme of action with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the University Grants Committee so as to sustain and improve quality and cost-effectiveness; that programme is detailed in letters dated 4 and 5 November from the chairmen of the two committees, copies of which are in the Library. For the public sector, my right hon. Friend's predecessor invited the national advisory body for public sector higher education (NAB) to undertake a study of good management practice, which will be completed in the new year; that invitation was contained in a letter of 8 May 1985, a copy of which is being placed in the Library.

Pupils (Statistics)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils stayed on at school after 16 years; how many passed A-levels in each year since 1979 to 1985; what were the numbers of pupils in the respective age groups over the same period.

Mr. Dunn: The information for maintained secondary and independent schools in England is given below:

Thousands

	School leavers with one or more "A" level passes[1]	Number of pupils aged[2]
		16	17	18	19 and over
1979	113·5	202·1	129·5	11·6	1·0
1980	117·0	210·6	133·8	12·5	1·4
1981	120·8	221·4	140·2	13·6	1·4
1982	127·9	240·9	149·8	16·0	1·7
1983	131·2	238·2	155·0	17·5	1·8
1984	129·8	224·2	149·2	18·6	2·1
1985	125·8	215·8	142·3	18·0	2·0

[1] Relates to academic years 1978-79 to 1984-85.
[2] Numbers in January of year shown with ages at 31 August of preceding year.

Welsh Language

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds have been made available specifically for teaching through the medium of Welsh in each of the constituent colleges of the University of Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Walden: The University Grants Committee does not identify separately the different elements in block grant to individual institutions.

Special Schools (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a decision on the re-organisation of special schools in Waltham Forest.

Mr. Dunn: The Waltham Forest local education authority has proposed to cease to maintain Grosvenor house and Waltham Forest special schools in 1989, and to reorganise Whitefield school from September 1987. My right hon. Friend hopes to be able to announce decisions on the proposals very soon.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice and guidance is offered by his Department to local education authorities on the training of teachers to counter the misuse of drugs.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities have been sent copies of the Department's booklet "Drug Misuse and the Young" which provides information about the drugs problem and how the world of education can help to tackle it. All the local education authorities in England are taking part in the Department's two main initiatives in this area, by appointing drugs co-ordinators funded through the education support grant, and by applying for money from the new in-service training grant which enables teachers to learn about the dangers of drug misuse and how they can help those pupils at risk.

The Department has issued a newsletter for the drug co-ordinators advising them of all the initiatives being taken in the education service aimed at tackling drug misuse. I have also commended to the local education authorities the DHSS sponsored video, "Double Take" and the Health Education Council's "Drugwise" teacher training materials.

Various HMI publications have also made reference to the drugs problem.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will detail projects currently wholly or partly funded by his Department to enhance the training of teachers to counter the misuse of drugs.

Mr. Dunn: £1·5 million has been allocated from the new in-service teacher training grant scheme to be spent by local education authorities on training teachers about the dangers of drug misuse and how they might help those young people at risk. £4 million from the education support grant has been made available over two financial years to fund the appointment of drug co-ordinators, whose role involves providing advice, support and training for teachers. The Department funded "Drugwise"—the Health Education Council's training and educational package for teachers and other professionals—at a cost of £86,000. This is now generally available.

School Meals

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to provide nutritional guidelines for private caterers tendering for school meal contracts in the form recommended by COMA.

Mr. Dunn: The responsibility for the provision of school meals rests with local education authorities and not with the Government. It will be for each LEA to stipulate in its invitation to tender and in the final contract what nutritional standards it requires.

Appointments

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about appointments to the governing body of the centre for information on language teaching and research.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have appointed Sir Hugh Campbell Byatt, KCVO, CMG, MA as chairman of the governing body of the centre for information on language teaching and research. He will succeed Dr. Albert Sloman, CBE, to whose long and dedicated service on the centre's behalf I gladly pay tribute. I intend to announce the appointment of new members to the governing body of CILT in the near future.

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state, for each year since 1964, for the whole of the United Kingdom (a) the percentage of secondary schools accounted for by grammar schools, (b) the average pupil-teacher ratio in secondary schools, (c) the level of per capita expenditure in secondary schools at constant 1986 prices and (d) the number of pupils achieving five or more higher grade passes at O-level or certificate of secondary education; and if he will give his assessment of the impact on these figures of the raising of the school-leaving age.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1986, c. 626]: The available data for England are given in the table below. The effect of the raising of the school leaving age on these indicators is confounded with a multiplicity of other factors. It would not be possible to make any simple statement but I note with satisfaction the continuing increase in the proportion of pupils gaining qualifications.

Figures for schools in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Maintained Secondary Schools—England[1]

	Percentage which were grammar schools[2]	Pupil/teacher ratio within secondary schools[2]	Net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil[3] £	Percentage of school leavers with five or more higher[4] grade passes at "O" level or CSE
1966	22	18·3	815	21·1
1967	21	18·1	825	22·0
1968	21	18·1	855	22·5
1969	20	17·9	845	22·7
1970	19	17·7	850	23·1
1971	18	17·9	865	23·5
1972	17	17·6	905	23·5
1973	16	17·1	965	[5]
1974	14	17·5	965	23·0
1975	12	17·2	1,115	22·6
1976	10	17·0	1,105	22·9
1977	8	17·0	1,085	23·5
1978	7	16·9	1,025	23·7
1979	5	16·7	1,040	23·7
1980	5	16·6	1,010	24·0
1981	4	16·6	1,070	25·1
1982	4	16·6	1,105	26·1
1983	4	16·5	1,102	26·2
1984	4	16·2	1,155	26·7
1985	4	16·1	1,185	26·9

[1] Includes middle deemed secondary schools from 1969 onwards.
[2] From the census of schools held in January of each year. From 1971 the pupil/teacher ratios take account of qualified teachers only.
[3] The cash figures for each financial year ending in the years shown have been repriced to 1986-87 using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) deflator.
[4] Percentage of school leavers in academic year ending in years shown. From 1974-75 onwards "O" level grades A-C, CSE grade 1. Prior to 1974-75 "O" level examinations were graded pass or fail.
[5] The raising of the school leaving age in 1973 affected the total number of school leavers, which was unusually low in 1972-73. Percentages are, therefore, unrepresentative and have been omitted.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Portaferry-Strangford Ferry

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for the provision of a passenger waiting room at Portaferry for the Portaferry-Strangford ferry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland is planning to provide a shelter for the use of Strangford Lough ferry service passengers convenient to the boarding point at Portaferry.

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why the new mooring rings were not provided in September 1986 at the Portaferry terminals of the Portaferry-Strangford ferry; where these mooring rings are; when it is proposed to place them in position; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland proposes to place new mooring rings in position at the Portaferry slipway next week. It was not practicable to install them in September 1986.

Rates

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many ratepayers had not paid their rates on 31 October.

Mr. Needham: Statistics are not available on the number of ratepayers who had not paid their rates at 31 October 1986.

Legislation

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to tabulate in explanatory memoranda attached to draft orders the differences between such orders and parallel legislation in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tom King: The purpose of explanatory memoranda is to give a clear and non-technical statement of the background to, scope, and effect of draft Orders in Council under the Northern Ireland Act 1974. Where appropriate these already include a description of any differences which might exist between legislation in Northern Ireland and Great Britain. But the cost of the preparation of a comprehensive table for each order could not be justified.

Flags and Emblems Act 1954

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions have been taken out to date under the Flags and Emblems Act 1954.

Mr. Scott: Records are only available from 1969 to date. No prosecutions have been brought in this period.

International Fund for Ireland

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress with the International Fund for Ireland; and if he plans to bring forward any further statutory instruments to give legal effect to the fund.

Mr. Scott: The agreement to set up the international fund was signed by the United Kingdom and Irish Governments on 18 September, and was laid before the House on 1 October in accordance with usual practice. Notifications of acceptance were subsequently exchanged in Dublin on 1 December and the fund will be brought into being on 12 December.

The draft International Fund for Ireland (Immunities and Privileges) Order given the fund a legal personality and exemption from direct taxation was laid before the House on 27 October, as required under the International Organisations Act 1968. It was approved before a House of Commons Standing Committee on 4 November and the House of Lords on 5 November, and was made by the Queen in Council on 25 November. No further statutory instruments are necessary to give legal effect to the fund. The board to administer the fund will be formally appointed on 12 December and will begin its work immediately.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the allocations to programmes in Northern Ireland of the public expenditure plans announced on 12 November.

Mr. Tom King: The autumn statement laid before the House by my right hon. Friend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on 12 November announced total public expenditure planning figures for the Northern Ireland programme as follows:

	£ million
1987-88	4,810
1988-89	4,980
1989-90	5,150

The figure for 1987-88 represents an increase of some £230 million on the forecast outturn for 1986-87 and £120 million on the previously planned total for 1987-88 in the 1986 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9702), adjusted for Budget measures. The figure for 1988-89 represents an increase of some £160 million on previously published plans. Because of minor adjustments which will not affect the spending plans of Departments the planned figure for 1989-90 now rounds to £5,140 million.

I have decided on the following cash allocations to individual programmes (rounded to the nearest £5 million for 1987-88 and to the nearest £10 million for 1988-89 and 1989-90. Figures may not sum to totals because of roundings).

£ million

Programme	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90
Agriculture, fisheries, food and forestry	90	90	90
Industry, energy, trade and employment	445	420	400
Transport	130	130	130
Housing	365	380	380
Environmental and miscellaneous services	215	220	240
Protective Services	25	30	30
Education and science, arts and libraries	735	780	810
Health and personal social services	795	840	880
Social Security	1,445	1,520	1,570
Other public services	50	60	60
Total NI Departments	4,295	4,460	4,610
NIO—Law, order, protective and miscellaneous services	515	520	540
Total Northern Ireland	4,810	4,980	5,140

The planning figures for 1987-88 will form the basis for preparation by Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office of Main Estimates for the coming year, which will be presented to Parliament in due course.

The allocations reflect my assessment of how best to distribute the Northern Ireland public expenditure total in response to local needs and circumstances. Copies of a more detailed statement on these allocations have been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

PRIME MINISTER

Budgetary Control

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if he will propose to the next meeting of the European Council that a report be prepared by the Commission on the implementation of the 4 December 1984 agreement of the Council on Budgetary Control; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The Commission has already announced that it is preparing an ex novo review provided for in the Fontainebleau conclusions. These specify that the result of budgetary discipline should be covered.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on co-ordination between Her Majesty's Treasury, the Home Office and the Department of the Environment in the funding of the Metropolitan police.

The Prime Minister: I am satisifed with the arrangements for co-ordination between Her Majesty's Treasury, the Home Office and the Department of the Environment on matters relating to the funding of the Metropolitan police.

Miss Colette Bowe

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister on what basis the Cabinet Secretary had reason to believe that Miss Colette Bowe would ask him about the position regarding the possible granting of immunity from prosecution.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at columns 49-50.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will make representations to General Secretary Gorbachev for the extension of the current Soviet moratorium on nuclear weapons tests beyond 31 December; and if she will take steps to initiate a reconvening of the trilateral talks between the United States of American, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United Kingdom on the verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: No. As we have repeatedly stated, the resumption of negotiations for a nuclear test ban treaty would be premature before progress has been made on the outstanding issues, particularly verification.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister in what form and on what authority, approval was given by Her Majesty's Government to Mr. Chapman Pincher or his publishers for the publication of the book "Their Trade is Treachery".

The Prime Minister: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which may arise in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue. I also intend to follow the precedent set by previous Prime Ministers of not commenting on security matters.

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if, as part of the security briefings provided from time to time to the Leader of the Opposition, she will supply him with such information as is available to Her Majesty's Government's lawyers about the progress of the Wright case in Australia; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have confirmed that, as far as this side of the House is concerned, the normal courtesies on security matters will continue to be observed. The contents of such exchanges must remain confidential.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will define the nature of the inquiries by the Cabinet Secretary of other Departments on 10-11 January about the leak of the Solicitor-General's letter.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at column 49-50.

Ministers (Publications)

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister what is the practice of the Government regarding the submission prior to publication of manuscripts of books by Ministers.

The Prime Minister: Ministers contemplating the publication of material based upon their recollection of the conduct of Government business in which they took part are expected to submit their manuscript to the Secretary of the Cabinet and to conform to the principles and procedures set out in the report of the Committee of Privy Counsellors on Ministerial Memoirs, 1976 (Cmnd. 6386).

European Community (Rebate)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her statement of 8 December, if it remains the position of Her Majesty's Government that the United Kingdom's rebate entitlement under the Fontainebleau agreement of June 1984 is secured, irrespective of any increases in expenditure of the Community, by the arrangement to deduct the appropriate sums of rebate from the United Kingdom's value added tax contribution; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. The Community has an obligation enshrined in a document of treaty status to make available to the United Kingdom abatements of VAT calculated according to the Fontainebleau formula. As my hon. Friend is aware, the Community budgetary process means that the figures may need to be corrected several times before the true entitlement is reached. The normal method of making these corrections is by supplementary budgets, and a refusal by the United Kingdom to agree to such a supplementary budget could lead to a delay in the uprating of our abatement. It could not affect the final entitlement.

Libya (Exports)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement regarding the export from Britain of syncrolift equipment to Libya.

The Prime Minister: Syncrolift systems are widely used throughout the world by port authorities in place of conventional dry dock facilities. They are used to lift vessels from the water to the ground level of a shipyard. It is not military equipment and is not subject to export licensing under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985. There is no ban on the export of non-military goods to Libya.

Civil Servants (Training Costs)

Dr. Hampson asked the Prime Minister what, in 1985-86, was the total cost of courses of post-entry training undergone by members of the non-industrial Civil Service; and what proportion by cost of that training was given (a) at the Civil Service college and (b) at other schools, colleges and institutes outside the Civil Service.

The Prime Minister: The total cost of formal post-entry training in the non-industrial Civil Service during this period was £208 million; of this £118 million constituted the salaries, travel and subsistence paid to the trainees, and £90 million the direct cost of the training.

The proportion by total cost which took place at the Civil Service college was 8 per cent, and at sources outside the Civil Service 14 per cent. The remaining 78 per cent. was provided within individual Government Departments.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 11 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be travelling to Manchester where I shall be attending the annual Chamber of Commerce dinner.

Research and Development

Mr. Sumberg asked the Prime Minister when the 1986 annual review of Government funded research and development (R and D) will be published.

The Prime Minister [pursuant to her reply, 10 December 1986]: I am now able to further announce the publication of the second joint report from the chairmen of the Advisory Council for Applied Research and Development (ACARD) and the Advisory Board for the Research Councils (ABRC) on 12 December as Cmnd. 34.

ENERGY

Power Stations (Radioactivity)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Energy how the level and type of radioactivity emissions from coal-fired power stations compare with those from nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The major discharge mechanism in both cases is aerial. For coal-fired power stations the collective committed dose equivalent is about five mansieverts per gigawatt-year of electricity generated and for nuclear stations it is under two mansieverts per gigawatt-year. The overall dose from either source is very small by comparison with the dose to the population from natural background radiation.

Nuclear Power Reprocessing

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what reprocessing plant capacity exists in the United Kingdom which has a head end which will accept radial breeder fuel subassemblies or mixer breeder sections from any fast reactor.

Mr. Goodlad: The only plant in the United Kingdom with an appropriate head end for irradiated fast reactor fuel is the prototype fast reactor (PFR) fuel reprocessing plant at Dounreay. None of the radial breeder or mixer breeder sections from th PFR has yet been reprocessed.

Plutonium

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will ensure that British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. publishes the text of the management agreement it has with the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board for the ownership and control of stocks of plutonium for civil purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, further to his replies to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) of 6 November, Official Report, column 547, and to the hon. Member for Meironnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) of 21 July, Official Report, column 10, he will indicate whether the figures given for plutonium exports for civil purposes other than to the United States of America is net of import; and if he will set out in table form the gross exports of plutonium to, and gross imports of plutonium from, each country, including the United States of America, up to 31 March.

Mr. Goodlad: The figure given in my reply of 21 July 1985 is a net figure. It represents gross exports of plutonium produced in the magnox reactors of the CEGB and SSEB less returns of previously exported material. The basis of the calculation was set out in BNFL's written evidence to the Sizewell inquiry, BNFL/P/1 (Add 10)

Figures for gross exports and imports of plutonium were given in my replies of 25 July, at column 602, and 6 November respectively.

Information relating to individual countries is commercially sensitive.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his reply of 6 November, Official Report, c. 547, if he will specify (i) what proportion of the 230 kg of plutonium imported since May 1979 was fabricated into fuel pins after entry of separated plutonium into the United Kingdom, (ii) what quantity of plutonium was subsequently re-exported, (iii) what proportion of the re-exports left the United Kingdom as spent fuel (iv) what quantity of plutonium was re-exported as spent fuel in the same fuel pins as those in which it was imported, (v) to what use any plutonium which had entered the United Kingdom outside fuel pins, and was not subsequently manufactured into fuel pins, was put, (vi) what quantity of plutonium was not combined into fuel rods and (vii) in which reactors fuel rods incorporating the imported plutonium were used; and if he will deposit in the Library the text of any safeguard agreements which related to the import of plutonium fuel.

Mr. Goodlad: With the exception of 6g of separated plutonium imported by BNFL for use as calibration standards, all of the material referred to in my answer of 6 November has been imported by the UKAEA. I am asking the chairman of the authority to write to the hon. Member on the detailed points he raises. Each country listed in my reply of 6 November has a safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency. There are no specific safeguards agreements which relate to the import of plutonium fuel. However all civil nuclear material in the United Kingdom is subject to the provisions of the UK/Euratom/IAEA tripartite agreement and the Euratom Treaty. These are in the Library of the House.

Torness and Heysham II

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects the advanced gas-cooled reactor power stations at Torness and Heysham II to be commissioned; what progress is currently being made in the fuelling and preparation of these two reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member about Heysham II. Electricity matters in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Sizewell (Inquiry)

Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to reach a decision on the recommendations contained in the report of the Sizewell public inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The inspector has delivered the bulk of his report to me. He has told me that he expects to let me have the remaining sections by the middle of January. Once I have the full report I intend to reach my decision as soon as I possibly can.

Energy, Research and Technology Committee

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 2 December, column 544, whether he received an invitation to meet the European Parliament Energy, Research and Technology Committee in November or December in the current year; whether he has recently received any communication from the chairman of that Committee, Mr. Poniatowski; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I was invited to meet the Energy, Research and Technology Committee on 15 or 16 December. Neither date was feasible. I have commitments in this House on 15 December, and am travelling to the Soviet Union on 16 December at the invitation of the Soviet Government. Alternative dates were suggested to the Committee but these were unacceptable. My right honourable Friend the Minister of State for Energy offered to appear before the Committee in my stead but this was also refused. Following this the chairman of the Committee indicated that he did not wish to proceed with a meeting.

Sellafield

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, (Mr. Beith) on 27 November, Official Report, column 302, if he will state what proportion of the total low-level nuclear waste arising from electricity board magnox reprocessing at Sellafield is accounted for by the 12,200 cubic metres referred to in his answer.

Mr. Goodlad: Solid low level radioactive waste attributable to the reprocessing of spent Magnox nuclear fuel from Italy and Japan accounts for less than 10 per cent. of the total solid low level wastes attributable to date to magnox reprocessing by BNFL.

Civil Nuclear Power (Publicity)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, 27 November, Official Report, column 301 (a) what was the increase in his Department's publicity expenditure on civil nuclear power issues and (b) what proportional increase over preceding years this constituted.

Mr. Goodlad: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 26 June, (c. 270) the Government are making £3·09 million available to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (UKAEA) in the current financial year to prepare and produce information on civil nuclear power. This is the first year in which payments have been made to the authority on a trading fund basis. I am advised by the UKAEA that the current year's programme is broadly consistent with their expenditure in previous years.

Electricity (Demand)

Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek from the Electricity Council its revised assessment of the demand for electricity in the medium term and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer to my answer to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 11 December.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the latest Electricity Council (a) medium-term forecast of demand and (b) long-term forecast of demand; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: The medium and long-term demand forecasts adopted by the Electricity Council in October are as follows:

Year	Unit requirement on the CEGB (terawatt hours)	Unrestricted maximum demand (gigawatts)
1992/93	260·0	50·4
1995-96	271·3	52·4

The Electricity Council may review and if necessary revise these estimates before the 1987 medium term development plan is finalised.

Superphenix Project

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has given his permission to the Central Electricity Generating Board during the last six months to increase its shareholding in the SBK consortium within the Superphenix fast breeder reactor project.

Mr. Goodlad: No.

Energy Savings

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are his policies for securing energy savings on a sector by sector basis.

Mr. David Hunt: The EEO supports, through its schemes and services, many initiatives aimed at securing energy efficiency improvements in all sectors.

In particular its monitoring and targeting (M and T) programme seeks to establish M and T systems across the major non-domestic energy consuming sectors. Forty sectoral systems will eventually be included in this programme—25 of which have already begun.

Evidence from sectors where M and T has been fully developed show typical improvement of 10 per cent. The programme directly aims to save industry and commerce some £300 million per annum. Total penetration in the longer term could lead to energy efficiency improvements worth £1 billion per annum.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated capital investment required to make the energy saving per annum which the Government believe is attainable.

Mr. David Hunt: A substantial proportion of the energy savings can be achieved simply through better management, and with little or no investment. The rest of the savings, perhaps just over half, require investments with a relatively short payback period. Given payback periods ranging from a few weeks to five years, an associated once-and-for-all investment of some £6 billion to £9 billion might be required.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy what would be the effect on the supply industries if the whole of the saving on energy which the Government believe is attainable was achieved in four years.

Mr. David Hunt: In the transport sector, the obvious effect would be a significant reduction in demand for automotive fuels. In the domestic sector, the effects on the supply industry will depend on how much of the improvements in energy efficiency are taken in improved comfort standards and how much in reduced energy demand.

In the industrial and commercial sectors also, the improved energy efficiency will not necessarily lead to reduced energy demand because, at the higher level of energy efficiency, businesses will be more competitive and hence able to increase their output. Additional energy will be needed to meet this increase in output.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy how the percentage of energy which the Government estimate can be saved is divided between (a) industry, (b) domestic transport and (c) other and, for energy supply, from (i) coal, (ii) gas, (iii) oil, (iv) nuclear and (v) hydro-electricity.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government believe that about £7 billion worth of savings are available to the nation. This represents about one fifth of the nation's energy bill. In percentage terms, the available sectoral breakdown of these savings is:

	per cent.
Domestic	27
Industry and Commerce	27
Public Services	6
Transport	40

The breakdown of total United Kingdom energy consumption by fuel on a primary energy input basis for 1985 is:

	Primary energy input MTCE	per cent.
Coal	105·3	32
Gas	82·3	25
Oil	115·0	35
Nuclear	22·1	7
Hydro-electricity	2·1	1

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 3 December, Official Report, c. 676, (1) whether the nuclear installations inspectorate work on the review of Bradwell is now complete with the exception of a few issues; if the nuclear installations inspectorate still expects to meet the announced target of spring 1987 for publication of its conclusions on the review; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will name each issue unresolved in the nuclear installations inspectorate assessment of reviews of Calder hall and Chapelcross as at March 1983; which of these issues has since been satisfactorily cleared; what number of meetings there has been between the nuclear installations inspectorate and the Central Electricity Generating Board on unresolved issues in the last year; whether the nuclear installations inspectorate has commissioned consultancy assistance on issues still unresolved; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what work the nuclear installations inspectorate has done since March 1983 on improvements or modifications identified by reviews of Calder hall and Chapelcross as being reasonably practicable; what improvements of modifications for each power station have been formally approved since March 1983; what improvements or modifications identified in the completed body of these reviews as being reasonably practicable remain unapproved at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

British Gas

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many letters have been received by his Department opposing the sale of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: One hundred and seventy five individuals and organisations have written to my Department, either directly or through their Member of Parliament, opposing the sale. This compares with the 5 million people who have applied for shares in British Gas.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total cost of the pre-flotation publicity for British Gas shares.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Maples).

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Energy what were the proceeds and costs of the British Gas sale.

Mr. Peter Walker: The total proceeds to the Government from the sale of British Gas plc are some £7,750 million. The cost to the Government in 1986-87 of the sale is provisionally estimated as follows.

	£ million
United Kingdom sale—
advisers fees	3
marketing: pre-flotation	29
flotation	12
receiving bank registration	20
underwriting and selling commissions	75
Overseas sales	25

This represents around 2 per cent. of the total proceeds.

Heysham II

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 3 December, Official Report, c. 675, (1) what importance alternative siting costs have in considering investment approval for Heysham II nuclear power station; what were the major factors in giving that investment approval; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether information submitted to his Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board in seeking investment approval for Heysham II nuclear power station included (a) financial information on alternative siting options for the same design of power station, (b) information of any possible alternative plans for a coal-fired power station and (c) information of the geographical pattern of other prospective power station developments in medium term; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Consent under section 2 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909, as subsequently amended, already existed for a second nuclear station at the Heysham site. Choices had thus already been made at the time of investment approval for Heysham II.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 3 December, Official Report, c. 674, if he will publish a list of the titles of papers or documents submitted to his Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board in seeking investment approval for Heysham II nuclear power station.

Mr. Goodlad: No, sir.

CEGB (Expenditure)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy at what time annually he gives approval to capital expenditure by the Central Electricity Generating Board for the following three-year period; whether he is currently considering such approvals; when he next expects to consider investment approval for a coal-fired power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As explained in my answer of 25 November to the hon. Member at column 154, capital expenditure approvals are given following the conclusion of the annual investment and financial review. My Department has not received an application for investment approval to construct a new coal-fired power station.

Capital Requirements

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 3 December, Official Report, c. 676, whether the latest detailed six-year forecast of capital requirements supplied to his Department has been superseded by later studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: As explained in my answer of 25 November to the hon. Member at column 154, detailed forecasts of capital requirements are provided to my Department by the Central Electricity Generating Board annually.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether incidents and accidents at unlicensed nuclear sites operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority are reported to Her Majesty's nuclear installation's inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is subject to the same requirement as licensed operators to report incidents under the arrangements announced to the House by my right hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore), then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, on 26 July 1982, at column 374. Any incident falling within the agreed criteria is reported to Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate and details of it are published in regular bulletins issued by the Health and Safety Executive.

Magnox Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to review his policy of commitment to openness in relation to information on the production, reprocessing, storage and use of civil plutonium arising from civil Magnox nuclear reactors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: It is my policy to be as open as possible on these matters.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Slaughterhouses

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has on the present number of unlicensed slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom; and what checks are made on such premises;

(2) what meat slaughtered in the United Kingdom is not subject to inspection before it is sold to the general public.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In Great Britain all red meat slaughterhouses are subject to licensing by local authorities, other than those operated by local authorities themselves. All red meat, excluding game, for sale for human consumption is routinely inspected.

No central record is kept of the number of unlicensed poultry slaughterhouses. All premises where meat is produced for sale for human consumption are subject to checks by local authority officials who are responsible for ensuring that appropriate hygiene and welfare legislative requirements are being met.

Officials of the Agriculture Departments monitor enforcement.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the annual cost of a deficiency payment system to cover foodstuffs at present covered by the common agricultural policy and at present produced in the United Kingdom, on the assumption that deficiency payments would be offered for standard quantities related to the United Kingdom's material needs, that world food prices remained at current levels and the United Kingdom's farmers' net incomes were maintained.

Mr. Jopling: I have made no estimate on such an array of assumptions. But I have indicated in broad terms that were deficiency payments operated now, for the main commodities, they could cost around £4 billion.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the future of the common agricultural policy in the light of the recent estimate by the EEC-funded European Union of Consumers that the net cost of the policy per average family is £13 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Farm Quotas

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out such information as he has on the number and nature of recorded instances of French farmers contravening European Economic Community farm quotas and regulations.

Mr. Gummer: It is the responsibility of the European Commission to take infraction proceedings against those who contravene the Community's agricultural legislation. Additionally, alleged French contraventions may be pursued in their domestic courts and in the European Court of Justice.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting held in Brussels on 8 to 10 December.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at this meeting, which was chaired by my right hon. Friend the Minister.

The main items before the Council were the Commission's proposals for reform of the support arrangements for milk and beef, intended to tackle the surplus situation in these sectors, and the Commission's proposals for a number of socio-structural measures.

There remain differences of view about the best method of reducing the milk surplus. The key issues still under discussion are the extent of the quota cut which can be made for the year beginning 1 April 1987, whether the whole cut should be permanent or partly achieved through suspension, and the question of the compensation to be offered to farmers affected by these cuts. There remain differences too on the role which weakening the intervention mechanisms should play in the measures to be adopted.

On beef, discussion concentrated on the extent of the weakening of the intervention levels and on the role of a premium scheme, and whether the suckler cow subsidy should be improved.

After the views of member states had been clarified, the United Kingdom Presidency, in close collaboration with the Commission, tabled a paper on milk and beef in an endeavour to make progress. There was a general willingness to work for a positive conclusion, but a number of delegates sought further improvements.

The socio-structural proposals were conceived by the Commission as a means of helping farmers to adapt to changing economic circumstances. Discussion on these focused primarily on the extent to which these measures should reinforce action to reduce surpluses.

The Council discussed each of these three items extensively over three days, and adjourned until Saturday 13 December in order to give the Presidency and Commission the opportunity to reflect on the possibilities for reaching conclusions on these complex issues.

In addition to the existing proposals for devaluations of the green pound and green French franc for beef and sheepmeat, the Commission proposed green rate devaluations for the sheep sector for Greece, and for sheepmeat and structures for Portugal. Discussion on these proposals will also be taken up again when the Council resumes.

THE ARTS

Cork Report

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Minister for the Arts when he expects the Arts Council to implement the recommendations contained in the Cork report, "Theatre is for All", concerning the earnings from the commercial theatre of artistic directors of Arts Council-subsidised theatres.

Mr. Luce: I understand that the Arts Council has accepted these recommendations. From now on, new contracts for directors will be expected to contain the provisions proposed in the report for sabbatical leave and for the distribution of earnings from plays transferred to the commercial theatre.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will announce funding for museums and galleries in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 17 November 1986, c. 29]: I am now able to announce the allocations to museums and galleries within the arts budget for 1987-88.

Overall provision for museums and galleries in 1987-88 will be £107·78 million. This is an increase of £3·896 million or 3·8 per cent. over the present year.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the Supply Estimates, I propose that the allocations to specific institutions shall be as indicated in the following table.

The allocations provide for a general, basic increase in running costs of 3·5 per cent. above the current year's grant. In the case of those museums and galleries whose building and maintenance programmes will be untied from the PSA from 1988-89, I am providing additional funds specifically to deal with the transitional costs of preparing for that change. I am further increasing the provisions of three institutions to take account of the opening next year of major gallery extensions: the Tate gallery's Clore gallery, the Victoria and Albert museum's theatre museum, and the National museums and galleries on Merseyside's maritime museum.

Given the pressing requirement to meet these specific needs, I have found it necessary to maintain in cash terms in 1987-88 the 1986-87 levels of purchase grants. Twenty seven million, four hundred and fifty thousand pounds will be devoted to the building and maintenance programme at present managed by the Property Services Agency and carried on their Vote. That represents an increase of 1·9 per cent. over the current year's provision.

I propose that the method of financing the Museums and Galleries Commission should be changed from direct Vote provision to grant-in-aid from the financial year 1987-88. I shall consult the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee on this, and also the Public Accounts Committee and the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee. Subject to their views the main Supply Estimates will be presented to Parliament on a grant-in-aid basis.

The provision of £6·111 million for the Museums and Galleries Commission in 1987-88 represents an increase of some 3·4 per cent. over the grant allocation for 1986-87. Within this total, the Museums and Galleries Commission intends to introduce a scheme to encourage touring exhibitions, including those which involve the loan of items from national collections for display in other museums and galleries. I am anxious to encourage greater access to collections for people in all areas, and I welcome the Museums and Galleries Commission's initiative in this regard.

The national museums and galleries make a splendid contribution to conserving and displaying our national heritage. With the provision I am making for next year and with the strengthened incentive to maximise receipts provided by the recent change to grant-in-aid status, I am confident that they will continue to do so.

£ million

	1986-87	1987-88
	Running costs	Running costs	Purchase Grant
Votes 1-9
British Museum	11·945	12·538	1·400
Imperial War Museum	4·397	4·627	0·100
National Gallery	4·021	4·267	2·750
National Maritime Museum	4·257	4·472	0·205
National Portrait Gallery	1·504	1·589	0·310
Science Museum	8·796	9·214	0·375
Tate Gallery	3·967	4·682	1·815
Victoria and Albert	9·878	10·535	1·145
Wallace Collection	0·906	0·939	n/a
Vote 10(i)
Sir John Soane's	0·250	0·259
Museum of London	2·250	2·329
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	8·745	9·414
Greater Manchester Museum of Science and Industry	1·075	1·252
Museums and Galleries Commission	5·909	6·111

Notes:
(i) includes provision for purchase grants, building and maintenance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

"Light Against Crime"

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the crime prevention project "Light Against Crime".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: "Light Against Crime" is the title of a video produced by the Home Office crime prevention centre which has been distributed to police forces in England and Wales. It is intended for use as a teaching aid by the centre and by police crime prevention officers in providing advice on the part which lighting can play in crime prevention and security. A number of companies and organisations which manufacture, supply or install lighting equipment and services have adopted "Light Against Crime" as a slogan or logo.

Community Language Programmes

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses in determining whether an application for the funding of community language programmes under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 meets the special needs of Commonwealth immigrants.

Mr. Waddington: In considering whether to approve grant under section 11 in repect of mother tongue or community language teaching posts—and all other posts for which grant application may be made — we have regard to the criteria set out in paragraph 14 of Home Office circular No. 72/1986.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what priority he attaches in reaching decisions on applications for the funding of programmes under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to the contribution of such programmes to primary education and the improvement of English learning as a by-product.

Mr. Waddington: At present, all applications for grant under section 11 which are judged to meet the criteria for grant will be funded. We are not, therefore, attaching any higher priority to one sort of proposal than any other.

Police (Statistics)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total establishment of each police force in England; what is the recommended full-strength establishment of each police force; and what was the establishment of each police force in 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information for police forces in England is as follows:

Police force	31 October 1974		31 October 1979		31 October 1986
	Authorised establishment	Actual strength	Authorised establishment	Actual strength	Authorised establishment	Actual strength
Avon and Somerset	2,868	2,573	2,953	2,851	3,020	3,010
Bedfordshire	890	792	947	904	1,000	1,001
Cambridgeshire	1,023	959	1,140	1,086	1,140	1,153
Cheshire	1,770	1,590	1,805	1,787	1,845	1,835
Cleveland	1,411	1,273	1,418	1,387	1,474	1,473
Cumbria	1,074	1,010	1,113	1,077	[2]1,130	1,129
Derbyshire	1,559	1,420	1,712	1,700	[2]1,767	1,767
Devon and Cornwall	2,573	2,558	2,673	2,650	[2]2,757	2,775
Dorset	1,088	1,036	1,164	1,157	[2]1,211	1,207
Durham	1,371	1,257	1,349	1,305	1,357	1,305
Essex	2,436	2,151	2,525	2,513	[1]2,697	2,699
Gloucestershire	1,007	941	1,116	1,096	1,164	1,160
Greater Manchester	6,600	5,504	6,766	6,566	6,943	6,770
Hampshire	2,844	2,614	2,954	2,960	3,105	3,088

Police force	31 October 1974		31 October 1979		31 October 1986
	Authorised establishment	Actual strength	Authorised establishment	Actual strength	Authorised establishment	Actual strength
Hertfordshire	1,472	1,300	1,533	1,470	1,596	1,591
Humberside	1,910	1,673	1,939	1,887	1,972	1,969
Kent	2,454	2,207	2,820	2,815	[1]2,875	2,893
Lancashire	2,880	2,803	3,118	3,072	3,158	3,106
Leicestershire	1,603	1,534	1,706	1,707	1,733	1,733
Lincolnshire	1,174	1,113	1,182	1,171	1,183	1,161
Merseyside	4,317	3,825	4,451	4,476	4,679	4,606
Norfolk	1,218	1,140	1,265	1,232	1,318	1,297
Northamptonshire	844	791	950	927	1,054	1,050
Northumbria	3,322	3,080	3,325	3,332	3,378	3,380
North Yorkshire	1,277	1,193	1,328	1,341	1,368	1,363
Nottinghamshire	2,056	1,981	2,145	2,134	2,259	2,218
South Yorkshire	2,752	2,318	2,752	2,625	2,881	2,866
Staffordshire	2,064	1,903	2,066	2,011	2,131	2,090
Suffolk	1,077	968	1,123	1,099	1,186	1,138
Surrey	1,438	1,274	1,602	1,448	1,639	1,624
Sussex	2,618	2,471	2,803	2,795	2,830	2,809
Thames Valley	2,960	2,721	3,005	2,692	[3]3,367	3,424
Warwickshire	876	762	876	877	967	968
West Mercia	1,650	1,456	1,834	1,808	1,953	1,924
West Midlands	6,471	5,244	6,509	6,156	6,684	6,614
West Yorkshire	5,097	4,373	5,104	4,786	5,154	5,142
Wiltshire	979	869	1,032	1,009	1,049	1,046
City of London	1,028	782	1,022	830	798	777
Metropolitan	26,055	20,585	26,589	22,468	27,515	26,681
Total: England	108,106	94,044	111,714	105,207	115,337	113,842

[1]Further increases of 25 posts for Essex and 36 for Kent have been approved with effect from 1 November 1986.
[2]Further increases of 14 posts for Cumbria, 26 for Derbyshire, 17 for Devon and Cornwall and 15 for Dorset have been approved with effect from 1 January 1987.
[3]Further increases of 50 posts for Thames Valley have been approved with effect from 1 November 1986 and 50 with effect from 1 April 1987.

Emergency Fire Service (London)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the 999 fire service in Greater London.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes.

Police (Emergency Service)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware of any threat to the capacity of police outside the Metropolitan police district to maintain a prompt 999 service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not aware of any such threat, but if the hon. Member has any particular difficulties in mind perhaps he would let me know of them.

Mr. Ammanullah Khan

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning Mr. Ammanullah Khan, awaiting deportation in Brixton prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: A number of representations have been received from right hon. and hon. Members and others. Having considered the advice of the independent panel of advisers to which the case was referred in accordance with the procedures described in rule 150 of the immigration rules, my right hon. Friend maintained his decision to deport Mr. Khan on ground of national security. A deportation order was accordingly signed and served on Mr. Khan, together with notification of his right of appeal against Pakistan as country of destination. Mr. Khan has now waived that right of appeal and arrangements will be made for his deportation as soon as possible.

Visitors

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) passengers in total and (b) people seeking admission as visitors who arrived at Heathrow from the Indian subcontinent on any of the days from 11 to 15 October for which figures are available were (i) granted admission, (ii) refused entry and detained, (iii) refused entry and granted temporary admission, (iv) returned to the Indian subcontinent within that period and (v) are still waiting for a decision on whether to grant leave to enter;

(2) how many passengers from the Indian subcontinent who were detained or granted temporary admission pending further examination between 11 and 16 October were subsequently (i) refused entry but granted temporary admission, (ii) refused entry without the grant of temporary admission, (iii) granted leave to enter and (iv) still await decisions on whether to grant leave to enter the United Kingdom;

(3) how many of those who sought entry to the United Kingdom as visitors between 11 and 16 October are (a) still in detention, (b) still on indefinite temporary admission and (c) still awaiting an interview before a decision on whether to grant leave to enter;

(4) how many people (a) in total and (b) from the Indian subcontinent, sought leave to enter the United Kingdom as visitors on the days from 11 to 16 October for which figures are available;

(5) how many passengers (a) in total and (b) from the Indian subcontinent, arrived at Heathrow airport on any of the days from 11 to 15 October for which figures are available.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Police Levels (Solihull)

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on police manning levels in Solihull.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the west midlands that on 8 December 1986 there were 127 police officers in the Solihull sub-division.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the spending of his Department on fees to outside consultants in the current year; and what it was in 1979-80 and each intervening year.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 19 November 1986, c. 204]: The 1986-87 estimate for payments by the Home Office to outside management and computer consultants is £2,650,000. Equivalent estimates for payments for 1984-85 and 1985-86 were £879,000 and £1,495,000 respectively. These payments include expenses and VAT as well as fees. Separate information on fees alone or for the years prior to 1984-85 is not readily available.

Prison Sentences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report such information as is available as to how the average time actually served in prison by offenders sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment, seven years' imprisonment, 10 years' imprisonment, 15 years' imprisonment, 20 years' imprisonment, 30 years' imprisonment and life imprisonment, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 8 December 1986, c. 80]: Information on the distribution of time served under sentence by life sentence prisoners received since 1965 is published in Table 4(e) of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales 1985", Cmnd. 9903. Information on time served under determinate sentence is given in Table 4(f) of the same publication. Information on time served for the lengths of sentence specified is given in the following table. Time served under sentence is reduced by remission, parole and time spent in custody on remand.

Length of sentence and average time served by persons discharged in 1985; selected sentence lengths—England and Wales

Length of sentence (years)	Average time served[1] (months)
3	16
7	46
10	72
15	109
20	[2]190
30	[2] . . .

[1] Based on those discharged on completion of their sentence or on parole; excludes those discharged following a recall from parole or for other reasons, eg successful appeal, transfer out of prison department establishments.

[2] In 1985 only two prisoners were discharged from sentences of 20 years and none from sentences of 30 years.

Mass Media Policy

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the conference of European Ministers on mass media policy.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Costs)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to his answer of 4 December, Official Report, column 711, he will publish the per capita costs per prisoner for the three years and five prisons referred to therein.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is provided in the following table:

Penal establishments having the highest and lowest per capita costs

Year	Highest	£/per inmate week	Lowest	£/per inmate week
1983-84	Albany	[1]915	Kirkham	125
1984-85	Parkhurst	656	Rudgate	144
1985-86	Lindholme	[2]942	Rudgate	120

[1] A substantial proportion of this cost was a direct result of the riot which took place in June 1983. Because of the damage caused to cells in the prison, some prisoners had to be transferred to accommodation elsewhere, but prison staff remained at much the same level as before to provide escorts for contractors carrying out remedial work on which considerable additional expenditure was incurred.

[2] This figure is not representive of the running costs of the establishment. A major element of the cost was for equipping what was a new establishment with a certified normal accommodation of 600. As the establishment did not start receiving prisoners until November 1985 the average inmate population during the year was only 62, which distorted the figures for average inmate costs.

State Security

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he gave prior to his speech in the House on 3 December to the efficacy of arrangements for supervision of the security services in (a) Canada and (b) Israel.

Mr. Hurd: As part of my responsibility for the security service in this country I am naturally interested in how other countries arrange these matters. As I indicated in the House on 3 December at column 941, each country has devised its own system to suit its own constitutional circumstances.

NATO Crisis Management Committee

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the posts, ranks and responsibilities of officials from his Department who represent the United Kingdom on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation crisis management committee and its sub-committees.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am aware of no such committee.

Civil Defence

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department which grants were made to local authorities in the United Kingdom under the Civil Defence (Grant) Regulations 1983 for 1985-86; and what are projected for these authorities in 1986-87.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Civil Defence (Grant) (Amendment) Regulations 1983 set out those expenses incurred by local and police authorities in the discharge of their civil defence functions which are completely reimbursed by way of grant. Civil defence expenses other than those specified in the 1983 regulations are subject to 75 per cent. reimbursement under the Civil Defence (Grant) Regulations 1953. The total grant payable in 1985-86 to authorities in England and Wales under the 1953 regulations has not yet been finalised, but the provisional figure is £11,726,208. The projected figure for 1986-87 is £13,775,250.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will identify the terms of reference and frequency of meetings of (a) the Police War Duties Committee and (b) the Standing Working Party of Police Staff Officers on home defence planning;

(2) if he will identify the relationship between his Department and the Police War Duties Committee; and the extent and mechanisms for liaison between his Department and that committee.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police War Duties Committee (PWDC) is a committee of the central conference of chief constables. It meets as necessary, currently on an annual basis, to discuss developments in civil defence and police war duties planning. Detailed co-ordination of planning is undertaken by the standing working party of police staff officers, which meets three times a year and reports to PWDC. Both are chaired by a Home Office official.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he anticipates work on the home defence headquarters for regional 81, north Wales, to begin; what is the projected cost of the construction work (a) in total, (b) in the financial year 1986-87 and (c) in the financial year 1987-88; and how much work he expects construction to generate locally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements for construction work are under consideration, but a start is unlikely to be made in the next two years.

EMPLOYMENT

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General if he will give an estimate of the costs incurred by his Department as a result of the work of the Environment Committee on its consideration of the question of reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel.

Mr. Trippier: The estimated costs incurred by my Department in giving oral and written evidence to the Environment Committee were £3,200. The Committee's recommendations are being considered.

Simplified Planning Zones

Mr. Adley asked the Paymaster General what steps he is taking to generate employment in areas designated as simplified planning zones.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that my hon. Friend is referring to the Government's inner cities initiative. The principal aim of the initiative is to encourage enterprise and employment in the inner city. A growing number of steps are being taken, many of them piloting new approaches to the employment problems of residents. Among these, as examples only are:

—support by our inner city task force for 50 projects to date, committing £2·2 million, including, training and enterprise training, employment of local labour, help towards the purchase and refurbishment of community facilities, support for ethnic minority enterprise, support for community groups, help with consultancy services and fostering of schools/industry links.

—improved co-ordination between different Departments of Government in delivering national programmes in inner city areas which produced, for example, the recent £1·5 million contract in Handsworth, Birmingham, combining physical refurbishment of housing with employment and training for local residents.

—discussions which I have with the insurance industry to help tackle the insurance problems faced by some inner city businesses, with the result that I announced on 29 October the setting up of inner city insurance contact points manned by staff from the Association of British Insurers.

— discussions which I am having with the banks to encourage the development of their services to inner city business, including the better provision of loan finance.

—agreement by the Manpower Services Commission to review the operation of its programme in the inner city areas so that it can better meet the employment needs of people living there, including close liaison between the Commission's officials and task force leaders.

I am confident that these efforts will address our aim of generating employment in the inner city, encouraging the enterprise of people living there, and making the inner city a better place to do business in.

North-West

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the provision for industrial training and re-training in the north-west.

Mr. Trippier: The main responsibility for the provision of employee training rests with employers. The great majority of industries have recognised industry training organisations that are able to offer advice to employers, and grants to promote the development of better training arrangements. In the north-west, the Manpower Services Commission plans in 1986-87 to assist with the training of some 45,300 adults and some 65,100 young people on YTS, at a cost of £29·9 million and £118·4 million, respectively.

Batley and Spen

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General how many applications his Department has received in Batley and Spen under (a) the new workers scheme, (b) the mobility scheme and (c) the enterprise allowance.

Mr. Trippier: We do not have separate figures for Batley and Spen for the new workers scheme. At the end of November 546 people were supported by the scheme in Bradford, Calderdale and Kirklees area which includes Batley and Spen. Since its introduction on 16 June 1986, Batley and Spen valley jobcentres have taken 20 applications under the travel to interview scheme. Sixteen were accepted.

Records are not available on the number of applications made under the enterprise allowance scheme, but since the scheme's inception in August 1983, 272 people from Batley and Spen have joined the scheme.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if he will list the help being provided by his Department for (a) the young unemployed and (b) the long-term unemployed in Batley and Spen.

Mr. Trippier: All the schemes listed in the "Action for Jobs" booklet, with the exception of career development loans and the travel to interview scheme which are operating on a pilot basis, are available in Batley and Spen.

The schemes specifically designed to help young people are:

—YTS
—new workers scheme
—community industry

The schemes specifically designed to help the long-term unemployed are:

—restart
—the community programme
—jobclubs

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General from what parts of the Department of Employment's and the Manpower Services Commission's budgets funding for the job training scheme will come.

Mr. Trippier: The current job training programme is funded from the Manpower Services Commission's grant-in-aid for adult and occupational training. The new job training scheme, which is currently being piloted in nine areas, is being funded from within that grant-in-aid.

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General what are the implications of the job training scheme for the future of skillcentres.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. and noble Friend announced plans for the new job training scheme pilots on 9 October. We review frequently current provision for vocational education and training to ensure that it both meets the needs of the labour market and represents good value for money. I have no plans to announce changes to the MSC's skills training agency.

Adjudication (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General how many claims under consideration at the adjudication office in Birmingham on 31 October 1985 had been held there for more than a month.

Mr. Trippier: Information is not readily available about the number of cases outstanding for more than one month prior to 31 October 1985 and could only be obtained at disproportionate expense.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Fields asked the Paymaster General how many unemployed people have been offered jobs as a result of restart training schemes in the (a) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (b) Broadgreen constituency area; how many people have had benefit suspended having failed to attend restart interviews in (i) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (ii) Broad green constituency area; and how many people have had benefit suspended for not meeting the requirements of the new availability for work test in (1) Liverpool travel-to-work area and (2) Broadgreen constituency area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Lindane (Bats)

Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General whether he will ban the use of Lindane for the control of bats.

Mr. Trippier: The use of Lindane for the control of bats is already effectively banned because Lindane is not approved under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 for this purpose.

Voluntary Projects

Mr. Corbett asked the Paymaster General what has been the annual budget for the voluntary projects programme; and what plans he has to increase it.

Mr. Trippier: The budget for the voluntary projects programme for the last three financial years was:

	£ million
1984-85	9·6
1985-86	12·1
1986-87	14

There are no plans at present to increase it.

Debts

Mr. Ottaway asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the impact on small businesses of establishing a statutory right to interest on the late payment of debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I am not convinced that a statutory right to interest on overdue debts would in practice improve small firms' ability to secure payment on time. It is already open to businesses to include provision for payment of interest in the terms of a contract.

Nuclear Energy Inspectors

Mr. Wigley asked the Paymaster General what is the approved establishment of nuclear energy inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Commission; what is the total actual number currently employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The planned number of nuclear installations inspectors approved by the Health and Safety

Executive for the current financial year is 105. On 1 December 1986 there were 98 nuclear installations inspectors in post.

A recruitment competition for up to 20 more nuclear installations inspectors is at present under way.

NATIONAL FINANCE

"The Poor Man's James Bond"

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Customs and Excise intend to take any action against the importation of "The Poor Man's James Bond" into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: Customs have no record of having dealt with any video cassettes, books, magazines or films of this title. Should they be imported at any future date they will be treated under the normal import rules.

Performance-related Pay

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take full account of the experience in operation of performance-related pay in the National Audit Office in the further development of performance-related pay in the Civil Service.

Mr. Brooke: Yes, so far as it is relevant.

Charitable Giving

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has yet decided whether the Government's employees should be able to participate in tax-relieved schemes for charitable giving.

Mr. Peter Brooke: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him in reply to a similar question on 20 November at column 314.

Official Secrets Act

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what circumstances a person who is required to sign the Official Secrets Act can subsequently lose his retirement pension rights.

Mr. Brooke: The general effect of existing legislation, as applied to public service pension schemes, is that public servants are liable to pension forfeiture if they are convicted of treason, of a serious offence (with imprisonment exceeding 10 years) under the Official Secrets Acts, or of an offence in connection with their employment, committed before the benefit becomes payable and subsequently certified by a Minister as either "gravely injurious to the state" or

"liable to lead to a serious loss of confidence in the public services."

Privatisation

Mr. Eadie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the proportion of shares held by private individual shareholders in formerly publicly-owned industries privatised since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 17 November 1986, at column 82.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the relationship between the present exchange rate and the balance of payments.

Mr. MacGregor: The relationship between the exchange rate and the balance of payments is complex. The adjustment in the exchange rate which has occurred in response to the fall in the price of oil has been accompanied by an improvement in competitiveness, which should in time benefit the non-oil current account on condition that the improvement is sustained. This has to be secured by industry's control of its costs, especially unit labour costs. Industry should plan on the basis that we shall maintain a firm exchange rate as we have done before.

Departmental Expenditure

Dr. Bray asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis the central team of Treasury and other officials reported on page 37 of the "Executive Summary of their Multi-Departmental Review of Budgeting," published by the Treasury in March, that there is no evidence that Departments produce a record of expenditure committed but not yet incurred.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Leasehold Rental Payments (Taxation)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the revenue in 1985-86 from tax on domestic leasehold rental payments.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to prevent traders who sell goods below the cost of supply being able to reclaim more value added tax than they charge on the sale of these items under the procedure known as loss leading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No. VAT registered traders can generally recover the VAT that they have paid on their business purchases. There is no reason to suppose that this gives rise to problems of distortion if the goods are sold as loss leaders, but, if my hon. Friend knows of difficulties, perhaps he will write to me.

Inflation

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. MacGregor: The retail price index increased at an annual rate of 3 per cent. in the 12 months to October.

Keith Committee Report

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when it is intended to publish draft proposals for implementing the Inland Revenue aspects of volumes 1 and 2 of the Keith committee report.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Inland Revenue is, with my approval, today issuing a consultative document, entitled

"The Inland Revenue and the Taxpayer" containing detailed proposals in response to the income tax, capital gains tax and corporation tax recommendations of the Keith committee. These proposals follow detailed consultations with a number of representative bodies over the last two years.

The extent of the committee's review, which covered the whole range of the Inland Revenue's powers, is reflected in the 46 draft clauses and two schedules included in the consultative document. It would not be feasible to implement changes of this magnitude in a single Finance Bill.

Subject to reactions to the proposals, the Government are considering giving priority to those clauses which streamline the administration of corporation tax and improve the effectiveness of the PAYE and sub-contractor deduction schemes. The corporation tax proposals are part of a wider programme of reform, including new computer systems which will not be operational for some years. Further details are given in an Inland Revenue press release issued today.

Construction Industry (VAT)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in view of the level of value added tax evasion in the construction industry, he will introduce a nil value added tax threshold for that industry.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1986]: No such plans have been made, but all representations concerning the level of the VAT registration threshold will be taken into account in the annual review before my right hon. Friend's Budget.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rolls-Royce Plant, Hatfield

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he has met the management of Rolls-Royce to discuss the proposed closure of the Rolls-Royce plant in Hatfield; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has been notified of the expected number of jobs that will be lost following the closure of the Rolls-Royce plant in Hatfield; and how many of these the company expects to lose through compulsory redundancy.

Mr. Pattie: This is a matter for the board of Rolls-Royce plc. I understand however that there will be no compulsory redundancies as a result of the integration of the Hatfield test facility in the Leavesden site.

Greece (Alcoholic Beverages)

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the Greek Government in respect of the value added tax scheme they are introducing on 1 January relating to alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have made firm representations to the Greek authorities about the different rates of value added tax to be applied with effect from 1 January 1987 to certain alcoholic beverages. We have also drawn the European Commission's attention to our concerns that the proposed rates discriminate against imported spirits and may contravene Community law. The Commission is at our request actively pursuing this issue with the Greek Government.

Land-Rovers

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) into which group of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985 Land-Rovers fall;

(2) what consideration is given to the status of the intended purchaser, and the nature of his activities, when the export of Land-Rovers is being considered under export licensing procedures.

Mr. Alan Clark: Civilian Land-Rovers are not subject to export control.

Non-Life Insurance (EC)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the position regarding free trade in non-life insurance within the European Economic Community, following the ruling of the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Howard: The European Court of Justice gave judgment in the four important insurance cases, which had been brought by the Commission against Germany, France, Denmark and Ireland, on 4 December. These judgments will represent an important landmark in the development of the Community's internal market in the field of trade in services in general and in insurance services in particular. The main immediate impact is likely to be on the proposed Council directive to facilitate the provision of non-life insurance services. I hope that discussion of this directive will resume as quickly as possible, in the light of the conclusions of the recent meeting in London of the European Council, which called for decisions during 1987 to open up the market in financial services, including insurance.

Ailsa Shipyard

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken regarding the offers to purchase the Ailsa shipyard; when he expects an announcement on the future of the yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The decision on the sale of the Ailsa shipyard is a matter for British Shipbuilders. It has received bids and is in touch with interested parties. I am sure its decision will be based on a careful assessment of the employment and commercial aspects of the bids, before it invites my comments. I in turn am consulting my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Scotland. I hope that it will be possible to make an announcement about the future of the yard shortly.

Submarine Syncrolift Equipment

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if syncrolift equipment for submarines is classified as military equipment under the ban on such material to Libya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Syncrolift equipment is designed for civilian uses and is not subject to export licensing under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance was given to Northern Engineering Industries regarding the export to Libya of submarine syncrolift equipment.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following a approach from the company, the Department of Trade and Industry confirmed that the syncrolift shiplift was not subject to export licensing under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985.

BAOR (Electrical Equipment Standards)

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to which United Kingdom standards are regarded as being equivalent (a) to the European standard and (b) to the West German standard for the purposes of supplying non-military electrical equipment to British Army of the Rhine installations.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Contracts in Germany for the supply of non-military electrical equipment are placed on our behalf by the German construction administration under the terms of the NATO status of forces agreement. The contract instructions conform to German law and state that standard trade terminology should be used to specify the services; relevant (DIN) standards can be quoted. In practice DIN or VDE standards are quoted.

West Bank and Gaza Strip (Tariff Measures)

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the adoption of tariff measures for the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza strip.

Mr. Alan Clark: I wish to explain the agreement by the Government to the adoption of a Council regulation on the tariff arrangements applicable to imports into the Community of products originating in the "occupied territories" before the Select Committee has an opportunity for scrutiny and the reason for the delay in reporting the matter for scrutiny.

The regulation reflects the Community's concern to take practical steps to improve economic conditions for the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza strip. It is also intended to bring the preferential trade arrangements for the occupied territories into line with the terms given to neighbouring countries. The United Kingdom's direct interest in the products covered is negligible.

Because of the need for confidentiality in consideration of the tariff treatment to be given to particular products, the Commission's proposal was given a confidential classification, as were the subsequent Council negotiations. I hope, therefore, that the House will understand why it was not possible for the full scrutiny processes to be followed.

The regulation was adopted at the Foreign Affairs Council on 27 October 1986 and entered into force on 16 November. I regret that because of an oversight the scrutiny committees were not informed of the adoption of the regulation until 25 November. I can assure the House that no discourtesy was intended.

Nominee Accounts

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the use of nominee accounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1986, c. 21]: If the hon. Member is asking whether we will introduce legislation to prohibit the use of nominee shareholdings, we have no plans to do so. Nominee shareholdings often play a useful role in meeting legitimate business needs, for example, in facilitating the discretionary management of shareholdings by stockbrokers and other professionals. The law already provides for the beneficial ownership of shares to be disclosed to those who have a need to know.

Statistical Information

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all the changes that have been made since 1979 in his Department in the presentation of statistical information; and what further changes are now planned.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1986, c. 86]: Major statistical changes in the period since 1979 were listed in my reply to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 8 December 1986 at column 22-26. Further changes planned, or under serious consideration, are shown in the tables.

In addition to these changes, the Department is going ahead with plans, as part of the Government's initiative on tradeable information, to disseminate in computer-readable format a wide range of its existing statistical series. In 1988 a wide variety of indices and constant price series will be rebased to reflect the pattern of production and prices in 1985 rather than 1980.

Table 1

Changes already decided

Statistical series/inquiry	Nature of change
Credit press notice	The inclusion of figures from banks for the amounts outstanding on personal accounts in the United Kingdom, excluding bridging and house purchase finance and Access and Visa cards, where the amount of the individual loan is £15,000 or less, divided between fixed sum and running account credit.
Overseas Trade Statistics	The adoption by the United Kingdom of the third revision of the Standard International Trade Classification from the beginning of 1988.
Company Accounts Analysis	The introduction of a quarterly Business Monitor to give more up-to-date results.
Companies' rates of return	Publication of quarterly estimates.
Computer Services Inquiry	Revised questionnaire and a substantially altered and enlarged panel of respondents.
Engineering Sales and Orders	Annual publication to be introduced in a new Business Monitor PA 1008.

Statistical series/inquiry	Nature of change
Annual Census of Production (Manufacturing)	Use of the company (rather than the establishment) as the main basis for reporting from 1988.
Retailing Inquiry	The pattern will be revised, with "full" inquiries conducted in respect of 1986 and 1990, and intermediate inquiries in the intervening years.
Service Trades Inquiry	The inquiry will be extended to cover legal and certain health and educational services.

Table 2

Changes under consideration

Statistical series/inquiry	Nature of change
Quarterly Sales Inquiry	A review is nearing completion and may recommend some restructuring of the quarterly, and monthly, sales inquiries.
Value Added and Data Services	Collection and possible publication of statistics from VADS licence holders.
Computer-held Databases	Collection and publication of statistics on revenue from computer-held databases from database hosts.
Information Technology	Publication of an IT products Business Monitor.
Cinema	Collection and publication of cinema statistics.
Trade Performance Ratios	Production and publication of early estimates of trade performance ratios.

Industrial Counterfeiting

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to increase the penalties available for offences of industrial courterfeiting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1986]: Much industrial counterfeiting is already an offence under the Trade Description Act 1968 which provides penalties of up to two yers in prison, or an unlimited fine, or both. Moreover, clause 12 of the Criminal Justice Bill will be applicable in certain cases and will provide penalties of up to 10 years in prison, or an unlimited fine, or both. In these circumstances, I do not think that increases in the available penalties are necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Antarctic Treaty System

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the Government towards the recent United Nations resolution on South Africa and the Antarctic treaty system in the context of the support given to that resolution by several of Britain's fellow consultative parties.

Mr. Eggar: We have repeatedly emphasised our abhorrence of South Africa's racial policies and the repressive measures which enforce them. However, those policies are unconnected with either the Antarctic treaty's purposes or South Africa's Antarctic activities. Since the General Assembly resolution in question potentially prejudiced the Antarctic treaty system's peaceful operation, the majority of treaty consultative parties, including Britain, registered disapproval by not participating in the vote. Those consultative parties who voted in favour indicated that this would have no practical effect on their treaty obligations vis-a-vis South Africa.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy on Antarctica and the Antarctica treaty system in the light of the recent session on Antarctic minerals at Tokyo and the United Nations debate on the question of Antarctica.

Mr. Eggar: We remain committed to supporting the Antarctic treaty system, which has kept Antarctica free of conflict for so long. We therefore welcomed the further progress achieved within this framework at the recent Antarctic minerals negotiating round at Tokyo. Regrettably, recent General Assembly resolutions have sought to interfere with the Antarctic treaty's operation and membership. In addition these actions set an unwelcome precedent for other international treaties negotiated outside the United Nations orbit. Accordingly, we and most of our treaty partners have registered our disapproval by not participating in the 1986 General Assembly voting.

British Council

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money is spent by the British Council on its work in the Caribbean countries; and how many permanent staff they have to undertake work in those countries.

Mr. Eggar: In 1985-86 the British Council spent £37,000 of its own resources in the Caribbean countries. It also handled £1,591,000 on behalf of the FCO, ODA and others. The Council has no permanent staff working in the Caribbean.

Radio Active Material

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had fom the Irish Government expressing opposition to the dumping of radio active material in the Irish sea.

Mr. Eggar: None; but the Irish Prime Minister expressed concern about the dischage of radioactive material from Sellafield when he met my right honourable Friend the Prime Minister in the margins of the European Council on 6 December.

Disarmament

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his Department's principal achievements in working towards disarmament since 1983.

Mr. Eggar: We have continued to participate directly and constructively in all the active multilateral negotiations and discussions on arms control and disarmament. We maintain close and regular contacts with the United States on the bilateral United States/Soviet talks on nuclear and space arms and agree that priority should be given to an INF agreement with restraints on shorter range systems and a 50 per cent. cut over five years in United States and Soviet strategic offensive weapons. British Ministers have also maintained a dialogue on arms control with representatives of the Soviet Union.

We have played a leading role at the conference on disarmament in Geneva, in particular in the efforts to achieve a world-wide permanent and verifiable ban on chemical weapons. The United Kingdom has tabled five detailed proposals to this end in Geneva since 1983. The conference's ad hoc negotiating committee, which has been under United Kingdom chairmanship for 1986, has made encouraging progress this year.

We played a prominent and positive role at the third review conference on the non-proliferation treaty in August-September 1985 in Geneva, which produced a final document strongly endorsing this important treaty.

We took the lead in formulating the West's constructive and innovative proposal for verification of troop reductions at the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in December 1985, which remains on the table.

We were instrumental in the establishment of the high level task force on conventional arms control set up by the North Atlantic Council ministerial meeting in Halifax, Canada, in May this year, which is continuing to examine opportunities to make progress in the elimination of conventional force disparities on the basis of the Brussels declaration.

We made a significant contribution to the negotiation of the package of confidence and security-building measures agreed by the conference on disarmament in Europe in Stockholm in September, which promises to bring about a greater degree of openness and predictability about military activities in the whole of Europe.

We also made a substantial contribution to the successful outcome of the biological weapons convention review conference in Geneva in September.

At the United Nation's General Assembly's first committee, we have continued to work towards a better understanding of our policies and at this year's session the United Kingdom was the principal sponsor of resolutions on the bilateral arms negotiations, objective information about military budgets and United Nations disarmament studies, all of which were carried. In addition we co-sponsored several other constructive resolutions on disarmament matters.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Soviet Union to the effect that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics extend its moratorium on nuclear tests beyond 31 December; and if he will initiate discussions with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the outstanding problems of verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Eggar: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier today. The United Kingdom, together with other western countries, proposed in 1984 a mandate for an ad hoc committee at the Geneva conference on disarmament which would have allowed discussion of outstanding problems, including verification. It is a matter of regret that the Soviet Union has not agreed to this western mandate.

Indonesia

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the official delegations or Government-sponsored individuals or parties from Indonesia who have visited the United Kingdom since January 1985, stating in each case the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Eggar: The principal visits have been as follows:

April 1985

Admiral Romly, Chief of Naval Staff, and party; to attend commisioning of an ex-RN frigate sold to Indonesia.

Professor Sukardji, Director-General of Higher Education; to visit academic institutions.

Mr. Umar Ali, Secretary-General, Department of Trade; to discuss trade co-operation with United Kingdom firms and officials.

May 1985

General Supardi, Secretary-General, Department of Defence; for discussions on defence equipment matters.

June 1985

Mr. Abdul Kadir, Secretary-General, Ministry of Information; to visit BBC, COI, British Council.

July 1985

General Surono, Minister for Political and Security Affairs, and Professor Habibie, Minister of Research and Technology; for talks on industrial co-operation and signature of science and technology agreement.

Air Chief Marshal Sukardi, Chief of Air Staff; to visit United Kingdom defence manufacturers.

August 1985

General Awaloedin, Chairman of Indonesian Government Social Insurance Agency; to study United Kingdom social services and training facilities.

Miss Simandjuntak, Chief Librarian, Indonesian Parliament; to study parliamentary and other library services.

October 1985

Rear Admiral Kasenda; to attend the commissioning of an ex-RN frigate.

January 1986

Mr. Rahardi Ramelan, Deputy Chairman, Technology Assessment Agency; to see United Kingdom advances in engineering and electronics.

May 1986

Professor Zen, Deputy Chairman, Technology Assessment Agency; to discuss seabed resources mapping project with United Kingdom firms and officials.

Mr. Anton Lesiangi MP, Head of Parliamentary Committee for Mining and Energy; to visit United Kingdom companies in mining sector.

June 1986

Professor Fuad Hassan, Minister for Education and Culture; to study English language training and library services.

Mr. Prijono, President for State Mining Corporation; to visit United Kingdom coal mining industry.

A party of senior officers visited the British Army equipment exhibition.

July 1986

Rear Admiral Basoeki, Deputy Chief of Naval Staff (Logistics); for talks relating to Indonesia's purchase of ex-Royal Navy frigates.

August 1986

Professor Winarno, Ministry of Agriculture; to discuss food processing and food standards.

September 1986

Mr. Ramto, Deputy Governor of Jakarta; to see London docklands and light railway. Air Vice Marshall Hartono, Director of Air Defence Headquarters; visit to RAF Lossiemouth.

Mr. Angus Ardie, Deputy Chairman, Indonesian Chamber of Commerce; led a party of business men and officials to attend annual meeting of United Kingdom-Indonesian joint working party.

A party of senior officers visited the Farnborough air show.

October 1986

Lt. General Sanoesi, Head of Indonesian police; to visit New Scotland Yard and view police training facilities.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the nature of the on-the-spot training being offered to El Salvadorean armed forces under the technical co-operation programme agreed with President Duarte during his visit to Britain in 1984.

Mr. Eggar: No training has been offered to the Salvadorean armed forces under the technical co-operation programme, which consists wholly of civilian assistance.

Mr. Mordechai Vanunu

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further approach to the Israelis in order to secure an explanation as to how Mordechai Vanunu left the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: We have at present no plans to do so.

Falkland Islands (Fisheries)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held between Her Majesty's Government and representatives of the Argentine Government, directly or through intermediaries, concerning policing of the part of the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone which touches or overlaps with the fishing zone claimed by Argentina and affected by its agreement with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Eggar: No specific discussions have been held; but as my right hon. and learned Friend said in his statement to the House on 29 October, he has put a suggestion to the Argentine Foreign Minister to "review how Britain and Argentina can co-operate to support conservation on a regional basis."

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now in a position to state the names, ownership, age and gross registered tonnage of the two fishing vessels which are to be employed in the policing of the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government have chartered two vessels from J. Marr and Son of Hull, the GA Reay and the Seisella. The former, GRT 928 tons, was built in 1968 and the latter, GRT 1,144 tons, in 1969.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the anticipated total annual cost of chartering the two fishing vessels which are to police the Falkland Islands fisheries zone; and if he will break down this overall cost into its component elements;

(2) if he is in a position to state the total complement, including relief crews, of the two fishing vessels which are to be employed in the policing of the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone; and by whom they will be employed;

(3) what will be the complement of each of the two fishing vessels which are to police the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone; how long each ship will be expected to remain on station; if relief crews will be recruited from the United Kingdom or the Falkland Islands community; and if United Kingdom based leave entitlement is a condition of employment for the United Kingdom crew members.

Mr. Eggar: The contracts for these vessels have just been signed. The details are not yet available. Subject to the considerations of commercial confidence I shall write to the hon. Member once these are known.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what training has been undertaken by those persons employed on the two fishing vessels chartered to police the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone; and whether any trades unions were involved in the negotiations concerning terms and conditions of employment.

Mr. Eggar: Advisors from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, fisheries inspectorate have been in regular contact with the owners and crew of the two protection vessels chartered by the Falkland Islands Government to ensure that their levels of training are adequate for the task. Terms and conditions are a matter for agreement between owners and crews or their representatives.

Mr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is now in a position to state the anticipated annual cost of the chartering of the civilian aircraft which is to be employed in the policing of the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone; and if he will break down the cost into its component parts.

Mr. Eggar: The contract for the civilian aircraft is being negotiated and the details are not yet available.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is able to state when the two fishing vessels, which are to police the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone, will arrive on station.

Mr. Eggar: The two fisheries protection vessels will be in place shortly before the Falkland Islands conservation zone (FICZ) comes into effect on 1 February 1987.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is Her Majesty's Government's intention to replace, at some future date, the two fishing vessels chartered to police the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone by newly constructed fisheries protection vessels of the kind employed on such work in United Kingdom waters.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the Falkland Islands Government who are responsible for administering the Falkland Islands conservation zone (FICZ). No decision has yet been taken about the possible replacement of the two chartered fisheries protection vessels.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report the number and countries of origin of the applications for licences to fish in the Falkland Islands fishery conservation zone, the criteria by which such licences are awarded to successful applicants and the price of these licences.

Mr. Eggar: Applications for licences for the Falkland Islands conservation zone (FICZ) have been received from most of the fleets which in the past have fished in Falklands waters and are still being processed. The number of vessels to be licensed will take account of conservation requirements. The cost of the licences will vary according to the size of the vessel and method of fishing, period and area to be fished, and target species: I shall write to the hon. Member with the details of licence fees.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what applications were received for licences to fish in the Falkland Islands fishing zone at the closing date, relating to applicant, country of application and nature of application; and how this compares in the case of each country to the position over the past year.

Mr. Eggar: Applications are now being processed. Applications have been received from most of the fleet active in the fishery last year, but also from others. The overall picture is not yet clear.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria will be used in deciding whether to award licences to applicants wishing to fish in the Falkland Island fisheries zone; what quota restrictions will be applied; and what restrictions on fishing gear will be imposed to conserve fish stocks.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government are considering all licence applications and will allocate licences in accordance with the limits imposed by conservation requirements. The licensing arrangements will take account of the more intensive fishing methods employed by the squid jigging vessels.

Spain and Spanish Territories (British Citizens)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) in how many cases of British citizens being killed or injured whilst travelling or visiting Spain, the Canary Islands, Tenerife or other Spanish territories over the last seven years, inquiries are still being conducted by the Spanish authorities; and if he will give the date of each death or injury suffered;

(2) what information he has as to how many British tourists have died or suffered permanent physical injury as a result of carbon monoxide poisoning or similar side effects from gas poisoning whilst travelling in Spain, the Canary Islands, Tenerife and Spanish territories over the past seven years;

(3) what information he has as to how many British tourists have been positively identified to have suffered from carbon monoxide poisoning whilst travelling in Spain, the Canary Islands, Tenerife and Spanish territories in each of the last seven years;

(4) how many British tourists died whilst travelling or holidaying in Spain, the Canary Islands, Tenerife and Spanish territories in each of the past seven years.

Mr. Eggar: The figures and information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The available information, as reported by consular posts, is:

1985

Deaths of British tourists in the relevant areas: 102, of which two were from carbon monoxide poisoning. One British tourist suffered severe physical injury as a result of carbon monoxide poisoning.

1986

(To date) Deaths of British tourists in relevant areas: 147, of which one was due to carbon monoxide poisoning.

Canary Islands

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of British tourists visiting the Canary Islands in each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: Based on information provided by the Spanish authorities, the estimated number of British tourists to the Canary Islands for the past four years is:

	Number
1983	517,000
1984	689,500
1985	744,000
[1]1986	763,000

[1] To September.

Earlier figures are not available.

South Korea

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are living in South Korea at the latest date.

Mr. Eggar: There are estimated to be about 750 British citizens living in South Korea.

Jehovah's Witness Sect, Greece

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Greek Foreign Minister the persecution of the Jehovah's Witness sect of the Christian Church in Greece and the restrictions on their freedom of worship in parts of Greece and Crete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not heard of systematic persecution of Jehovah's Witnesses in Greece, although are aware of a number of cases of imprisonment for refusal to perform military service, to which Greek law provides no civilian alternative.

Although the right of conscientious objection is not, as such, covered by the European convention on human rights, there is a draft recommendation currently under consideration in the Council of Europe. This draft, which recommends that member states recognise conscientious objection to military service, was adopted at the May meeting of the Council of Europe's steering committee for human rights on which the United Kingdom and Greece were represented. It will be considered by Ministers Deputies of the Council of Europe early next year.

TRANSPORT

Estuarial Crossing (Tolls)

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give guidance to the boards responsible for the administration of tolls on estuarial crossings on the adoption of common standards of accounting to facilitate more accurate comparisons of their efficiency and their costs of toll collection.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tolled estuarial crossings are managed by different authorities under legislation specific to each undertaking. Ministers have no general power to direct the form of their accounts. Details of toll collection costs are already available. These costs are not necessarily an indicator of efficiency. Much depends on the volume and composition of the traffic at each crossing and on the levels of toll charged. In each case it is for the tolling authority to strike the right balance between the needs of traffic and the cost of collection.

M4 (Works)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the remedial safety works undertaken on the M4 in Berkshire and Wiltshire since 23 June.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In Berkshire, central reserve safety barriers between junctions 8/9 and 11 have been raised and adjusted following earlier resurfacing. In Wiltshire, barriers between junctions 16 and 17 have been raised as part of major maintenance.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the Settle-Carlisle line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am not in a position to do so. I have not yet seen either the report of the TUCCs—although I understand this will be published on 17 December—or BR's financial case.

London Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to publish the consultants' reports on the four London road assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) earlier today.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the results of the review of the Woolwich ferry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: After I have had an opportunity to consider the consultant's findings and recommendations from the London Borough of Greenwich which I expect to receive by the turn of the year.

Motorway Crash Barriers

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatalities have been caused in motorway accidents due to sections of crash barriers parting on impact with the result that displaced sections of barrier have pierced the impacting vehicle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the five cases where the angle beam parted on impact, there were two instances where a section of the barrier pierced the impacting vehicle.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has about the incidence of motorway crash barriers parting on impact as a result of faulty welds at sectional joints.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are aware of five fatal accidents on the motorway network where welds have parted on impact. Two were cases of single welds and three were in respect of double welds.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many motorway crash barriers currently exist which are joined together by the single weld galvanised over technique introduced in 1976.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Few if any single weld angle pieces have been installed since 1976 and from 1985 only double welds have been specified. The 2,000 or so single welds out of a total of 14,000 on motorways date almost entirely from installations originally provided before 1976.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the welding specification of motorway barrier connections has been changed since April 1985.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Revised details for tensioned corrugated beam safety fences were issued in June 1985. These specified that angle beams should have double sided butt welds to the requirements of BS 5135:1985 "Process of Arc Welding of Carbon and Carbon Manganese Steels".

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence his Department has collected about deteriorations in the single weld, galvanised joints on sections of motorway crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no evidence of such deterioration and it is very unlikely that a galvanised weld in this position would deteriorate significantly over a period of 15-20 years.

Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Transport if there has been any change in the welding specification of motorway crash barrier joints since 1976.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. In March 1976 the welding specification for tensioned corrugated beam safety fencing was altered to require either a strengthened single sided butt weld or a double-sided butt weld. Since June 1985 only the double-sided butt weld has been permitted.

European High-Speed Train Network

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the financing, development and operation of the proposed new European high-speed train network; what is its estimated cost; if magnetic levitation technology will be incorporated into the high speed trains; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Governments of France, Belgium, Germany and the Netherlands have been examining a possible European railway network serving Paris, Brussels, Cologne and Amsterdam, with a possible spur to Calais to allow a link with the United Kingdom system via the Channel tunnel. French Government estimates put the total cost of such a network on the Continent within the range FFr19-21 billion for trains using steel wheels on rail, and at about FFr35 billion for trains based on magnetic levitation. These figures exclude the costs of the spur to the tunnel, for which no estimate has been made with magnetic levitation technology.

The proposals will be discussed at a ministerial meeting at The Hague on 22 December involving the four countries mentioned, together with the United Kingdom and Luxembourg. Possible means of financing and operating such a system are among the matters to be covered at that meeting.

Driving Tests, Cleethorpes

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present waiting time for driving tests at the Cleethorpes test centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The present waiting time for a driving test at Cleethorpes is 23 weeks. This is too long. The delay was caused mainly by staff sickness. We are detaching examiners temporarily from other centres. We aim to post another permanent examiner to the area.

Public Transport (Christmas Holidays)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give guidance to passenger transport authorities on the provision of public transport after 8 pm on Christmas eve and new year's day, in the light of his campaign against drinking and driving.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for the judgment of individual authorities in the light of local circumstances. It is certainly open to them to decide that the provision of services during the Christmas and new year period should be given priority.

MV Kowloon Bridge

Mr. Stott asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make public the inspector's report on the damage sustained to the MV Kowloon Bridge.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made earlier today.

A180 (Emergency Telephones)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is now in a position to make an announcement regarding the possibility of installing emergency telephones on the A180 between Barnetby top and Grimsby.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not yet; I am considering the question in the context of a wider look at the case for making limited provision of emergency telephones at selected locations on trunk roads.

London-Glasgow Trains (Re-routing)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his discussions with British Rail on re-routing London-Glasgow trains via Edinburgh-Fauldhouse-Shotts or Linlithgow-Polmat-Falkirk High.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail has commenced some studies which are at an early stage and I have received no proposals.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the future of the Woolwich ferry in the event of the east London river crossing being constructed.

Mr. John Moore: If the east London river crossing were constructed the operation of the Woolwich ferry would be reviewed in the light of the volume of traffic then using it.

Blackwall Tunnels

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any requests from the London Docklands Development Corporation for improvements to the Blackwall tunnels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Transport if pursuant to his answer of 25 July to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, column 518, he will identify those ports besides Barrow through which pass consignments of spent nuclear fuel from overseas.

Mr. David Mitchell: Spent nuclear fuel is transported from Switzerland via Dunkerque/Dover and from the Netherlands via Rotterdam/Immingham. Exceptionally one flask entered the United Kingdom via Ipswich during 1986, because of industrial action at Immingham.

Humberside Airport

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to require Humberside county council to privatise Humberside airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend does not have the powers to require the privatisation of Humberside airport. Our present intention is to direct Humberside county council in the next financial year to form a Companies Act company and transfer the airport business to it, thereby facilitating the partial or full-scale privatisation of the airport.

Road User Behaviour

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions were reached by the recent gathering of behavioural scientists in Oxford for determining priorities for research into road user behaviour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: After the meeting the chaiman, Dr. D. E. Broadbent, FRS, reported his conclusion that recent advances in psychological knowledge, which had been applied to fields other than road safety would enable research to hold out the prospect of new policies and actions which could reduce road accidents by the end of the 1990s. There was some supportive detail.

Accordingly, a behavioural studies unit has been set up within the transport and road research laboratory. It is drawing up plans for a research programme internally, at United Kingdom universities and elsewhere of the kind envisaged at the meeting in question.

Parkway, Cleveland (Central Reserve Barriers)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider providing central reserve barriers on the Parkway in Cleveland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A174 Parkway is a principal road for which Cleveland county council as the local highway authority has the statutory responsibility.

It is for the council to consider whether or not safety fences should be provided on the central reservation.

London Corridor Assessment Studies

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the consultants' report on the London corridor assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: These reports are being published today. They analyse the problems in the four areas concerned on the basis of extensive traffic surveys and public consultation. They provide for the first time a full and factual picture as a basis for looking at long-term measures to improve conditions.

Copies of the full reports and their technical appendices are being sent to boroughs and to libraries in the study areas. They are also available for purchase from the Department. Since these are bulky documents, we are also making available free leaflets setting out the main findings from each of the reports.

The work disussed in these reports represents the first stage in addressing long-term issues in these major traffic corridors. We shall be consulting boroughs about the terms of reference for the next stage with a view to starting that phase of work in the early summer. We aim to find the solutions that meet Londoners' needs up to the end of the century and beyond whilst making sense in terms of requirements today. I shall be asking the boroughs concerned to co-operate with us in this work.

Copies of the reports are being placed in the Library.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the use of quieter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Non noise-certificated aircraft on the United Kingdom register have been banned in the United Kingdom since the beginning of this year. The ban will apply to foreign registered aircraft from 1 January 1988. We are pursuing, in international negotiations, the question of phasing out United Kingdom and foreign chapter 2 aeroplanes in the longer term. Under restrictions announced in 1981 routine night operations by noisier aircraft will be banned at Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted from 1 April next year.

ENVIRONMENT

Rag, Flock and Other Filling Materials Act 1951

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to introduce amendments to the Rag, Flock and Other Filling Materials Act 1951.

Mr. Chope: We have no plans at present to introduce amendments to this Act. The safety of imported stuffed articles will in future be controlled by the proposed general safety requirement provisions of the Consumer Protection Bill which is currently before Parliament.

Homes (Repossessions)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people who have had their homes repossessed by building societies and other providers of mortgages during the year to date; and what was the number of such cases in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: For the latest available figures, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Fulham on 25 November at column 232.

Widdicombe Report

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the recommendations of the Widdicombe report on the conduct of local government that have been implemented by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: As my right hon. Friend made clear when the Widdicombe report was published on 19 June, the Government intend to weigh the public response to the report before drawing their own conclusions. Consultation on the report is still continuing; interested parties have until the end of the year to submit their views.

Residential Development (Planning Conditions)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to prevent local planning authorities, having granted outline consent for residential development, imposing onerous conditions in association with their approval of reserved matters.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidance was given by his Department before July to Eurotunnel as to the merits on environmental grounds of exploration of sites other than Shakespeare cliff for disposal of spoil from the Channel tunnel;

(2) whether (a) Land Use Consultants or (b) any other independent consultants was invited by his Department to make an appraisal of the environmental consultants' report recommending Shakespeare cliff as the site for disposal of spoil from the Channel tunnel.

(3) whether Land Use Consultants were invited by his Department to undertake further studies on the feasibility of spoil disposal at Lappel bank consequent on their report in July indicating that Lappel bank was a preferable spoil disposal site to Shakespeare cliff.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following indentification in the White Paper "The Channel Fixed Link" in February 1986 of spoil disposal as an important environmental issue, the Government welcomed, through the medium of the Kent joint consultative committee, the proposal that a surplus tunnel spoil working group should conduct a thorough examination of potential disposal sites. The working group, which included Eurotunnel, local authority and DOE representatives, short listed a number of alternatives to Shakespeare cliff but in June indicated that it could not complete its work in time for the Commons Select Committee hearing.

In order to assist the Select Committee considering the Channel Tunnel Bill, the Department of the Environment commissioned Land Use Consultants (LUC) to carry out a rapid review of Eurotunnel's proposals for disposal at Shakespeare cliff and of seven alternative sites identified by the working group. In its report, which the Government made available to the Select Committee, LUC recommended that Lappel bank should be "adopted as the preferred alternative location to Shakespeare cliff" but stressed that, in view of the short timescale within which the study was conducted, there were many issues which would "require detailed consideration should the Government decide to consider this option further".

The LUC report was received in July and Eurotunnel was asked for a formal response. This response reaffirmed its preference for Shakespeare cliff: but it indicated its willingness to make every effort to modify its proposals to meet the Government's requirement that environmental damage should be minimised.

Having considered very carefully all the available evidence — including the LUC report, Eurotunnel's comprehensive response, and the views of other interested parties—the Government concluded that neither Lappel Bank nor any of the other potentially viable "remote" disposal sites offered a clearly preferred alternative to the proposals included in the Bill.

In reaching this conclusion, the Government were satisfied that the information available was sufficient to enable a judgment to be made. They also considered, and informed the Select Committee that they did not consider that further technical studies to evaluate the viability of alternative sites would provide conclusive information pointing to a clear-out decision. In the circumstances, the Government did not require LUC or any other consultants to appraise Eurotunnel's proposals or to undertake further studies of the feasibility of disposal at Lappel Bank.

The decision to endorse disposal of Shakespeare cliff was made on the ground that, taking the project as a whole and recognising the environmental consequences, it remained the solution with the fewest technical and operational problems.

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was paid to Land Use Consultants by his Department to carry out a survey on alternative spoil disposal sites to Shakespeare cliff as part of the Channel tunnel scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is not my Department's practice to reveal the level of fees paid for consultancy work, on the ground of commercial confidentiality.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Greater London council mortgages have been transferred to the London residuary body; and what information he has regarding the current number of such mortgages.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 43,618 residential mortgages were taken over by the London residuary body on abolition. At the end of October, 39,150 remained with the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations his Department has received from ex-Greater London council mortgagors in respect of the letter to them from the London residuary body dated 7 November.

Mr. John Patten: One former GLC mortgagor has telephoned the Department, and two have made representations through their Members of Parliament. All those making representations have been informed that the offer contained in the LRB's letter of 7 November is entirely voluntary; that any mortgagor who does not wish to accept need take no action; and that any transfer of the mortgage on the winding up of the London residuary body will be at no cost to the borrower.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he intends to make to protect former Greater London council mortgagors following the abolition of the London residuary body.

Mr. John Patten: The Local Government Act 1985 requires the residuary bodies to complete their work within five years of the abolition date. They are also required to submit, within four years of the abolition date, a scheme for their winding up, and for the disposal of any remaining property, rights and liabilities. My right hon. Friend will consider any scheme or proposal made by the LRB in due course, and will make suitable provision for remaining LRB mortgages to be transferred to another body.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will direct the London residuary body to compensate mortgagors for any additional expense arising from the transfer of their mortgages from the London residuary body to a building society; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The London residuary body, in conjunction with five building societies, wrote to 5,000 ex-GLC mortgagors on 7 November to offer them the opportunity to refinance their mortgages. The letter explained that anyone who accepts the offer may have to pay certain fees. But the offer is entirely voluntary, and any mortgagor who does not wish to incur expense need take no action. Any mortgages remaining with the London residuary body when it is wound up will be transferred to another body at no cost to the mortgagor.

Home Security (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to the answer of 4 December to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, he will publish details of funding made or to be made available in Leicester for home security measures in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It has not been possible to identify expenditure on home security measures in Leicester in 1985-86.

For 1986-87, the Department is making available £242,000 on an estate action project at St. Peter's, Leicester in 1986-87. Of this, over £61,000 will go on security measures related to home security.

In 1987-88, Leicester city council will be able to bid for a share of estate action's increased resources. The size of its eventual allocation, and the proportion of that allocation devoted to security related measures will depend on the specific projects which it puts forward.

I do not know how much of its own resources Leicester has chosen to devote to home security measures.

Building Land

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what processes his Department adopts to monitor the amount of residential building land currently available and capable of immediate development.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department obtains information from local planning authorities about the amount of residential land with outstanding planning permission, indicating whether the permission is outline only or full permission. Most of the latter is likely to be available for immediate development.

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give, on a county to county basis, the amount of underdeveloped building land currently benefiting from outline planning consent expressed in acres or hectares.

Mr. Waldegrave: Returns from local authorities indicate that the area of land with planning permission for residential development in March 1986 was as set out in the following table:

Area of land (in hectares) with planning permission for private sector residential development at March 1986

County	Basis of return	Outline permission	Full permission
Avon	L	126	356
Bedfordshire	L	114	41
Berkshire	M	412	566
Buckinghamshire	M	206	190
Cambridgeshire	L	193	213
Cheshire	A	383	424
Cleveland	M	386	164
Cornwall	M	290	194
Cumbria	M	95	155
Derbyshire	M	399	454
Devon	M	282	495
Dorset	M	197	211
Durham	M	153	179
East Sussex (E)	L	212	221
Essex	M	445	600
Gloucestershire	L	69	239
Hampshire	A	562	1,072
Hereford and Worcestershire	M	177	208
Hertfordshire	A	158	134
Humberside	M	316	291
Isle of Wight	L	13	28
Kent (E)	A	454	2,110
Lancashire	M	207	327
Leicestershire	M	198	159
Lincolnshire	M	242	424
Norfolk	M	233	510
North Yorkshire	L	171	234
Northamptonshire	M	336	279
Northumberland (E)	A	134	156
Nottinghamshire	M	192	303
Oxfordshire	A	202	343
Shropshire (E)	A	188	220
Somerset	A	214	271
Staffordshire	M	496	291
Suffolk	M	362	245
Surrey (E)	A	323	443
Warwickshire	A	106	190
West Sussex	A	147	141
Wiltshire	L	236	132
Greater Manchester	M	369	422
Merseyside (E)	M	219	251
South Yorkshire	M	163	343
Tyne and Wear	A	77	99
West Midlands	M	277	187
West Yorkshire	M	230	452
London (E)	L	84	111

These figures are based on returns from districts. They include estimates for non response where necessary. Where a whole county has not responded, this is shown by a letter (E).

Returns are not all made on the same basis. In some counties all districts make returns for all sites (A), in others returns relate to sites more than 10 dwellings (L). M denotes where there is a mixture of returns.

Council House Sales

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the number of applications for the purchase of council houses in Batley and Spen and as to the number of council houses sold for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected for individual constituencies.

Circular 22/80

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department takes to consult the construction and development industry and relevant professional advisers on the operation of circular 22/80;

(2) whether he is satisfied with the operation of circular 22/80.

Mr. Waldegrave: Circular 22/80 contained two main messages: the need to secure a general speeding up of planning decisions, and the importance of ensuring that development is only prevented or restricted when this serves a clear planning purpose and the economic effects have been taken into account.

From time to time we receive representations about the application of policies outlined in circular 22/80, including representations from developers and from the construction industry. In the light of these, we believe that the main messages of the circular remain valid. In particular, there is still a need for greater efficiency in the handling of planning applications by local planning authorities. Certain aspects of the policies set out in the circular have since been reiterated — for example in circular 14/85 (development and employment) and in circular 31/85 (aesthetic control).

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage change in the housing investment programme allocation for England between the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy in future to announce the final rate support grant settlement for England earlier in the financial year than December; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure hat there will be three full months between his announcement of the final rate support grant settlement for England for 1987-88, and the date by which councils have to set a rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Community Charge

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the likely annual cost for England of administering the community charge that is proposed in the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government."

Mr. Chope: We will publish an estimate of the cost of the new system when decisions have been taken about the detailed arrangements in England.

Urban Development Corporation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to the proposal from black country chambers of commerce and industry that the Urban Development Corporation should be two tiered and with an advisory council; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mr. John Patten: I shall be replying to the chambers shortly.

Local Authorities (Ministerial Meeting)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his meeting with representatives of local authorities and chambers of commerce and industry held on 8 December.

Mr. Ridley: The meeting which was to discuss the proposal for an urban development corporation in the black country was helpful and positive. My hon. Friend, the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction, will be holding a further meeting with local authority representatives on 16 December.

Rating System

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to reform the rating system in England during the current Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave on 27 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) at column 317.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Northampton General Hospital

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of capital expenditure at Northampton general hospital between 1974 and 1979 and 1979 and 1985.

Mrs. Currie: The Northampton general hospital is the responsibility of Northampton district health authority, which advises me that the appropriate figures are £16,188,000 and £18,670,000 at 1986-87 price levels. These figures exclude expenditure on major medical equipment or computer equipment which cannot readily be identified separately. My hon. Friend might therefore like to contact the chairman of Northampton health authority on these particular points.

Under-fives Initiative

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of the under-fives initiative which is due to end in March 1987.

Mr. Newton: I have today given approval to two schemes costing a total of £550,000 in 1987-88 to help families with children under five.

The first scheme will provide tapering grants up to a planned total of £400,000 in 1987-88 to help the projects which have been set up under the under-fives initiative to secure alternative funding after the ending of the initiative. Of the 110 projects being funded under the initiative, nearly half are already financially secure for next year. The future of the remainder is still under discussion and the purpose of the tapering grants is to give local authorities or other local bodies some extra time to take on financial responsibility for particular projects. It is hoped that by making these arrangements all the projects started with initiative money will be secure after central Government money comes to an end.

The second scheme will enable selected national voluntary bodies to give small grants to local groups. It is planned that £150,000 should be available for this scheme in 1987-88 and it is hoped to be able to extend it for a further two years. The small grants scheme operated by three national voluntary bodies with initiative money was innovative and enabled them to give their local groups one-off grants which are often crucial to the continued existence of the particular service. We want to build on the lessons learned from this scheme which is good value for money and showed how the Government and the voluntary sector can work as partners in meeting social needs. Details are being worked out in consultation with the national voluntary bodies concerned.

Maternity Grant

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the precise sum to be paid to mothers eligible for the means-tested maternity grant to be introduced on 6 April 1987; and if he will give details of the information published by his Department which informs women about this new benefit and how to claim.

Mr. Major: I expect to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the net annual cost of increasing the maternity grant to £165.

Mr. Major: The gross annual cost of increasing maternity grant to £165 would be about £95 million. There would be a consequent saving on supplementary benefit expenditure for single payments for maternity needs. In 1984, the latest year for which records are available, these payments amounted to nearly £13 million.

Benefits

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new claims for supplementary benefit were received in (a) 1985 and (b) 1986 by his Department's Camberwell office between 18 May and 18 August and between 18 August and 18 November.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The table shows that the numbers of new and repeat claims for supplementary benefit received by Camberwell office in the periods 8 May to 27 August and 28 August to 19 November in 1985 and 7 May to 26 August and 27 August to 18 November 1986 were:

	1985	1986
May – August	3,432	3,016
August – November	2,622	2,788

Source: 100 per cent. count of claims received.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate, for supplementary benefits claimants in receipt of needs allowance, the percentage increase in meals consumed outside the home from 1982 to 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; if he will provide separately figures for Scotland, and England and Wales; whether there are any regional variations in the cost of meals taken outside the home; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I assume the hon. Member is concerned with the appropriate retail prices index for meals bought and consumed outside of the home, for which information is given in the table. Information for 1985-86 is not yet available; and separate figures for Scotland, England and Wales are not available as official price indices are not compiled on a regional basis.

Retail prices index for meals bought and consumed outside the home

	Annual average percentage increase
1982-83	6·5
1983-84	7·4
1984-85	5·8

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for the financial year 1986-87, the entitlement to standard housing benefit (excluding rate rebate or allowance), for a one-child family with one working partner and paying £16 per week rent, for the following income bands; £3,000 per year, £4,000 per year, £5,000 per year, £6,000 per year and £7,000 or more.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is set out in the table:

Weekly Rent Rebate of Allowance payable to a one-child family with one working partner

Annual Income £	Weekly Rent Rebates or Allowance £
3,000	16·00
4,000	16·00
5,000	11·25
6,000	5·94
7,000	Nil

Notes:
(1) Income is assumed to consist of gross earnings including child benefit (but not one-parent benefit).
(2) Family Income Supplement is assumed not to be in payment.
(3) July 1986 benefit levels and rules have been used throughout.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how, pursuant to the reply of 24 November, Official Report, columns 147-8, the figures given for real terms percentage increases in expenditure relating to (a) real increases in benefit levels and eligibility and (b) increases necessitated by increased numbers of claimants are made up for each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Major: The table shows the percentage of the real increase in benefit expenditure attributable to the reasons given.

Social security programme 1981-82 to 1986-87

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Percentage of increase in benefit expenditure over previous year due to
(a) Real increase in average amount of benefit paid to elderly people	25	30	20	—	35	35
sick and disabled people	—	—	15	—	—	10
unemployed people	5	15	—	10	20	—
families	10	25	30	30	15	10
(b) Increased numbers of
elderly people	10	10	20	20	10	20
sick and disabled people	—	5	−10	30	20	20
unemployed people	40	15	30	15	—	10
(c) Others	10	—	−5	—	—	−5

Note: Due to rounding figures may not sum to totals in the previous answer.

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (a) the gross and (b) the annual net cost of each extra £1 on (i) unemployment benefit, (ii) sickness benefit, (iii) invalidity pension, (iv) severe disablement allowance and (v) maternity allowance.

Mr. Major: The table gives the estimated costs in 1987-88 of increasing the basic rate of the stated benefits for a single person by £1 per week. The costs are given gross, and net of offsetting savings on supplementary benefit and housing benefit, and assume that the rates for a couple would go up pro rata to existing rates.

Great Britain

£ million

	Gross	Net
(i) Unemployment benefit	50	30
(ii) Sickness benefit	5	3
(iii) Invalidity benefit	60	50
(iv) Severe disablement allowance	10	5
(v) Maternity allowance	2	2

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the annual cost of each extra £1 on (a) the basic rate and (b) the long term rate of supplementary benefit for single householders;

(2) if he will estimate the annual cost of each extra £1 on the children's rates of supplementary benefit for children aged under 11 years and between 11 and 15 years.

Mr. Major: The estimated cost of the increases to current supplementary benefit recipients would be as follows:

	£ million
(a) Ordinary rate for single householders:	30
(b) Long-term rate for single householders:	90
(c) Children aged under 11:	70
(d) Children aged 11 to 15:	30

Source: Annual statistical inquiry 1984.

These estimates do not take account of the extra cost arising from the additional claims to benefit that would result from the higher rates of benefit.

Board and Lodging Allowance

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Gateshead, living as board and lodgers, have had their supplementary benefits reduced under the board and lodging supplementary regulations since the passage of these regulations.

Mr. Major: The Department's local offices do not keep separate statistics on the number of people living in board and lodging, nor do they identify those who have had their supplementary benefit reduced under the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements and Resources) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1985.

This information is not therefore readily available and could be obtained only by a special exercise which would be disproportionately costly.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of constituencies to which each county of England was entitled on the basis of the electoral quotas given in his answer of 26 November, Official Report, column 286-7, in (a) 1976 and (b) 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table. The number of constituencies to which a county is theoretically entitled has been obtained by dividing the electorate of the county by the electoral quota.

County	Number of constituencies: theoretical entitlement
	1976	1986
Greater London	79·97	74·45
Greater Manchester	29·69	28·48
Merseyside	17·68	16·41
South Yorkshire	14·71	14·60
Tyne and Wear	13·48	12·98
West Midlands	30·30	29·10
West Yorkshire	22·92	22·61
Avon	10·29	10·54
Bedfordshire	5·08	5·52
Berkshire	7·01	7·83
Buckinghamshire	5·47	6·54
Cambridgeshire	5·93	6·72
Cheshire	9·86	10·49
Cleveland	6·13	6·13
Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly	4·67	5·04
Cumbria	5·42	5·49
Derbyshire	10·08	10·34
Devon	10·50	10·99
Dorset	6·68	7·32
Durham	6·88	6·78
East Sussex	7·82	7·94
Essex	15·78	16·89
Gloucestershire	5·43	5·76
Hampshire	15·38	16·77
Hereford and Worcester	6·55	7·27
Hertfordshire	10·28	10·80
Humberside	9·42	9·54
Isle of Wight	1·35	1·43
Kent	16·06	16·58
Lancashire	15·47	15·37
Leicestershire	9·22	9·57
Lincolnshire	5·82	6·28
Norfolk	7·57	8·11
Northamptonshire	5·50	6·04
Northumberland	3·30	3·38
North Yorkshire	7·32	7·74
Nottinghamshire	10·89	11·18
Oxfordshire	5·50	5·95
Shropshire	3·89	4·29
Somerset	4·56	5·01
Staffordshire	10·95	11·38
Suffolk	6·21	6·68
Surrey	11·21	11·50
Warwickshire	5·09	5·35
West Sussex	7·25	7·92
Wiltshire	5·43	5·94

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff vacancies there are in the public health laboratory service: how long they have been vacant; and when he expects them to be filled.

Mrs. Currie: At 1 October, the latest date for which information is available, there were 115 vacancies in the public health laboratory service out of a total of 2,287 posts (5 per cent.). The majority of these had been vacant for less than three months. Current vacancies will be filled as soon as suitable candidates become available.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella (Vaccine)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to introduce a triple vaccine for measles, mumps and rubella, for children aged 15 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This proposal is under consideration.

Diabetics

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many sufferers from diabetes there are currently estimated to be in England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: It is estimated that the prevalence of diabetes is between 1 and 2 per cent. of the population, between half a million and one million people in England and Wales.

Medical and Nursing Schools (Intakes)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to ensure that the intake of medical and nursing schools is fair to ethnic minorities.

Mrs. Currie: The intake of medical schools is the concern of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science. I understand, however, that universities, of which medical schools form a constituent part, are autonomous institutions under the terms of their charters, and as such are responsible for their own admission arrangements.

The selection of candidates for nursing schools is for individual health authorities, which are advised to comply with the code of practice prepared by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Colposcopy Facilities

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list those district health authorities which have full colposcopy facilities of all women needing treatment;

(2) which district health authorities do not have a colposcope.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally.

Physical Disability (RCP Report)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has sent to the Royal College of Physicians' report to him on physical disability in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend did not commission the report and has not been invited formally to respond to it. We nevertheless welcome the report, which will make an important contribution to the discussion of how services for disabled people can be better co-ordinated and integrated. Officials of the Department have had informal discussions with the report's authors, and we are now considering how best to develop the ideas which it has put forward.

Contracts (Arthur Andersen Tender)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 9 December, whether Arthur Andersen and Co. submitted the lowest tender for each of the contracts referred to.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Sick Pay

Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (a) the gross and (b) the net cost of paying statutory sick pay at 100 per cent. of earnings for (i) six weeks and (ii) three months.

Mr. Major: The gross costs requested are estimated as (i) £2·5 billion and (ii) £2·75 billion. On each of these amounts employees would pay approximately £1 billion in income tax and national insurance contributions (NICs). However, an unknown proportion of this revenue would replace tax and NIC already payable on occupational sick pay schemes. It is therefore not possible to calculate the extra revenue with sufficient reliability to produce worthwhile estimates of net cost. The estimated cost of SSP in 1986-87 is £688 million.

Nursing Establishment

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total nursing establishment for the National Health Service; and by how many the establishment is under strength at the present time.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that detailed information of this nature is not available centrally. However, I am aware of the results of a survey of a sample of health authorities in England conducted for the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors which showed that at 31 March 1985 about 2·5 per cent. of whole-time equivalent funded posts for all nursing and midwifery staff had remained vacant for over three months.

Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has recently been taken by his Department to ensure the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 in regard to late abortions.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply from my hon. Friend the Minister for Health to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) on 10 December.

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last issued guidance to the South East Thames regional health authority concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act of 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what that guidance was.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Merchant), for Luton, North (Mr. Carlisle), for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) and for Milton Keynes (Mr. Benyon) on 10 December.

Wessex Health Authority (Computer Contracts)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those who advised Wessex health authority on any aspect of the prospective computer contracts before tenders were invited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Midwives

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the total number of qualified midwives who are currently resident in the United Kingdom; how many of these are employed in the National Health Service; how many are employed in the private sector; and how many are unemployed.

Mr. Newton: Information supplied by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting shows that 164,000 midwives were included on the register of midwives at April 1986. However, this is not a live register and will therefore include some midwives who are not resident in the United Kingdom, have retired, are not in the employment field or obtained the qualification for another purpose. 32,000 midwives notified their intention to practise during the year ending March 1987 but not necessarily in the National Health Service.

There were 18,260 whole-time equivalent (WTE) midwives employed in the NHS in England at September 1985. At December 1985 there were 134 full-time and 58 part-time registered midwives employed in nursing homes in England registered under the Nursing Homes Act.

The Department of Employment is the source of statistical information on the unemployed, but I understand that information by occupation has not been available since the introduction of the voluntary registration procedure in October 1982.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the average length of time spent in their current job by midwives within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the form requested but a study of a sample of hospital-based midwives in England by the Department's central management services in 1982 provided the following information:

Years since qualifying

per cent.

	Under 5	5-10	10-15	15-20	20 and more
Proportion of practising midwives by years since qualifying	46	18	13	9	14

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of established midwifery posts which are currently unoccupied in each region; and what percentage this represents of the total midwifery establishment in each of those regions.

Mr. Newton: I regret that detailed information of this nature is not available centrally. However, I am aware of the results of a survey of a sample of health authorities in England, conducted for the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors, which showed that at 31 March 1985 only about 3 per cent. of whole-time equivalent funded posts for midwives remained vacant for over three months, compared with the average of 2·5 per cent. for all nursing and midwifery staff.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of midwives employed by the National Health Service; and if in each case he will give the rate of employment of midwives per 1,000 women in their main childbearing years in each of those regions.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Midwifery staff per thousand women of main childbearing age

By region and England at September 1985	Whole-time equivalents Midwifery staff[1,2]	Midwifery staff[3] per 1,000 women age 16 to 44
Northern	1,500	2·4
Yorkshire	1,800	2·4
Trent	2,200	2·2
East Anglian	1,000	2·4
North West Thames	1,500	2·0
North East Thames	1,900	2·3
South East Thames	1,800	2·4
South West Thames	1,200	2·0
Wessex	1,300	2·3
Oxford	1,200	2·2
South Western	1,300	2·0
West Midlands	2,600	2·4
Mersey	1,200	2·4
North Western	2,400	2·9
England[4]	23,100	2·3

[1] Figures are whole-time equivalent independently rounded to nearest 10.
[2] Includes midwifery agency staff.
[3] Ratio calculated on unrounded figures.
[4] Includes London post-graduate (teaching) hospitals (SHAs).

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the average remuneration of a midwife in (a) the National Health Service and (b) the private sector.

Mr. Newton: With effect from 1 July 1986 the basic salary scales of staff midwives and midwifery sisters employed in the National Health Service are as follows:

	£
Staff midwife	6,475 to 7,750
Midwifery sister	8,070 to 10,800

In addition, midwives in these grades are eligible for premium payments mainly for night and weekend work and overtime. Average earnings of such staff are estimated to be about 15 per cent. greater than basic pay.

Comparable information for the private sector is not collected centrally.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of regarding all midwives as midwifery sisters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The precise cost of regarding all staff midwives as midwifery sisters would depend on detailed arrangements for such an upgrading but is probably of the order of £10 million to £20 million per annum at July 1986 pay and national insurance levels in Great Britain.

Medicines (Safety)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the guidelines for child-resistant tops on tablet containers to cover liquid medicine bottles.

Mrs. Currie: The guidelines that all solid dose oral medicines should be dispensed in child resistant containers (CRCs) unless the patient is elderly, handicapped or requests that they should not be were issued by the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain to its members. In addition, the Medicinces (Child Safety) Regulations require CRCs for solid dose aspirin or paracetamol sold over the counter. We have no plans to amend these guidelines or regulations.

I understand that there is no British standard for a CRC effective for liquid medicines because of the problem of residues from dried-up liquids impeding CRC mechanisms. We are keeping in close touch with the Pharmaceutical Society on this problem. All medicines should in all circumstances be kept away from children.

Blind People (Form BD8)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what bodies he has consulted in his Department's review of form BD8 for blind people;

(2) what progress has been made in the review of form BD8;

(3) when the review of form BD8 began; and when he expects to be able to announce conclusions;

(4) what representations and recommendations he has received from the Royal National Institute for the Blind about the review of the form BD8.

Mr. Major: In August 1983 we issued a consultation document to the relevant statutory, professional and voluntary bodies, including the Royal National Institute for the Blind, which have since pressed for a decision. Work is proceeding within the Department and we will announce a decision as soon as possible. The full list of organisations consulted is:

Association for the Education and Welfare of the Visually Handicapped
Association of County Councils
Association of Directors of Social Services
Association of District Medical Officers
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Association of Nurse Administrators
Association of Optical Practitioners

British Association of Social Workers
British College of Ophthalmic Opticians
British Medical Association, General Medical Services Committee
British Medical Association, Ophthalmic Group Committee
British Paediatrics Association

Community Medicine Consultative Committee

Disabled Living Foundation

Faculty of Ophthalmologists

Health Visitors Association
Hospital for Sick Children Special Health Authority

Joint Consultants Committee

London Boroughs Association

Medical Research Council
Moorfields Eye Hospital Special Health Authority

National Association of Orientation and Mobility Instructors
National Association of Technical Officers for the Blind
National Federation of the Blind
National League of the Blind and Disabled
North Regional Association for the Blind

Office of Population Censuses and Surveys

Partially Sighted Society

Regional Health Authorities
Residential Care Association
Royal College of General Practitioners
Royal College of Nursing
Royal National Institute for the Blind

Society of Nurse Advisers (Child Health)
Southern and Western Regional Association for the Blind

Visual Impairment Association

Mr. and Mrs. J. Hemborough

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date the case of Mr. and Mrs. J. Hemborough was referred to him by his Department's office; on what date a decision was made on this case; and if he will make a statement on the Government's position following the supplementary benefit commissioner's decision R(SB)21/85 concerning the restriction of interest payments to claimants who have remortgaged their homes.

Mr. Major: I shall write to the hon. Member.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the incidence of AIDS by ethnic grouping.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of cases of AIDS within the United Kingdom; and how many have so far died.

Mr. Newton: The figure at the end of November 1986 was 599, of whom 296 had died.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether anti-viral lubricant agents will be made freely available for use in conjunction with condoms as an added measure to prevent the spread of the AIDS virus;

(2) whether in the Government's advertising campaign to promote safer sex and the prevention of the spread of AIDS virus he will be advising people to use anti-viral lubricant agents in conjunction with condoms.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update the table on page 4 of the proposals for regulations to provide a new scheme of supplementary benefit for exceptionally severe weather payments (CM 18) in the light of the decision by his Department to re-locate a number of weather stations.

Mr. Major: Three changes have been made to the table. Tummel bridge and Cranwell stations have been deleted, and a new station (Kirkwall) has been added. The number of years since 1979 when the mean weekly temperature recorded at the Kirkwall station reached or was lower than minus 1·5 deg Celsius is nil.

Condom Imports

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to ensure that all imported makes of condoms available for sale in the United Kingdom are subject to a British standards test for safety.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Nurses

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recommendations have been made by the National Health Service Management Board concerning the recruitment and retention of nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In the light of the projected decline in the number of suitably qualified school-leavers over the next decade who might be expected to enter the nursing profession and the projected increase in demand for nursing staff, the NHS management board has asked health authorities to devise recruitment strategies. In particular, health authorities have been asked to give careful consideration to skill mix, increased male recruitment, attracting mature recruits, "Back to Nursing" campaigns, nurse banks and more opportunities for part-time working and job sharing.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many qualified nurses leave the profession each year; how this compares with the number of nurses qualifying each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Handicapped Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from Mrs. Peggy Jay, of EXODUS, about handicapped children in long-stay institutions; and what reply he has sent.

Mrs. Currie: My noble Friend wrote to Mrs. Jay on 27 November in reply to representations she made to my right hon. Friend about mentally handicapped children in hospital. Her letter and my reply to the right hon. Member on 4 November at columns 402-3 made it clear that my noble Friend will discuss the points raised by Mrs. Jay at a meeting with EXODUS and others concerned with the question of provision for mentally handicapped children to be arranged shortly.

Highland Region

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the total number of claimants applying to each of his Department's offices located within Highland region, for each year from 1979 to 1986, respectively.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the total number of staff employed in each of his Department's offices located within Highland region for each year from 1979 to 1986, respectively.

Mr. Lyell: The total number of staff in post on 1 December for each year 1979 to 1986 in each of the Department's social security local offices within Highland region is as follows:

	Integrated local office
	Fort William	Inverness	Wick
1979	32	123	51
1980	33	133	53
1981	34	132	57
1982	39	126	53
1983	35	126	53
1984	40	136	62
1985	38	129	65
1986	41·5	132	70

Since September 1984 staffing figures for Wick ILO have included staff employed in Kirkwall linked office which is not in Highland region. There were 10 staff in post in this office on 1 December 1984, and 11 staff on both 1 December 1985 and 1986.

Blind-Deaf Persons

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many blind-deaf children are born each year; how many schools in England and Wales can at present offer suitable education for blind-deaf children either on a day or boarding basis; and what support for families is available when a deaf-blind child is living at home;

(2) what special training is available for teachers and carers, repectively, working with deaf-blind children; and what proposals he has to make such provision freely available for all those who need it;

(3) what training is available at present for young people who are deaf-blind to enable them to develop their skills; and if he will list the training centres at present available with the number of places in each;

(4) if he will make sufficient resources available to ensure that no blind-deaf person will have to enter a mental handicap hospital if his family can no longer care for him at home.

Mr. Major: Statistics are not available in the form requested but there is a copy in the Library of the Department's publication "Registered Blind and Partially Sighted Persons at 31 March 1982 (England)." This contains information, by age band, on people registered blind with additional handicap, including hearing impairment, but the figures are regarded as under-estimates.

The Department has made it clear in guidance issued to health and local authorities, which are the main statutory providers of services for disabled people, that services for the most vulnerable groups in the community, including sensorily impaired people, should have priority. It is for individual health and local authorities to determine local priorities in the light of their statutory responsibilities and local circumstances. The Department does not routinely collect specific information about resources and facilities provided for particular client groups.

The role of voluntary organisations, such as SENSE, with their family resource centres and training centre for deaf-blind young adults, is of particular importance. Last year the Department gave grants totalling £30,000 towards voluntary activities in this field and further applications are under consideration.

Education and teacher training are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

Tinnitus

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many sufferers from tinnitus there are in England and Wales;

(2) what treatment for tinnitus sufferers is available on the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Tinnitus is a buzzing or ringing sound in the ears. It is estimated that some 15 per cent. of the adult population experiences symptoms of varying frequency, degree and duration which might be defined broadly as tinnitus, and that some 2 per cent. of adults experience continuous tinnitus, a proportion of whom would be seriously troubled by the symptom.

Facilities for the treatment of tinnitus sufferers should be available at all hospital ear nose and throat departments. Decisions on the treatment of individual patients are matters for the clinical judgment of the hospital consultant concerned.

Lung Cancer (Report)

Mr. Norris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on occupational lung cancer is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on occupational lung cancer is published today. It recommends the prescription of lung cancer in three groups of workers, namely:

those exposed to a chemical known as bis (chloromethyl) ether (BCME) produced during the manufacture of chloromethyl methyl ether (CMME) those exposed to the dust of zinc chromate, calcium chomate and strontium chromate tin miners

The Government accept the council's recommendations, and regulations will be laid to bring them into operation next year.

Drug Misuse

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the Government's estimated number of heroin addicts using National Health Service drug rehabilitation centres in each year since 1979 and the number who have ceased to be addicts.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 10 December 1986]: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks as it is not collected centrally.

CIVIL SERVICE

Disabled Employees

Mr. Crowther asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the Government Departments in which the number of employees who are registered disabled persons is equal to, or more than, 3 per cent. of the total number of employees.

Mr. Luce: The following is the information:

Crown Estate Office
Crown Prosecution Service
Government Actuary's Department
National Investment and Loans Office
National Savings Department
Paymaster General's Office
Privy Council Office
Public Record Office
Royal Mint

SCOTLAND

Women Prisoners

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the longest period that a woman prisoner has been held in police cells in the current year.

Mr. Lang: This information is not kept centrally. Records available in six of the eight Scottish police forces indicate that the longest period over which a woman has been held in a police cell (other than a legalised police cell) this year is about 107 hours. In that case, the woman was arrested on 27 March and kept in custody, as permitted by statute, until the first appropriate court sitting which, because of Easter, was not until 1 April. For legalised police cells the figure is 118 hours. In the other two forces, the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of women aged under 21 years who have been held in police cells during 1986.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected centrally. I understand, however, that in six of the eight Scottish police forces a total of 4,998 women under 21 years of age have been held in police cells (including one in a legalised police cell) in 1986. In the other two forces, the information could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women with no previous convictions were given a prison sentence during 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: The only statistical information held centrally on previous convictions is obtained from inmates on reception into the penal establishment and may not be completely reliable. The figures from this source are as follows:

Females received under sentence in penal establishments in Scotland: number admitting no previous convictions

Year	Direct sentence[1]	In default of fine/ compensation order
1982	29	49
1983	31	37
1984	28	43
1985	69	129

[1] Direct sentence includes persons recalled to a young offenders' institution or borstal.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of women remanded in custody during 1985 and subsequently either found not guilty, not proceeded against or given a non-custodial sentence.

Mr. Lang: The number of females received on remand in Scottish penal establishments in 1985 was 897. No information is held centrally on the subsequent disposal of these cases.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total number of women aged less than 21 years sentenced to a period of imprisonment in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

(2) what was the total number of women sentenced to a period of imprisonment for a crime of violence in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985;

(3) what was the total number of women sentenced to a period of imprisonment in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested are set out in the table:

Scotland	1982	1983	1984	1985
Women aged under 21 given custodial sentences	64	80	55	144
Women given custodial sentences for crimes of violence[1]	29	24	15	22
Total number of women given custodial sentences	394	427	382	604

[1] Crimes of violence in this context are defined as those in Group 1 (Non-sexual Crimes of Violence) of the Scottish Home and Health Department crime classification.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of women held on remand in Scotland at the latest date available; and what it was on 31 December 1984 and 31 December 1985.

Mr. Lang: The figures are as set out:

Women held on Remand in Scottish Penal Establishments

	Number
31 December 1984	56
31 December 1985	43
25 November 1986	48

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total of women held in prison in Scotland at the latest date available; and what it was on 31 December 1984 and 31 December 1985.

Mr. Lang: The figures are as set out:

Women held in Scottish Penal Establishments

	Number
31 December 1984	130
31 December 1985	173
25 November 1986	199

Greenock and Port Glasgow

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the numbers in each district council ward in Greenock and Port Glasgow classified as economically active in the 1981 census.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of people, aged 16 or over and usually resident in each ward, who were economically active at the time of the 1981 census are as follows:

Numbers usually resident, economically active, aged 16+ Greenock and Port Glasgow district ward

	Number
Bellville	2,236
Blairmore	2,066
Bow	2,131
Broomhill	2,002
Clune Brae	2,635
Gateside	2,110
Gibshill	2,342
Greenock East Central	1,799
Greenock South	2,420
Greenock West Central	2,185
Greenock West End	2,304
Larkfield	2,762
Port Glasgow East	3,011
Port Glasgow South	2,953
Port Glasgow West	1,967
Upper Larkfield	2,664

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the letter sent to him on 24 November by Mr. Andrew Otley, secretary of the Dundee group of the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association.

Mr. John MacKay: A reply was sent on 8 December 1986.

Murder (Clear-up Rate)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the police clear-up rate for murder cases for (a) the northern constabulary, and (b) all police forces in Scotland for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: Provisional figures for 1985 indicate that there were 75 cases which Scottish police forces initially classified as murder and all but one of these cases were solved. Of this total, two cases were recorded and solved by the northern constabulary.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate Reports (Release)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the practice of Her Majesty's Inspectorate on release of its reports to its subjects in relation to the time of release to the press; and why reports were denied to staff at Aberdeen college of education before release to the press.

Mr. John MacKay: The normal practice of providing copies of a report about one week in advance of its general release to those responsible for the management of the establishments concerned was followed. Copies were made available to staff at the same time as the report was released to the press.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate (Colleges and Schools)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance is given to Her Majesty's inspectors about correct procedures and recommended approaches for inspections of colleges and schools; and whether this guidance is disclosed to staff selected for inspection.

Mr. John MacKay: Her Majesty's senior chief inspector lays down guidance on the approach to inspection and reporting to be followed in the planning and implementation of all programmes of inspection. Appropriate advice is communicated as a matter of course to management teams in schools and colleges, which are responsible for briefing staff.

Jordanhill College of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the estimated cost of planning for the current programme of inspection for Jordanhill college of education.

Mr. John MacKay: Precise costs are not available but it is estimated that the equivalent of 10 inspector days will be required for this purpose.

Aberdeen College of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the full cost of preparing Her Majesty's inspectors' report on Aberdeen college of education during 1984 to 1986, including costings for all hours worked by the inspectors and their support staff in terms of their salaries and wages, and costings for travel, accommodation, expenses and administration.

Mr. John MacKay: Colleges of education are included in the normal inspection programme of schools and colleges. The disaggregation of the full costs of the inspection of Aberdeen college of education could be undertaken only at disproportionate expense but it required the equivalent of 265 inspector days.

Colposcopy Facilities

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list those health boards which have full colposcopy facilities for all women needing treatment;

(2) which health boards do not have a colposcope.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available centrally.

General Practitioners (Private Medicine)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners are engaged in private medicine in National Health Service hospitals and health centres in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde, (c) Glasgow, (d) the eastern district area of the Glasgow health board and (e) the Shettleston constituency.

Mr. John MacKay: Information about the number of general practitioners who are engaged in private practice in National Health Service premises is not available centrally.

School Transport Services

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total value of school transport services put out to tender by each educational authority in Scotland under the Transport Act 1985; and what was the comparable figure in the year preceding the coming into force of the Act.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available centrally.

Health Centres (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all the health centres in the eastern district of Greater Glasgow health board and the individual cost of providing each one.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows except for the cost of the Townhead health centre which forms part of the Glasgow royal infirmary redevelopment and for which a separate cost is not available.

	Capital cost £ million
Baillieston Health Centre	0·7
Bridgeton Health Centre	1·7
Easterhouse Health Centre	1·4
Shettleston Health Centre	1·4
Parkhead Health Centre	1·5
Townhead Health Centre	—

Industry Acts (Payments)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the amount of money paid to companies under the Industry Acts in Greenock and Port Glasgow since 1983; and how many jobs were either created or defended as a result.

Mr. Lang: In the period between 1 January 1983 and 30 November 1986, total payments of regional selective assistance (RSA) to companies in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency amounted to £6 million. Comprehensive information on payments of regional development grant (RDG) on a constituency basis is not available. However, since 1 January 1983, payments of RDG exceeding £25,000 to firms in the Greenock and Port Glasgow employment local office area amounted to over £28·4 million. Information on jobs created or safeguarded in the period since 1983 as a result of awards of RDG and RSA and on payments for other forms of assistance under the Industry Acts is not readily available.

Peterhead Prison

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is the intention during the investigation at Peterhead prison being carried out by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons to invite representations from the Peterhead branch of the Scottish Prison Officers Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons has already interviewed a large number of individual members of staff of Her Majesty's prison Peterhead in connection with his current investigation. It is his intention to meet also representatives of the local branch of the Scottish Prison Officers Association, if they so wish.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the names, qualifications and previous backgrounds of the persons who have been selected to assist Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons in the investigation which is to be carried out at Peterhead prison.

Mr. Lang: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons is being assisted in his investigation at Her Majesty's prison

Peterhead by Her Majesty's deputy chief inspector of prisons, Mr. W. T. Finlayson, and by Mr. R. R. H. Glen on secondment from his post as governor of Her Majesty's prison Dungavel.

Mr. Finlayson has very wide experience within the Scottish prison service, having joined as an officer in 1953. He has served at a number of establishments and has been governor-in-charge at Longriggend remand unit and Her Majesty's institution Cornton Vale as well as having been principal of the Scottish prison service college. He is a governor class I.

Mr. Glen, who is a governor class III, joined the Scottish prison service as an assistant governor in 1969. He has served at a number of establishments and at headquarters and has been governor-in-charge at Her Majesty's young offenders institution Castle Huntly and at Her Majesty's prison Dungavel, where he is currently serving.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to add to the team chosen to assist Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons in his inquiry at Peterhead prison a person with no previous association with the prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Until he took up his present post, Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons had himself no previous connection of any kind with the Scottish prison service. He is, however, considering whether he should bring in a person or persons from outside the Scottish prison service on an ad hoc basis to assist him with particular aspects of his investigation at Her Majesty's prison Peterhead.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures for the average monthly loss of Scottish manufacturing jobs in each year since 1974; and if he will provide the average figure for (a) the period 1974 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to the present day.

Mr. Lang: Figures relating to the loss of manufacturing employment since 1974 are given in the table provided. It shows that the average monthly fall between 1974 and 1979 was 1,300, and between 1979 and 1986 was 2,150. In the period between 1983 and 1986, the average fall was 650 per month.

Scottish manufacturing employment: average monthly job change

Year (June)	Total manufacturing employment (000s)	Average monthly job change in the year to June (to nearest 100)
1974	682
1975	644	−3,200
1976	614	−2,500
1977	621	+600
1978	610	−900
1979	603	−600
1980	566	−3,100
1981	511	−4,600
1982	478	−2,800
1983	447	−2,600
1984	437	−800
1985	437	0
1986	423	−1,200

	Average monthly change (to nearest 50)
1974-79	−1,300
1979-86	−2,150
1983-86	−650

Notes

(i) Employees in employment in manufacturing.
(ii) All figures are unadjusted for seasonal variation.
(iii) The June 1986 figure is provisional.

Ailsa Shipyard

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration his Department has given to the offers to purchase the Ailsa shipyard; what financial applications have been made in relation to any offer; what has been his response; and when he expects an announcement about the future of the yard to be made.

Mr. Lang: The decision on the sale of the Ailsa shipyard is a matter for British Shipbuilders. I am confident that it will make a careful assessment of the employment prospects and commercial aspects of the bids it has received, but in addition I have an opportunity to comment on these before a decision is taken. I hope that it will be possible to make an announcement about the future of the yard shortly. It is not the practice to give information on applications for financial assistance, since these are matters of a commercially confidential nature.

Scottish School of Physical Education

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the final report of the working party on the proposed merger of the Scottish school of physical education of Jordanhill college with Dunfermline college, Cramord, under Moray house college will include in its findings and recommendations detailed costs relating to its proposals including savings to public expenditure which will arise from the arrangement.

Mr. John MacKay: Following my right hon. and learned Friend's statement on 17 July 1986, at column 1187 a working party was established to report to him and the governing bodies concerned on how best to implement his decisions that the training of physical education teachers (both men and women) will be centralised on the site of the present Dunfermline college of physical education, bringing to an end the training of men PE teachers at Jordanhill college of education, and that Dunfermline college will itself be merged with Moray house college of education under a single governing body. It is for the working party to determine the precise content of its final report, but in reaching his decisions my right hon. and learned Friend did of course take account of relevant financial as well as educational considerations.

Dunbeath Bridge (Road Scheme)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current proposed starting date for the construction of the new Dunbeath bridge scheme on the A9 trunk road in Caithness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: I expect the construction of the Dunbeath scheme to begin in late summer 1987. However, this depends on resolving two outstanding objections to the draft road orders and any objections to the draft compulsory purchase order which was published recently.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 26 November, Official Report, column 274, if he will publish the exercise scenario used at Torness power station on 18 September; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Aberdeen and Dundee Colleges of Education

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, before coming to a judgment on the final report of the working party on the merger of Aberdeen and Dundee colleges of education, he will disallow the proposed appointment of the named principal designate on the grounds that the individual named was a member of the working party and that the correct procedure for public appointments has not been followed.

Mr. John MacKay: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 8 December at column 136.

Voluntary Bodies (Grant Aid)

Mr. Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning grant aid to voluntary bodies working in the environmental field in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: I am pleased to announce the introduction of a new scheme of grants to take effect in the financial year 1987-88, to assist voluntary bodies carrying out environmental conservation or improvement work in Scotland. The scheme is designed primarily to assist central administrative costs of relevant bodies and will be known as the special grants (environmental) programme. Up to £150,000 will be available for grant payments in 1987-88. Further details are available from the Scottish Development Department, and will be circulated shortly to relevant bodies.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his Department's principal achievements in overseas aid since 1983.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since 1983 the principal achievements of the aid programme include:

(1) A swift and generous response (£190 million to April 1986) to appeals for emergency relief which helped to mitigate the effects of famine in Sub-Saharan Africa.
(2) The completion of many aid projects, large and small, including the Victoria dam in Sri Lanka (£113 million), and the Songea-Makambako road in Tanzania (£90 million).
(3) 118 new project allocations, each worth £2 million or more, with a total value of £1,130 million.
(4) Helping to sustain economic policy reforms, particularly in Africa, through the provision of programme aid (£137 million between 1983 and 1985) in support of IMF/IBRD adjustment programmes.
(5) 17,416 man-years of training of overseas personnel and 10,855 man-years of service by British experts and volunteers in developing countries provided between 1983 and 1985.
(6) Securing contracts for British firms worth £713 million with aid and trade provision support.

At the November 1986 European Community Development Council under Britain's Presidency, agreement in principle was reached on a much needed reform of EC food aid.

El Salvador

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will detail the £100,000 worth of civilian supplies and equipment purchased by the El Salvadorean Government with the help of the grant given under the technical co-operation programme agreed with President Duarte during his visit to Britain in 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten: At a cost of £83,000 we have provided three Bedford lorries for the distribution of food supplies to rural areas and three Land Rovers, with mobile cinema units and ancillary equipment, to assist in the social development programme for poor communities. We await detailed proposals for the use of the balance.

DEFENCE

Military Equipment (Exports)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria are used to assess whether a licence for the export of military equipment should be issued; and what assurances are sought that this equipment will not be used for internal repression in the purchasing country.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Before an export licence is granted for military equipment a wide variety of considerations is taken into account. These considerations will vary depending on individual circumstances, but they will always include the need to safeguard the United Kingdom's political, strategic and security interests, the possible effect a sale might have on the stability of a region and the likelihood of the equipment being used to violate human rights. It is not Government policy to allow sales of equipment which could be used for internal repression to regimes which have a bad human rights record.

Airborne Early Warning

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence, whether the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation has been consulted on the interoperability and mutual support aspects of Nimrod and E-3 AWACS, respectively; what weight these factors will be given in the selection of an early warning system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The possibilities for collaboration in support of a United Kingdom E-3A fleet have been discussed with the NATO authorities. Either system would be fitted with the communication links necessary to ensure full interoperability.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy in selecting an early warning system, to give the highest priority to operational capability; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take into account when selecting an airborne early warning system the relative potential for subsequent export orders for United Kingdom industry of the two competing systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 25 November at column 181.

Overseas Personnel (Training)

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the names of all the countries which have had access to the facilities for training at British military establishments for each year from 1982 to 1986, inclusive.

Mr. Freeman: The tables show the countries which have been provided with training at defence establishments in the United Kingdom for each of the financial years from 1981-82 through to 1985-86.

Financial Year 1985-86

Algeria
Austria
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Canada
Chile
Denmark
Ecuador
Egypt
Eire
Fiji
Finland
France
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
Hong Kong
India
Indonesia
Iraq
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Lesotho
Malawi
Malaysia
Maldives
Mauritius
Mozambique
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Tanzania
Thailand
Trinidad/Tobago
Tunisia
Turkey
United Arab Emirates
Uganda
Uruguay
United States of America
Venezuela
West Germany
Yemen
Yugoslavia
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Financial Year 1984-85

Algeria
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Canada
Chile
Denmark
Ecuador
Egypt
Eire
Fiji
Finland
France
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
Hong Kong
Iceland
India
Inonesia
Iraq
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Libya
Malawi
Malaysia
Maldives
Mauritius
Montserrat
Mozambique
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Tanzania
Thailand
Trinidad/Tobago
Tunisia
Turkey
UAE
Uganda
USA
Venezuela
West Germany
Yeman
Yugoslavia
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Financial year 1983-84

Algeria
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Burma
Canada
Chile
Denmark
Ecuador
Egypt
Eire
Fiji
Finland
France
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
Hong Kong
Iceland
India
Indonesia
Iran
Iraq
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Lesotho
Libya
Malawi
Malaysia
Maldives
Malta
Mauritius
Montserrat
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Kitts/St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Tanzania
Thailand

Trinidad/Tobago
Turkey
United Arab Emirates
Uganda
United States of America
Venezuela
West Germany
Yemen
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Financial year 1982-83

Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Burma
Canada
Chile
Denmark
Ecuador
Egypt
Eire
Fiji
France
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
Hong Kong
India
Indonesia
Iran
Iraq
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Lesotho
Libya
Malawi
Malaysia
Maldives
Mauritius
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Papau New Guinea
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Tanzania
Thailand
Trinidad/Tobago
Turkey
United Arab Emirates
Uganda
United States of America
Venezuela
West Germany
Yemen
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Financial Year 1981-82

Argentina
Australia
Bahamas
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Bermuda
Botswana
Brazil
Brunei
Burma
Canada
Chile
Denmark
Ecuador
Egypt
Eire
Fiji
France
Gambia
Ghana
Greece
Guyana
Hong Kong
India
Indonesia
Iran
Iraq
Israel
Italy
Jamaica
Japan
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lebanon
Lesotho
Libya
Malawi
Malaysia
Mauritius
Moroco
Nepal
Netherlands
New Zealand
Nigeria
Norway
Oman
Pakistan
Papua New Guinea
Peru
Philippines
Portugal
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Senegal
Sierra Leone
Singapore
South Korea
Spain
Sri Lanka
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Sweden
Switzerland
Syria
Tanzania
Thailand
Trinidad/Tobago
Tonga
Turkey
United Arab Emirates
Uganda
United States of America
Venezuela
West Germany
Yemen
Zaire
Zambia
Zimbabwe

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the names of all the countries which have had access to training by members of Her Majesty's armed forces serving overseas on secondment or loan for each year from 1982 to 1986, inclusive.

Mr. Stanley: The following table shows the countries and territories in which members of Her Majesty's armed forces have served on loan or secondment terms from 1982 to 1986—except where a lesser period is indicated:

Country
Australia
Bahamas to 1985
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Chile
Dubai only 1982
Ecuador to 1985
Fiji
Gambia from 1984
Ghana
Hong Kong
Indonesia only to 1982
Jordan
Kenya
Kuwait
Lesotho
Malaysia to 1983
Mauritius
New Zealand
Nigeria
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Singapore to 1984
Sri Lanka to 1983
St. Lucia from 1986
St. Vincent
Sudan
Swaziland
Uganda
United Arab Emirates
Zimbabwe*

* Since January 1986 a Wing of the British Military Advisory and Training Team in Zimbabwe has been specifically allocated to train Mozambican troops within Zimbabwe.

Some of these personnel have filled posts in overseas staff colleges and similar establishments which may have been attended by students from countries other than the host nation. Records of such students are not held centrally and it would require disproportionate cost to establish precise details.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the book "Their Trade is Treachery" was referred to the D Notice Committee for consideration by all its members.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Aircraft Carriers

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much time per year since the Falkland Islands war aircraft carriers in commission have devoted to Her Majesty's Royal Marine assault training exercises.

Mr. Stanley: Full records of aircraft carriers' involvement in assault training exercises are not retained for 1982 and 1983. However, in the time available, the following information can be provided:

Year	Time Spent (approximate)
1984	3 weeks
1985	5 weeks
1986	2 weeks

Gruinard Island

Mr. Charles Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the decontamination exercise on Gruinard Island;

(2) what experiments are being, or have recently been, carried out on Gruinard Island using tissue to culture anthrax spores to test the effectiveness of the decontamination exercise; and if he will give details of any such experiments;

(3) if he will give details of the results of experiments carried out to test the effectiveness of the decontamination of Gruinard Island;

(4) what experiments at Porton Down have been carried out using cultured anthrax spores from Gruinard Island.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 4 November at column 427.

Studies of the soil samples taken from Gruinard Island in October are still in progress. We will announce the outcome of these studies and the effectiveness of the decontamination exercise when all the tests recommended by the independent advisory group have been completed.

All experiments on soil samples taken from Gruinard Island both now and in the past, have been intended to determine the level and extent of anthrax contamination, if any. The principal technique uses a nutrient gel culture to assess the number of spores in a given sample and avoids the use of large numbers of laboratory animals. However, results obtained by this method will be confirmed by a small number of in vivo tests using about 50 guinea pigs in total. Reports of this work will be published in scientific journals in due course.

Land

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current United Kingdom land holding of his Department in terms of freehold leasehold and access rights; and how many acres have been disposed of and for what purpose in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: Ministry of Defence land and foreshore holdings at 1 October 1986 and over the last five years are set out below.

	Freehold (acres)	Leasehold (acres)	Rights (acres)
1 October 1986	552,942	39,226	89,635
1 October 1985	554,303	39,138	90,030
1 October 1984	562,411	39,836	89,762
1 October 1983	564,496	41,551	88,659
1 October 1982	568,435	41,473	90,732
1 October 1981	573,840	41,534	90,805

It is Ministry of Defence policy to dispose of land which is not essential for the support of the armed forces, but the purpose for which a purchaser buys the land is not known.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of land owned or leased by his Department in the area bounded by the London boroughs; and if he will indentify the purpose to which each site is put.

Mr. Freeman: The following list reflects the main locations owned or leased by the Ministry of Defence in the area bounded by the London boroughs and the purpose to which each site is put:

FREEHOLD

Battersea Simpson street — Air Training Corps unit; St. John's hill—Territorial Army centre.
Biggin hill RAF training facility.
Bromely Golf road—quality assurance directorate.
Chelsea Army barracks; Duke of Yorks HQ — Territorial Army administrative headquarters.
Feltham — Army mapping/charting establishment and storage depot.
Finchley High road—Army careers information office.
Greenwich RN college, cemetery and recreation ground (includes leasehold property).
Harefield—Quality assurance directorate.
Hendon—RAF station.
Hook Mansfield road—hospital facility.
Hounslow—Army barracks; Army camp.
Kenley—RAF station.
Kensington Brompton road — London university air squadron; Brompton road/Cottage place — Army storage accommodation; Queens Gate terrace and Petersham place —RN office accommodation; Iverna gardens—RN office accommodation.
Kidbrooke Army cataloguing authority.
Knightsbridge Army barracks.
Marylebone Cleveland street—RAF medical facility.
Mill Hill Army barracks, postal depot and workshops.
Northolt RAF station.
Penge High street—Army careers information office.
Plumstead Garland road — Army central packaging unit.
Purfleet Army ranges and barracks.
Shepherd's Bush Army central servicing and Territorial Army depot.
Stanmore RAF administrative headquarters.
Stanmore Park RAF administrative headquarters.
Surbiton Claremont road — Army careers information office.
Teddington Bushey park and Queens road—Admiralty research establishment (includes leasehold property).
Twickenham Kneller Hall—Army school of music.
Uxbridge RAF station and school of music.
Wandsworth Kimber road—ex Army forms depot.
Wembley High road—Army careers information office.
West Drayton RAF station; Warwick road—Procurement executive research establishment.
Westminster Army barracks.
West Ruislip RAF office accommodation and recreation ground; USAF depot.
Whetstone Army postal and courier service.
Woolwich Ha Ha road — Quality assurance directorate; Woolwich common — Army barracks, Royal Military Academy and Queen Elizabeth Military hospital.

LEASEHOLD

Acton High street—Army careers information office.
Battersea Nine Elms Lane — Army garaging and office accommodation.
Bermondsey Jamaica road—RN reserve forces unit.
Bloomsbury Capper street — Quality assurance directorate.
Camberwell Camberwell Church street — Army careers information office.
Chelsea Burton's court—Army recreation ground.
Crayford High street—Army careers information office.
Croydon Park street—RN careers information office.
Dulwich Lordship lane—Territorial Army barracks.
Edmonton Green The Market square — Army careers information office.
Eltham Eltham hall—Army institute of education.

Ilford Cranbrook road — RN/RAF careers infomation office.
Marylebone Harley street—RAF dental facility.
Norbury London road — Army/RAF careers information office.
Romford South street—Army careers information office.
St. John's Wood Ordnance hill and Queens terrace — Army barracks.
Wandsworth Strathville road — Army forms depot; Kimber road—Army forms depot.
West Ham Royal Victoria dock—Army storage depot.
Westminster The Strand — Army careers information office; Dean Stanley street — Army office accommodation; Belgrave square—Imperial defence college; Elverton street—Territorial Army centre.
Wimbledon Merton road—Air Training Corps unit.

South Korea

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel are based in South Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The position is the same as that set out in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 14 April at column 318.

NATO (Crisis Management Committee)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the posts, ranks and responsibilities of officials from his Department who represent the United Kingdom on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation crisis management committee and its sub-committees.

Mr. Stanley: There is no NATO committee with this title. Crisis management in NATO is the responsibility of the North Atlantic council and the defence planning committee. Outside ministerial meetings, the United Kingdom is represented by its permanent representative on both the North Atlantic council and the defence planning committee.

Directorate of Materials Quality Assurance

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify the new locations of the high explosives, propellants, initiators, pyrotechnics, chemical defence and atomic weapons branches of E Division under the director materials quality assurance of his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 1 April 1984 E Division of the directorate of materials quality assurance became part of the directorte general of defence quality assurance. There have been no changes in location.

Mynydd Epynt, Powys

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify the project extent and cost of the town being built by his Department on Mynydd Epynt in Powys, for the purpose of training in fighting in built up areas; whether he anticipates this site being used by troops from overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The training complex to be constructed at the Sennybridge training area (Mynydd Epynt) comprises some 32 building representing a part of a village. The buildings will be uninhabitable shells constructed specifically to meet an essential military training requirement. The local planning authority has raised no objection at the outline or detailed stages to our proposals and construction is now expected to start in March 1987 at a cost of some £3 million. There are no current plans for foreign forces to use it.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Legal Aid

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if Her Majesty's Government will introduce legislation to amend the legal aid scheme to remove the right to legal aid of persons wishing to challenge in the courts their expulsion from a political party; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. Before legal aid is granted in any case to which the scheme applies all applicants must satisfy the Law Society, which is responsible for administering the civil legal aid scheme, that they have reasonable grounds for taking or defending the proceedings. There is thus no reason to discriminate against those who have been expelled from a political party and have a cause of action in the courts enjoying a reasonable prospect of success.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if Her Majesty's Government will introduce legislation to extend the legal aid scheme to cover persons wishing to challenge in the European Court its refusal of membership by a political party in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. The legal aid scheme in England and Wales is intended to enable persons of small or moderate means to take proceedings before the courts of England and Wales. I understand that both the Commission and the European Court of Human Rights operate legal aid schemes of their own. There is thus no reason to discriminate in favour of those persons who have had the misfortune to be refused membership of a political party.

State Security

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 8 December, why he did not prosecute Granada Television under the Official Secrets Act 1911 (a) in July 1984 and (b) in December 1986 for broadcasting material confidential to the security services in the "World in Action" programme, "The Spy Who Never Was."

The Attorney-General: It would be inappropriate for me to comment on matters which are or may be at issue in the proceedings concerning the Peter Wright case in Australia while those proceedings continue.

Mr. Winnick asked the Attorney-General if he is currently considering any other cases of alleged breaches of confidentiality by former members of the security services, in addition to those about which he has already informed the House; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I am not currently considering any such cases in addition to those about which I have already informed the House.

Classified Information

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General how, in considering possible legal proceedings arising from alleged breaches of confidentiality in relation to classified information, he distinguishes between his roles as prosecutor in criminal proceedings and as nominal plaintiff in civil proceedings.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 8 December at column 2. The distinction between criminal and civil proceedings derives from the general law.

International Garden Festival

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General if he will institute proceedings against Mr. John Anton of Transworld Leisure plc for fraudulent practice in connection with the operation of the International Garden Festival site in Aigburth, Liverpool.

The Attorney-General: The investigation of any alleged criminal offence is a function of the police. If the hon. Member considers that an offence of fraud may have been committed the proper course is for him to refer the matter to the police so that if, after proper investigation, it is appropriate, a report may be submitted to the Crown prosecution service.

Neville Chamberlain (Papers)

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General whether the private papers of Neville Chamberlain relating to 1936 will be made public on 2 January 1987; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Private papers are not public records.

Magistracy

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will list all of the (a) oral and (b) verbal questions which the Lord Chancellor requires to be put to applicants for the magistracy;

(2) what is the status of the question that the Lord Chancellor requires to be put to applicants for the magistracy; and whether candidates may refuse to answer, either in writing on the applications form or verbally at interviews, questions relating to political views, or religious beliefs or other contenitous matters.

The Attorney-General: The only questions which the Lord Chancellor requires to be put to candidates for the magistracy are those contained in the application form, a copy of which is in the Library. I draw the attention of the hon. Member to replies which I gave on 30 January 1984 at column 20 and 9 February 1984, at column 681 which make it clear that a candidate is not obliged to give any information which he does not wish to disclose. Any information provided is treated in confidence and used only for appointment purposes.

Prosecution Policy

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if he intends to change the rules in respect of summary possession proceedings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The comments on the Lord Chancellor's consultation paper on summary possession proceedings showed general agreement that the minimum period between service of the application and the order should be reduced from five days to two where the defendants are on open land, but there was concern about such a reduction in the case of residential premises.

The Lord Chancellor is inviting the Supreme Court rule committee to reduce the minimum period from five days to two in the case of open land but to retain the five day period in the case of residential premises. A statutory instrument covering this and other matters is expected to be made before Christmas.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General how he exercises his responsibilities in determining the public interest before commencing the injunctive process; and what procedures are followed in each case.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) on 8 December at column 2.

State Security

Mr. Marlow asked the Attorney-General whether, in view of disclosures of the proceedings of the Peter Wright court case in Australia, he will institute a review of measures applied in British courts for hearing in camera cases relating to national security.

The Attorney-General: No need for such a review in this country has been demonstrated by the proceedings in question.

Complaints Investigation Bureau

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General when the Director of Public Prosecutions first received from the complaints investigation bureau of the Metropolitan police a report on police officers involving the abuse of access to information contained on police national computer files by an alleged homosexual ring; when he received further reports; and when a decision can be expected.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions first received a report on the case referred to by the hon. Member from the complaints investment bureau of the Metropolitan police on 23 January 1986. Further reports were received from the police on 28 July, 19 September and 20 October. Papers were forwarded to me on 17 November and I consented to the prosecution of three men for offences under the Official Secrets Act 1911 on 19 November 1986 and 26 November 1986.

WALES

Tourism

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales have published tourism strategies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not available centrally. Local authorities have, however, been encouraged by the Wales Tourist Board to produce their own strategies which embrace the proposals contained in structure and local plans and also take account of the marketing needs and priorities of each area.

Colposcopy Facilities

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those health authorities which have full colposcopy facilities for all women needing treatment.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales which district health authorities do not have a colposcope.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available centrally.

WDA Advance Factories

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the latest estimate of the number of jobs which will be created in Wales in those advance factories let or sold by the Welsh Development Agency during the period of their most recent annual report;

(2) if he will make a statement on the priorities reflected in the geographic spread across Wales of the factories which have been let by the Welsh Development Agency during the period of its most recent annual report; if he has any plans to vary those priorities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has in conjunction with the Welsh Development Agency for the construction of more advance factories in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the number of jobs associated with the Welsh Development Agency's factory programme in 1985-86 is given in the agency's latest annual report and accounts which has been laid before the House today.

The WDA's programme of factory building is not founded on pre-determined geographic priorities. It relates to the agency's best assessment of need based on close consultation with local authorities and other interested bodies; and I have no plans to change this process. Significant factory construction will be possible within the framework of the substantially higher level of resources I announced for the agency on 8 December.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters he has received expressing opposition to the rate support grant allocation for Welsh local authorities for 1987-88 ; and if he will make a statement in relation to determining the appropriate rate support grant strategy for Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have received a number of letters from one local authority expressing opposition to one element of the proposed Welsh rate support grant settlement for 1987-88.

I shall be making a statement on Welsh rate support grant next week.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether there is to be any reconsideration of the rate support grant for Welsh local authorities for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My provisional proposals for the 1987-88 Welsh rate support grant settlement were announced in July and have since been the subject of extensive consultation with the local authority associations through the forum of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. I shall be making a statement setting out my firm intentions next week.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing the estimated critical group exposures associated with 100 per cent. of authorised radioactive discharges at each licensed nuclear power station in Wales, where such authorisations contain numerical limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list showing, for each licensed nuclear power station in Wales (a) the calculated critical group exposures associated with actual radioactive discharges in the last year, and (b) the proportion that actual radioactive discharges in the last year bear to maximum authorised limits, where such authorisations contain numerical limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The estimated doses for the critical groups in 1985 in respect of Wylfa* and Trawsfynydd nuclear power stations were less than 0·1 milli sievert and 0·21 milli sievert respectively. The discharges for 1985 expressed as a percentage of the authorised limits are:

	Gross alpha/ beta	Tritium	Caesium 137
Wylfa	2	4·7	—
Trawsfynydd	28·8	3·2	24·3

* Mainly due to discharges from Sellafield.

Abortions

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he last issued guidance to the health authorities in Wales concerning the implementation of the Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 in regard to late abortions; and what that guidance was.

Mr. Mark Robinson: No guidance has been issued to health authorities in Wales on this subject but the Government financed the publication in 1985 of a document on foetal viability and clinical practice prepared by a working party set up by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists. This document contained the considered opinion of the royal college and other relevant professional bodies that the reference to 28 weeks gestational age in the 1929 Act is now out of date in view of advances in medical techniques. With Government financial assistance, this document was circulated to all members of the royal college including those residing in Wales.

School Leavers

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many young people who left school in the summer of 1986 are still looking for work; and what proportion this is of the overall total of Welsh school leavers;

(2) how many school leavers in summer 1986 joined Government training schemes in Wales; and how many found employment independent of Government placings.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Coleman) on 17 November at column 32.

Assisted Places

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been (a) the numerical and (b) the percentage take-up of assisted places at Welsh private or independent schools in each year from 1979 to 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table:

School Year

	Number of new places taken up	Percentage take up of new places
1981-82	114	76
1982-83	128	86·5
1983-84	120	93
1984-85	118	91·5
1985-86	115	84·6
1986-87	123	90·4

Note: The assisted places scheme did not begin until 1981.

Capitation Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average capitation allowance per pupil, in each Welsh local education authority and for Wales as a whole in each year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Consistent information on full capitation allowances is not collected centrally. However, the available figures relating to expenditure per pupil in respect of nursery, primary and secondary schools on books and equipment are given in the following table.

Expenditure per pupil in nursery, primary and secondary schools (£'s at outturn prices)

	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	[1]1985-86
Clwyd	15·3	19·5	24·6	25·6	33·2	31·6	29·2
Dyfed	17·7	19·1	25·1	26·3	26·2	23·1	27·0
Gwent	14·3	18·9	22·0	26·3	27·5	31·0	32·4
Gwynedd	15·5	19·0	20·0	22·6	25·1	30·8	29·4
Mid Glamorgan	17·4	19·3	17·4	22·9	26·2	25·5	29·9
Powys	18·4	17·0	27·1	29·0	28·7	40·5	[2] —
South Glamorgan	18·3	19·8	22·4	24·7	26·1	24·2	29·2
West Glamorgan	22·0	22·2	22·4	30·8	32·3	29·4	31·3
Wales	17·2	19·6	21·9	25·7	28·2	26·8	[2] —

[1] Provisional.
[2] Figures not currently available.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of hospital beds in Wales for each year from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information on the average daily number of beds available in hospitals in Wales is given in the following table for each year from 1979 to 1985. An average for 1986 is not yet available.

Average daily number of available beds

	Number
1979	23,460
1980	23,200
1981	22,940
1982	22,600
1983	22,470
1984	22,310
1985	22,130

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) council and (b) private houses have been completed in Wales in each year from 1979 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers of council and private houses completed in each year since 1979 (including completions by new towns) are shown in the following table:

Year	Local Authority and New Town Corporations	Private
1979	2,139	6,660
1980	2,491	5,549
1981	2,278	4,793
1982	1,044	5,040
1983	921	5,314
1984	1,024	6,126
1985	413	5,988
Jan-Sept 1986	326	4,685

Earnings

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has about the average earnings of Welsh 18 to 25 year olds at the latest date for which figures are available; and what information he has about the comparative figure for 18 to 25 year olds in England and Scotland.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest available figures are from the new earnings survey and relate to April 1985. The average earnings for full time employees of 18-24 years of age whose pay was not affected by absence were as follows:

Average Gross Weekly Earnings

	£
Wales	109·3
England	117·0
Scotland	113·5

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average length of time a person spends unemployed in Wales in each year from 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The median* duration of unemployment for Wales, published by the Department of Employment is as follows:

Male and Female	Weeks
Completed spells of unemployment (computerised records only)
July 1983—October 1983	11·8
July 1984—October 1984	11·3
July 1985—October 1985	11·3
July 1986—October 1986	12·1
Uncompleted spells of unemployment (all records)
July 1983—October 1983	33·9
July 1984—October 1984	35·0
July 1985—October 1985	37·3
July 1986—October 1986	38·1

* The median duration is the length of time spent unemployed, which has been exceeded by 50 per cent. of the unemployed.

Health Services

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached decisions about the allocation of resources for hospital and community health service in Wales in 1987-88.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In 1987-88, I intend to allocate £779·9 million. This represents a cash increase of £57 million over 1986-87 provision or 7·9 per cent.

For current spending this represents additional sums totalling £50·5 million a cash increase of 7·5 per cent. over 1986-87 provision of which £10·6 million will be required for centrally directed developments. The balance of £39·9 million a cash increase of 5·9 per cent. over 1986-87 provision, is being made available to district health authorities.

In addition to this extra funding health authorities will retain the benefit of cash released through their cost improvement programmes, the first 0·5 per cent. of which will as in previous years be for re-investment in priority services. Health authorities will also retain the benefit of income from charges of about £2 million, mainly from private patient treatment. From within these total additional resources health authorities will be expected to meet pay and price increases and to continue to maintain standards of patient care and develop services in accordance with approved policies and priorities.

Capital resources for hospital and community health services will increase by £6·2 million to £52·4 million. As a consequence of the declining requirements of the centrally funded residual all-Wales programme, the funds available to health authorities will increase to £24·5 million. Authorities will also, as before, retain receipts from the sale of surplus land and buildings.

The revenue and capital resources available to individual authorities in 1987-88 will be as shown in the following table. These allocations do not take into account further sums which will be made available following decisions on centrally funded developments for the coming year. These will be announced shortly.

	Revenue Element of Allocation £ million	Capital Element of Allocation £ million
Clwyd	88·290	4·086
East Dyfed	55·001	1·831
Pembrokeshire	20·201	0·868
Gwent	106·242	4·277
Gwynedd	52,865	1·501
Mid Glamorgan	124·868	4·680
Powys	24·912	0·885
South Glamorgan	144·988	2·245
West Glamorgan	92·779	4·079

Welsh Language

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the specific Welsh language projects which he has funded since 1979 under section 21 of the Education Act 1980; and what plans he has to fund further such projects.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is in the following tables. Applications for support in 1987-88 are currently under consideration.

Education Act 1980: Section 21 Grants for Welsh Language Education
Local Education Authorities

Clwyd	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Awarded 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Athrawon Bro	8,650	62,253	60,600	68,350	45,000	53,000	58,000	355,853
2. INSET	9,240	5,000	5,000	6,210	7,000	7,000	7,500	46,950
3. Purchase of Welsh medium material	8,910	4,975	—	—	—	—	—	13,885
4. Production and printing of teaching material in Welsh	2,455	4,453	4,453	4,567	—	—	—	15,928
5. Adaption for Welsh medium teaching of Clwyd French Certificate Scheme	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	1,000
6. Immersion courses in Welsh for pupils at Urdd camps	1,800	1,200	—	2,100	3,000	6,000	5,000	19,100

Clwyd	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Awarded 1986-87 £	Total £
7. Purchase of language learning equipment	1,620	820	—	—	—	—	—	2,440
8. Purchase of reprographic equipment	8,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	8,000
9. Employment of trainee operator for offset litho equipment	700	5,630	5,630	—	—	—	—	11,960
10. Teaching Welsh to adults	4,000	17,660	26,550	8,000	10,000	10,000	23,000	99,210
11. Mousematics project	—	7,000	7,000	9,987	—	—	—	23,987
12. Resources for small rural schools	—	660	—	—	—	—	—	660
13. Bilingual nursery education project	—	—	9,000	20,600	21,000	20,000	25,000	95,600
14. Joint computer project with Gwynedd—NEWI	—	—	—	10,000	15,000	20,000	20,000	65,000
15. To publish Welsh graded objectives course—'Clebran'—for first year pupils in secondary schools	—	—	—	—	10,000	12,000	2,000	24,000
16. Provision of Welsh books for schools	—	—	—	—	5,000	—	—	5,000
17. Welsh plays in schools	—	—	—	—	1,000	1,500	}	11,500
Welsh performances by 'Outreach' theatre							9,000 }
18. Residential courses—Cam Ymlaen	—	—	—	—	720	700	950	2,370
19. NEWI Production of microcomputer programmes	—	—	—	—	12,500	—	—	12,500
20. Integration of non-Welsh speaking pupils in rural schools	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	}
Welsh language education for minority groups in mixed language rural schools	—	—	—	3,350	3,350	3,000	7,000 }	18,700
21. Welsh course for hospital staff: NEWI	—	—	—	—	—	3,220	4,500	7,720
22. Production of dramatised excerpts on tape of Welsh language books	—	—	—	—	—	1,050	—	1,050
23. Bilingual schools Llysfasi agricultural education	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	6,000
24. TVEI Humanities related Welsh medium experimental modules	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,500	3,500
Total	46,375	109,651	[1]118,233	[2]133,164	133,570	139,470	171,450	851,913

[1] Supplementary grant to allow for inflation +£5,250 (Total 123,483).
[2] Added allocation £18,527 (Total £151,691).

Dyfed	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Athrawon Bro	9,575	51,425	61,690	64,300	70,000	76,944	80,000	413,934
2. Purchase of Welsh language teaching materials	27,120	6,000	2,500	—	—	—	—	35,620
3. Language courses for pupils at Urdd camps	5,000	13,068	8,000	8,000	8,000	8,000	8,000	58,068
4. Language courses for adults	850	1,800	2,000	10,000	10,000	10,800	11,000	46,450
5. Video films for in-service training in Welsh	—	12,515	—	—	—	—	—	12,515
6. INSET	—	8,005	8,500	5,000	2,750	3,056	—	27,311
7. Portable language development unit	—	5,400	—	—	—	—	—	5,400
8. Equipment to enable development of computer programmes in Welsh	—	2,742	—	—	—	—	—	2,742
9. Video equipment for drama in Welsh at Felinfach Theatre	—	1,282	—	—	—	—	—	1,282
10. Training scheme for non-Welsh speaking teachers	—	—	—	—	—	7,500	10,000	17,500
11. Welsh by means of drama (Cwmbran and Coracle Theatre)	—	—	—	—	—	25,000	28,000	53,000
12. Language Centres for Newcomers	—	—	—	—	—	7,500	15,000	22,500
Total	42,545	102,237	82,690	[1]87,300	90,750	138,800	152,000	696,322

[1] Added allocation £17,000 (total £104,300).

Gwent	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Full-time tutor organiser for adult courses	—	—	11,350	19,150	20,100	13,073	19,500	83,173
2. Books, materials and equipment for use in adult education service and schools	7,500	8,250	10,000	5,000	3,000	9,500	—	43,250
3. In-service training for teachers of adults	—	—	—	—	—	1,000	3,000	4,000
4. Support for the development of additional Welsh Medium Units	—	—	—	—	—	35,660	50,000	85,660
Total	7,500	8,250	21,350	[1]24,150	23,100	59,233	72,500	216,083

[1] Added allocation £8,845 (total £32,995).

Gwynedd	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Printing of Welsh language course materials	4,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,000
2. INSET	1,200	3,200	2,000	—	5,000	4,500	—	15,900
3. Language courses for pupils	12,000	—	—	—	—	—	—	12,000
4. Language courses for adults	7,240	5,500	4,692	5,383	1,500	2,500	8,000	34,815
5. Language learning equipment	6,383	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,383
6. Publication of booklet describing County's bilingual education policy	3,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,500
7. Welsh language programme for children newly arrived in Gwynedd	—	50,000	—	—	—	—	—	50,000
8. Teaching materials for Welsh as a first or second language in schools	20,300	30,250	12,000	5,000	—	—	—	67,550
9. Welsh language adviser for infant newcomers to Gwynedd	—	8,700	36,200	7,000	12,500	—	—	64,400
10. Primary sector projects (a) Welsh books for schools (b) pupils and teacher booklets for second language courses	—	6,000	—	—	—	—	—	6,000
11. Purchase of books for Ysgol Y Creuddyn	—	4,000	—	—	—	—	—	4,000
12. INSET for adult education tutors running intensive Welsh courses	—	3,500	—	—	—	—	—	3,500
13. Initial work to provide a basis for producing music texts in Welsh	—	2,500	—	—	—	—	—	2,500
14. Preparation and publication of Welsh medium booklets for use in secondary schools—Cwrs y Bont I, II, III	—	2,000	—	—	—	2,000	—	4,000
15. Language masters for use in the primary sector	—	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	1,000
16. Production of text book for the National Nursery Examination Board course in Welsh	—	750	—	—	—	—	—	750
17. Crash/residential courses	—	—	40,000	—	—	—	—	40,000
18. Teaching Welsh to children and particularly to non-Welsh speaking newcomers into Gwynedd	—	—	—	40,000	—	—	—	40,000
19. Courses through the medium of Welsh at Colleges of Further Education	—	—	—	20,000	21,500	—	—	41,500
(a) Preparation of shorthand and audio tapes in Welsh for use on secretarial courses in Colleges of Further Education	—	5,600	4,550	—	—	—	—	10,150
(b) Materials for teaching Agricultural Science	—	—	—	—	—	9,445	9,000	18,445
(c) Office Practice Course	—	—	—	—	—	7,050	1,800	8,850
(d) Catering Course	—	—	—	—	—	1,450	—	1,450
(e) Teaching materials/translator for Home Economics Department	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	—	8,000
(f) Preparing teaching resources for a bilingual NNEB course	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	7,500	15,500
(g) Bilingual Business Studies course—Coleg Gwynedd	—	—	—	—	—	—	12,000	12,000
(h) Building Courses	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,500	4,500
(i) Preparation of Teaching Materials for Social Services Courses	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,000	5,000
20. Pre-school liaison officer—special education	—	—	—	14,503	—	—	—	14,503
21. Preparation of material for word processor (Edword)	—	—	—	7,550	8,370	20,000	—	35,920
22. Adapting computer software—in conjunction with Clwyd	—	—	—	10,000	15,000	20,000	20,000	65,000
23. Athrawon Bro	—	—	—	—	31,000	40,000	48,000	119,000
24. Theatre in Education	—	—	—	—	10,000	10,000	5,000	25,000
25. Computer appreciation course for secondary schools	—	—	—	—	6,000	4,419	—	10,419
26. Experimental centres for newcomers	—	—	—	—	10,000	19,000	15,000	44,000
27. Publication of Volume "Britain in the Tudor Age"	—	—	—	—	—	1,500	—	1,500
28. To prepare materials to meet Mode III examination need	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	—	2,000
29. Publication of material 'Welsh in Work and Leisure'	—	—	—	—	—	1,900	—	1,900
30. Learning through Science (5-13)	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,500	7,500
31. Development of potential of 'Logo Chip' in Welsh	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,000	7,000

Gwynedd	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
32. Adaptation of Curwen Books (1, 2 & 3)	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,500	5,500
33. Special Needs Resources in Welsh	—	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	8,000
Totals	54,623	123,000	99,442	[1]109,436	120,870	161,764	163,800	832,935

[1] Added Allocation £17,520; Total £126,956

Mid Glamorgan	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. INSET	38,416	59,731	65,000	63,000	2,500	2,500	3,000	234,147
2. Purchase of Welsh medium teaching materials	11,000	9,679	2,500	—	—	5,000	—	28,179
3. Extension of courses for adults	—	—	3,500	3,860	5,000	5,500	6,000	23,860
4. Welsh learners Saturday Club	—	—	—	1,180	—	—	—	1,180
5. Athrawon Bro	—	—	—	—	48,850	81,620	86,000	216,470
6. Preparation of resources for Welsh medium comprehensive schools	—	—	—	—	2,000	2,000	—	4,000
7. Ysgol Gyfun Cwm Rhymni: Taped lessons Pilot Scheme	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	9,500	15,500
8. Theatre in Education	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	2,250	4,250
9. Development Officer for Welsh as a second language (Youth and Adult)	—	—	—	—	—	16,000	—	16,000
10. Translation of fire prevention material (Welephant)	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	—	2,000
11. Teacher in the community	—	—	—	—	—	—	18,000	18,000
12. Summer Courses—Ysgol Gyfun Llanhari	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,000	3,000
Total	49,416	69,410	71,000	[1]68,040	58,350	122,620	127,750	566,586

[1] Added allocation £15,660 (Total £83,700).

Powys	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Athrawon Bro	5,342	23,289	25,375	28,742	42,000	45,000	51,000	220,748
2. INSET	1,554	2,556	—	—	—	—	—	4,110
3. Language courses for pupils at Urdd camps	3,648	8,689	5,000	9,150	8,000	8,000	10,000	52,487
4. Language courses for adults	4,908	409	—	—	10,000	10,850	11,000	37,167
5. Purchase of language materials and equipment	6,127	4,100	—	—	—	—	—	10,227
6. Development of Welsh medium education	—	7,559	15,601	15,336	—	—	—	38,496
7. Development of second language handbooks to establish threshold levels (primary schools)	—	—	—	—	—	800	—	800
8. Theatre in Education	—	—	—	—	—	12,000	10,000	22,000
9. Agriculture Welsh course (practical and theory)	—	—	—	—	—	950	—	950
Total	21,579	46,602	45,976	[1]53,228	60,000	77,600	82,000	386,985

[1] Added allocation £9,330 (Total £62,558).

South Glamorgan	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Provision of Welsh language text and reference books	25,205	12,000	8,000	5,000	3,000	3,000	—	56,205
2. INSET	8,330	10,115	—	—	—	—	—	18,445
3. Residential language course for 6th form pupils	3,570	4,620	4,500	5,500	3,500	5,000	—	26,690
4. Language courses for adults	2,900	1,400	1,420	2,000	2,000	2,000	2,000	13,720
5. Provision of language equipment for schools	—	6,400	—	—	—	—	—	6,400
6. Development of secondary school course in Welsh	—	1,500	2,500	3,000	—	—	—	7,000
7. Establishment of a Welsh language resources unit at Mynachdy Road teachers centre	—	1,200	—	—	—	—	—	1,200

South Glamorgan	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
8. Technical equipment to assist in the education of ESN(s) pupils	—	300	—	—	—	—	—	300
9. Drafting secretary for project (6) development of secondary school course in Welsh	—	—	3,200	—	—	—	—	3,200
10. Adaptation of a mathematics course	—	—	7,000	6,500	—	—	—	13,500
11. Appointment of a peripatetic remedial teacher	—	—	10,800	11,560	11,800	12,500	13,000	59,660
12. Provisions of visual aids and resources for the teaching of Welsh history	—	—	1,750	—	—	—	—	1,750
13. Adaption of a science course	—	—	—	2,000	—	—	—	2,000
14. Assistance for pupils to attend Dyffryn and Urdd language camps	—	—	—	6,000	6,000	6,000	5,000	23,000
15. Athrawon Bro	—	—	—	—	15,000	33,250	50,000	98,250
16. Computer Programme for infants	—	—	—	—	10,000	12,000	—	22,000
17. Courses for teachers—oral ability course	—	—	—	—	1,500	1,800	1,500	4,800
18. Welsh language teaching materials (preparation)	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	—	6,000
19. Translation SPMG Mathematics	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	—	2,000
20. Teaching and use of calculators in primary schools (publication of translated work)	—	—	—	—	—	700	—	700
21. Translation of mathematical skills	—	—	—	—	—	300	—	300
22. New Mode 3 - O level exams	—	—	—	—	—	—	2,000	2,000
23. Science Materials—primary schools	—	—	—	—	—	—	4,000	4,000
Total	40,005	37,535	39,170	[1]41,560	52,800	84,550	77,500	373,120

[1] Added allocation £15,330. Total £56,860.

West Glamorgan	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. INSET (Primary)	43,000	67,860	67,860	70,694	—	—	2,000	251,414
2. Language course for pupils at Urdd camps	11,150	—	—	—	—	—	—	11,150
3. Provision of Welsh language books and materials	—	9,100	—	—	—	—	—	9,100
4. Athrawon Bro	—	—	11,960	12,236	64,000	90,533	100,000	278,729
5. Courses for teachers of Welsh	—	—	—	—	2,000	—	—	2,000
6. West Glamorgan Institute—Welsh for parents-Sadwrn Siarad	—	—	—	—	1,874	6,500 +c/f 4,046	7,000	19,420
7. Establishment of a Welsh language centre	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	—	8,000
8. Theatre in Education Programme	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	12,000	20,000
9. Development-improved presentation of Welsh language primary course(s)	—	—	—	—	—	350	—	350
10. Margam Park—educational resources programme	—	—	—	—	—	5,000	—	5,000
Total	54,150	76,960	79,820	[1]82,930	67,874	122,429	121,000	605,163

[1] Added allocation £13,499 (total £96,429).

All Local Education Authorities

	Grant awarded 1980-81 £	Grant awarded 1981-82 £	Grant awarded 1982-83 £	Grant awarded 1983-84 £	Grant awarded 1984-85 £	Grant awarded 1985-86 £	Grant offered 1986-87 £	Total £
Grand Total	316,193	573,645	557,681	[1]599,808	607,314	906,466	968,000	4,529,107

[1] Added allocation £115,681 (total £715,489).

Local Authority Higher and Further Education Organisations

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
North East Wales Institute of Higher Education
1. Production of Welsh Language materials.	1,150	—	6,000	1,200	[1]	[1]	[1]	8,350
2. "Cam Ymlaen" residential course	—	900	900	900	[1]	[1]	[1]	2,700
3. Welsh courses for parents	—	—	750	850	[1]	[1]	[1]	1,600
4. INSET for teachers and adult classes	—	—	700	—	[1]	[1]	[1]	700
Total	1,150	900	8,350	2,950	—	—	—	13,350
Polytechnic of Wales
1. Intensive Welsh course (support for student parents)	—	1,425	3,350	3,400	3,350	3,750	4,000	19,275
2. Teacher Researcher to extend Welsh language provision in Mid-Glamorgan Valleys	—		4,580	5,000	—	—	—	9,580
3. Development of materials for mother and children learning Welsh	—		1,900	3,000	—	—	—	4,900
4. Tutor for in-service intensive Welsh course (joint with Mid-Glamorgan County Council)	—	—	—	11,236	—	—	—	11,236
5. Investigations into examinations for adult Welsh learners	925	4,033	2,876	—	—	—	—	7,834
6. Training programme for non-Welsh speaking parents	—	—	—	—	—	8,000	9,500	17,500
7. Development of distance learning programme for adults	—	—	—	—	—	10,336	—	10,336
Total	925	5,458	12,706	22,636	3,350	22,086	13,500	80,661
College of Librarianship Wales
1. The design of microcomputer programmes and games in Welsh	—	—	—	—	8,500	10,000	10,000	28,500
Total	—	—	—	—	8,500	10,000	10,000	28,500
Normal College Bangor
1. Development of Welsh language teaching materials	3,057	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,057
2. In-service training of teachers in Welsh —continuation of after care service, Cynllun y Porth	—	3,000	3,000	4,000	7,000	7,105	8,500	32,605
3. Extended employment of Development Officer to complete the Schools Council Project—Cynllun y Porth	—	916	—	—	—	—	—	916
Total	3,057	3,916	3,000	4,000	7,000	7,105	8,500	36,578
West Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education
1. Welsh for parents	—	946	3,500	3,500	[2]	[2]	[2]	7,946
2. Audio visual equipment and tapes	—	4,123	—	—	[2]	[2]	[2]	4,123
Total	—	5,069	3,500	3,500	—	—	—	12,069
Grand Total	5,132	15,343	27,556	33,086	[3]18,850	[4]39,191	[4]32,000	171,158
Total Local Education Authorities					[3]617,664	[4]945,657	[4]1,000,000
Total Local Education Authorities and Local Education Authority Colleges								4,700,265

[1] Included with Clwyd LEA.
[2] Included with West Glamorgan LEA.
[3] Total LEA for 1984-85: includes Normal College and Polytechnic of Wales.
[4] Total LEA for 1985-86, 1986-87: includes Normal College, Polytechnic of Wales and College of Librarianship.

Welsh Joint Education Committee

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
1. Welsh Text Book Schemes	104,500	50,273	133,551	119,047	[1]230,000
a. WJEC Scheme						a. 48,100	a. 50,000	1,040,471
b. Aberystwyth Project Material						b. 135,000	b. 170,000
2. Equipment for the Examinations Department to prepare examination papers in Welsh	10,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	10,500
3. Officer for teaching of Welsh to adults	—	—	—	15,986	16,000	32,000	18,000	125,953
4. Second language research officer (Secondary)	—	—	—	13,967	14,000		16,000
5. Support for the development of Welsh medium software	—	—	—	—	—	—	23,000	23,000
Total	115,000	50,273	133,551	149,000	[1]260,000	215,100	277,000	1,199,924

[1] Includes £60,000 additional allocation.

Higher Education Organisations

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
University college, Cardiff—extra mural department
1. Welsh course for parents in Gwent	—	—	—	3,000	—	—	—	3,000
2. Tutor for the training of adult teachers in Welsh (liaison with South Glamorgan LEA)	—	3,000	—	—	—	—	—	3,000
Total	—	3,000	—	3,000	—	—	—	6,000
University college of Cardiff—department of education
1. In-service training for science teachers from Welsh medium secondary schools	—	452	491	520	—	—	750	2,213
Total	—	452	491	520	—	—	750	2,213
University college Swansea—extra mural department
1. Progression in course teaching suitable for a university department of adult and continuing education	3,650	5,263	6,300	6,600	5,000	6,000	7,000	39,813
Total	3,650	5,263	6,300	6,600	5,000	6,000	7,000	39,813
University college of Wales Aberystwyth—extra mural department
1. Teaching of Welsh to adults	3,400	5,913	7,000	8,000	8,500	9,000	9,000	50,813
Total	3,400	5,913	7,000	8,000	8,500	9,000	9,000	50,813
University college of Wales Aberystwyth—registry
1. Development of academic techiques related to the teaching of Welsh to adults (Welsh Department)	2,810	10,392	17,600	17,636	[1]13,750	10,000	11,000	83,188
2. Appointment of officer to collect and edit teaching materials in Welsh	—	5,965	—	—	—	—	—	5,965
3. Development of Welsh language teaching materials (Resource Centre—Education Department)	5,530	—	13,730	20,844	[1]14,692	42,000	35,000	131,796
4. Welsh/French, French/Welsh Dictionary	—	—	—	—	5,150	5,150	—	10,300
Total	8,340	16,357	31,330	38,480	33,592	57,150	46,000	231,249

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
University college of North Wales—extra mural department
1. Programme of instruction for adult learners of Welsh	3,075	8,000	9,000	11,000	12,000	10,000	20,000	73,075
2. Purchase of language laboratory equipment	—	2,750	—	—	—	—	—	2,750
3. Extension of Welsh language provision for adults in West Clwyd	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	—	6,000
4. Welsh courses for Gwynedd AHA staff	—	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	6,000
Total	3,075	10,750	9,000	11,000	12,000	16,000	26,000	87,825
University college of North Wales—Department of social theory and institutions
1. Establishment of Practice Centre to adapt Social Work Education and Training	—	—	—	—	5,000	12,000	12,000	29,000
Total	—	—	—	—	5,000	12,000	12,000	29,000
University college of North Wales—education department
1. Implementation of a Welsh version of LOGO	—	—	—	—	—	2,400	—	2,400
Total	—	—	—	—	—	2,400	—	2,400
University of Wales registry
1. Residential course to provide post-qualifying educational opportunities for social workers through the medium of Welsh	—	615	—	—	—	—	—	615
2. Purchase of language learning equipment	10,835	—	—	—	—	—	—	10,835
3. Purchase of reprographic equipment	3,800	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,800
4. Purchasing of a word processor for the Welsh Teaching Centre	—	—	—	—	4,500	—	—	4,500
5. Short resiidential course to give paramedical workers an educational opportunity through the medium of Welsh	—	—	—	860	—	—	1,500	2,360
6. Full-time term's course for learners in Cardiff	—	—	—	1,680	—	—	—	1,680
7. Transfer of teaching materials to word processor	—	—	—	—	—	370	—	370
8. Establishment of intensive (continuation) course for learners	—	—	—	—	—	515	1,000	1,515
9. Full time course for learners (beginners)	—	—	—	—	—	1,635	1,000	2,635
10. Purchase of new cassette copying system	—	—	—	—	—	980	—	980
Total	14,635	615	—	2,540	4,500	3,500	3,500	29,290
Trinity college, Carmathen
1. Preparation and production of classroom materials in religious education for the junior age group	—	—	—	5,973	—	—	—	5,973
2. Second language teaching aids—language games	—	2,800	8,000	—	—	—	—	10,800
3. In-service training of bilingual LEA teachers on curriculum development and production of necessary materials	—	6,000	—	—	—	—	—	6,000
4. Microcomputers for use in Welsh medium primary schools	—	—	—	—	—	16,200	17,500	33,700
Total	—	8,800	8,000	5,973	—	16,200	17,500	56,473
North Staffordshire polytechnic
1. Survey of attitudes of past students from Welsh medium secondary schools	—	576	—	—	—	—	—	576
Total	—	576	—	—	—	—	—	576

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
Cardigan technical college
1. Provision of language laboratory equipment	—	6,500	—	—	—	—	—	6,500
Total	—	6,500	—	—	—	—	—	6,500
Carmarthen technical college
1. Provision of language laboratory equipment	—	6,500	—	—	—	—	—	6,500
Total	—	6,500	—	—	—	—	—	6,500
Gwynedd further education colleges
1. Provision of books and equipment at four further education colleges	—	6,000	—	—	—	—	—	6,000
Total	—	6,000	—	—	—	—	—	6,000
Ystrad Mynach college
1. Provision of books and equipment for further education students	—	5,444	—	—	—	—	—	5,444
Total	—	5,444	—	—	—	—	—	5,444
Radnor college of further education
1. Provision of language laboratory equipment	—	15,249	—	—	—	—	—	15,249
Total	—	15,249	—	—	—	—	—	15,249
South Glamorgan institute of higher education
1. Provision of books, equipment and materials for the teaching of Welsh	—	2,365	—	—	—	—	—	2,365
Total	—	2,365	—	—	—	—	—	2,365
Grand total: Higher education organisations	33,100	93,784	62,121	76,113	68,592	122,250	121,750	577,710

[1] Includes £3,750 additional allocation.
[2] Includes £4,000 additional allocation.

Other organisations

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
Schools Council Committee for Wales
1. Diagnostic and teaching materials for slow learners	—	5,000	30,023	29,758	—	—	—	64,781
Total	—	5,000	30,023	29,758	—	—	—	64,781
Workers Educational Association North Wales District
1. "Practice your Welsh" classes	—	—	—	3,450	3,500	3,500	3,000	13,450
Total	—	—	—	3,450	3,500	3,500	3,000	13,450
Gwynedd Health Authority
Teaching Packs
1. "My Body" Project
2. Alcohol Education			10,000	10,000	9,395			29,395

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
3 Safety Education	—	—	—	—	—	10,000	—	10,000
4 Drug Education	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,000	7,000
5 Food and Health	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,000	7,000
Total	—	—	10,000	10,000	9,395	10,000	7,000	46,395
Welsh National Centre for Religious Education
1 Production of materials for religious education in the infants and junior school and also "O" level text books for secondary schools	—	—	—	6,500	—	—	—	6,500
Total	—	—	—	6,500	—	—	—	6,500
National Scientific Association
1. Science Society Conference Scholarship (includes production of posters portraying Welsh Scientists[1])	—	12,000	—	1,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	6,000
2. Welsh software in schools	—	—	—	1,000	—	—	—	1,000
Total	—	2,000	—	2,000	1,000	1,000	1,000	7,000
Christian Education Movement in Wales
1. Preparation of pupil/teacher pack on the theme of "Discovering the Bible"	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
			5,000					5,000
National Language Unit
1. Officer for second language courses	—	—	7,391	—	—	—	—	7,391
2. Production of Welsh language course	—	4,000	—	—	—	—	—	4,000
3. Classified dictionary for the teaching of Welsh in Schools	—	2,000	—	—	—	—	—	2,000
4. Publication of Welsh language teaching materials	18,500	2,000	—	—	—	—	—	20,500
5. Equipment for preparing language courses	3,500	—	—	—	—	—	—	3,500
Total	22,000	8,000	7,391	—	—	—	—	37,391
Yr Academi Gymreig
1. English/Welsh Dictionery	—	5,000	7,000	—	—	—	—	12,000
Total	—	5,000	7,000	—	—	—	—	12,000
Welsh Books Council
1. Conversion of a van to a mobile exhibition unit for display of Welsh books	—	16,195	—	—	—	—	—	16,195
2. Equipment for the design of educational books	—	7,815	—	—	—	—	—	7,815
3. To assist with provisions of services resulting from purchase of van	—	—	5,000	—	—	—	—	5,000
4. Clwb Llyfrau Spondonics—Welsh books club	—	—	—	—	12,500	—	—	12,500
Total	—	24,010	5,000	—	12,500	—	—	41,510
Welsh National Centre for Children's Literature
1 Establishment of Centre on an independent basis; to increase the collection of Welsh books and related materials; to take measures to stimulate children's interest in Welsh books and reading	—	11,575	12,244	—	—	—	—	23,819
Total	—	11,575	12,244	—	—	—	—	23,819

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
Cyhoeddiadau Mei
1. Assistance towards publicity costs of a bi-monthly Welsh education magazine	—	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	1,000
Total	—	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	1,000
The Welsh school—London
1. Temporary assistance with the school's activities	2,200	—	—	—	5,000	—	—	7,200
Total	2,200	—	—	—	5,000	—	—	7,200
Keep Wales tidy campaign
1. Production of a Welsh language version of an environmental project for infants for use in schools	7,250	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,250
Total	7,250	—	—	—	—	—	—	7,250
Llandovery Welsh learners club
Assistance with the club's activities	200	—	—	—	—	—	—	200
Total	200	—	—	—	—	—	—	200
Council for education in world citizenship (CEWC)—Wales
1. Preparation of a Welsh language version of teaching materials developed by UNICEF illustrating water problems in developing countries	700	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	1,700
Total	700	1,000	—	—	—	—	—	1,700
Welsh industrial and maritime museum
1. Welsh language education pack	—	—	—	—	400	—	—	400
Total	—	—	—	—	400	—	—	400
Canolfan Iaith Nant Gwrtheryn
1. Teacher/researcher for centre	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	—	6,000
Total	—	—	—	—	—	6,000	—	6,000
Y Colegiwm Cymraeg
1. Translation of selected works suitable for use by 'A' level students	—	—	—	—	—	6,500	3,500	10,000
2. French Companion	—	—	—	—	—	—	2,500	2,500
Total	—	—	—	—	—	6,500	6,000	12,500
Mudiad Cymraeg Casnewydd
1. Expansion of Welsh classes for adults	—	—	—	—	150	—	—	150
Totals	—	—	—	—	150	—	—	150
Parents for Welsh medium education
1. Promoting education through the medium of Welsh	—	—	—	—	500	650	800	1,950
Total	—	—	—	—	500	650	800	1,950
Council for Sunday schools and Christian education in Wales
1. Employment of two area development officers to promote work of the Council	—	—	—	—	12,500	—	—	12,500
Total	—	—	—	—	12,500	—	—	12,500

	Grant Awarded 1980-81 £	Grant Awarded 1981-82 £	Grant Awarded 1982-83 £	Grant Awarded 1983-84 £	Grant Awarded 1984-85 £	Grant Awarded 1985-86 £	Grant Offered 1986-87 £	Total £
Schools broadcasting Council for Wales
1. Publication of support material for Welsh language radio and television series for schools	—	—	—	—	5,000	7,000	5,000	17,000
Total	—	—	—	—	5,000	7,000	5,000	17,000
Cyngor y Dysgwr
1. Part-time clerical help for National Officer	—	—	—	—	—	—	750	750
Total	—	—	—	—	—	—	750	750
School curriculum development committee
1. Gorwelion newydd/new horizons: Teaching materials for Welsh as a first language in the secondary schools	—	—	—	—	—	—	12,000	12,000
Total	—	—	—	—	—	—	12,000	12,000
David Watson and Susanne Smith
1. Welsh Database programme for use in education	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,000	5,000
Total	—	—	—	—	—	—	5,000	5,000
Grand Total	32,350	57,585	76,658	51,708	49,945	34,650	40,550	343,446
Overall total	501,775	790,630	857,567	[1]909,715	1,004,701	1,317,657	1,439,300	6,821,345

[1] Added Allocation £115,681. Total £1,025,396.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 15 December 1986

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies (Shareholders)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the workings of section 356 of the Companies Act 1985 which requires firms to supply lists of names and addresses of their shareholders; if the Government will review the workings of the section; and if he will list the firms that have made representations to him about the section.

Mr. Howard: I am aware that section 356 of the Companies Act 1985 has been used to obtain lists of shareholders in return for a nominal fee and that this has involved the companies concerned in expense and inconvenience. In a recent consultative document on the delivery of annual accounts and returns, the Department invited views by 22 December on this question. Some replies have already been received. Otherwise no representations by firms had been made to my Department this year. If the hon. Member has any suggestions, I shall be interested to study them.

Counterfeiting

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what evaluation he has made of the use by industrial and commercial counterfeiters of the United Kingdom as a base for the production and export of counterfeit goods;

(2) whether he plans to seek to amend the law on industrial and commercial counterfeiting;

(3) what recent representations he has received about industrial and commercial counterfeiting;

(4) what consultations he is having with EEC partners over the harmonisation of legislation which expressly covers the forgery or counterfeiting of a trade mark.

Mr. Pattie: The production of counterfeit goods is a covert activity on which there is no firm information. I have received representations suggesting that such production is increasing in the United Kingdom and that the forgery of a trade mark and certain related activities should be made criminal offences. These representations are being carefully considered.

Consultations with our EC partners have been undertaken in the context of the current GATT negotiations and the Community regulation on counterfeit goods which was adopted at the Internal Market Council on 1 December 1986 and which will come into force in January 1988.

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times in the past five years the authorities were unable to bring prosecutions over alleged industrial or commercial counterfeiting cases because the relevant legislation did not permit them to press charges.

Mr. Howard: This information is not readily available and its production would involve disproportionate cost.

Protective Clothing (Iran)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will withdraw the ban on sales of nuclear, biological and chemical warfare protective clothing to Iran pending a decision on the imposition of a similar ban by all European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Exports of such clothing are controlled to all destinations under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985. Decisions on applications for licences to export defence equipment to Iran and Iraq take account of the guidelines announced in the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 29 October 1985.

Iron and Steel Employees Readaption Benefits Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many payments have been made in the iron and steel employees readaption benefits scheme; how many payments are outstanding for (a) one, (b) two, (c) three or (d) more than three months; what steps are being taken to speed up payments; if all arrears of payment will be cleared by Christmas; and if Her Majesty's Government are benefiting from the interest earned on the late payment of moneys due under this scheme.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret that the information requested is not available in the form requested. I shall be writing to the hon. Member shortly.

A330 and A340 Aircraft

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last had discussions with either British Aerospace or Airbus Industrie on the A330 and A340 projects; and if he will make it his policy to make a statement on this matter to the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry last had discussions including the airbus A330 and A340 project with representatives of British Aerospace on 11 November. I had further discussions on this subject with British Aerospace on 8 December. My last discussion of the airbus A330 and A340 project with representatives of Airbus Industrie took place on 5 September. The House will be informed on the question of British Aerospace's application for launch aid in respect of the proposed airbus A330 and A340 programme as soon as a decision is reached. I would expect this to be during the first quarter of next year.

Radio Laser

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he proposes to take in respect of the resumed broadcasting to the east of England by the offshore Radio Laser on 576 metres.

Mr. Pattie: We are concerned about the re-emergence of Radio Laser which operates from a ship anchored in international waters. It is an offence under the Marine Etc Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967 for anyone in the United Kingdom or a British national to assist in or be involved with a broadcasting station operating from the high seas.

Prosecutions under the Act are the responsibility of the Director of Public Prosecutions to whom my Department reports any evidence it obtains on possible offenders. My Department will also continue to pursue with other European countries its efforts to fulfil our international obligation to prevent broadcasting from ships outside national territories.

Submarine Ship Lift (Libya)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when Her Majesty's Government first became aware that a submarine ship lift constructed by Anols (NEI) for the Italian company Improglio was going to Libya.

Mr. Alan Clark: The manufacturer contacted the Department of Trade and Industry in July 1985.

Libya (Defence Equipment Sales)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria whereby equipment ordered for Libya is designated as for the purposes of defence; and if he will make a statement on the number of occasions on which permission to supply the Libyan Government with such equipment has been refused.

Mr. Alan Clark: Goods subject to export control are specified in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985 (S.I. 1985, No. 849), as amended. Items subject to control as military goods are listed in group I, part II, of schedule I of the order. Since March 1985 seven applications for licences to export such equipment to Libya have been refused.

Lawnmower Noise

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the departmental inspectors who will be appointed in terms of section 7 of the Lawnmower (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations to carry out periodic inspections of lawnmower noise will have responsibility for inspection in the Isle of Man and Channel Isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Lawnmower (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations give the Secretary of State powers to carry out periodic checks in Great Britain. The powers do not extend to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements he is making for residents of the Isle of Man and the Channel Isles to have their lawnmowers tested under the Lawnmower (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Lawnmower (Harmonisation of Noise Emission Standards) Regulations do not apply to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. However, I would point out to my hon. Friend that it is not necessary under these regulations to make arrangements for any residents in Great Britain apart from manufacturers, their agents or importers to have their lawnmowers noise tested.

Leyland Vehicles

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has discussed with the Economic Community Commission the Government's plans for Leyland Bus and Leyland Trucks.

Mr. Channon: As I told the House on 2 December, negotiations are proceeding for the sale of Leyland Bus and various options are under consideration regarding the future of Leyland Trucks. In this connection I have now notified the Commission under article 93(3) of the treaty of Rome that, when decisions are taken, the Government propose to deal with the historic debt in these companies and with any necessary restructuring costs.

The Government will take forward this notification with the Commission in the light of progress on the commercial negotiations. I will keep the House informed.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken by the Export Credits Guarantee Department to limit its exposure to interest rate movements arising under interest support agreements entered into with banks involved in the fixed rate export finance scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The fixed rate export finance (FREF) scheme enables medium and long term finance to be provided in support of United Kingdom capital goods exports at fixed interest rates. This is achieved by ECGD's undertaking to make up to the banks any shortfall between the fixed rates and their floating rate cost of funds plus a margin. ECGD's obligations under these arrangements are open-ended.

In recent months ECGD has fixed its interest rate exposure on a substantial proportion of its liabilities under the FREF scheme by recourse to the commercial interest rate swap market. To date, the Department has hedged its interest rate exposure in relation to US$2 billion of loans guaranteed under the foreign currency FREF scheme. Although the Department's current swap programme is now complete, further hedging operations may be undertaken at some stage in the future.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Detention and Search

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the statistics for each division of the Metropolitan police for searches made, arrests made, road checks made and persons detained under part IV of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, persons detained under a warrant of further detention and intimate searches in the same form for each division as are published in the Home Office statistical bulletin and such periods of 1986 for which statistics are currently available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 28 October 1986, at column 87. When the annual figures become available I will place in the Library the divisional breakdown for the Metropolitan police.

Murder (Clear-up Rate)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the police clear-up rate for murder cases for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In cases of homicide it is not possible in the absence of a court decision to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide. In England and Wales in 1985 the ratio of offences of homicide cleared up to offences of homicide recorded in the same year was 96 per cent. Some offences are recorded and cleared up in different years. Statistics of homicides recorded and cleared up are published annually in chapter 2 of the Cmnd. Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales".

Maxwell Fyfe Directive

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has amended or has any plans to amend the Maxwell Fyfe directive of 1952.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Sunday Race Meetings

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent considerations he has given to the introduction of limited Sunday race meetings.

Mr. Hurd: I recently met representatives of the Jockey Club and the chairman of the Horserace Totalisator Board to hear their views on Sunday racing and betting, and I now await the report of the working party set up by the Jockey Club. In a speech at York on 9 December I mentioned my personal support for the principle of Sunday racing, but emphasised that this would in practice require a change in the law, and that much preparation for such a change would be needed.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the efficiency and workings of his Department's accounting and financial management system in relation to the funding of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The efficiency and effectiveness of the accounting and financial management systems is regularly examined as part of the process of financial planning monitoring and control.

Racially Motivated Attacks

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on combating the incidence of racially motivated attacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the Government's reply, published last week (Cmnd. 45), to the recent report of the Home Affairs Committee on racial attacks and harassment. We continue to give full support to the police and other local agencies in their efforts to combat racial attacks.

Visitors' Visas

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors to the United Kingdom, holding a visitor's visa, have been stripped and searched at terminals 3 and 4 at Heathrow airport, by immigration staff, in the current year to date.

Mr. Waddington: None.

Homosexual Acts

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on lowering the age of consent for homosexual acts to 16 years of age, and from whom, in the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have received numerous representations on the age of consent for homosexual acts in the last five years. The number of these which specifically propose or oppose reduction in the age of consent to 16 could be ascertained only at disproportionate cost. We have no plans to introduce legislation to change the age of consent.

Young Offenders

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) males and (b) females under the age of 17 years were remanded in custody in jails at the latest available date;

(2) if he will list by remand jail the number of juveniles held in custody at the latest available date.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information is given in the table.

Prisoners aged under 17 held in remand centres and local prisons in England and Wales on 30 September 1986; by establishment, sex and type of prisoner

Number[1]

Establishment	Untried		Convicted unsentenced		Sentenced		Total
	Males	Females	Males	Females	Males	Females	Males	Females
Remand centres
Ashford	2	—	—	—	—	—	2	—
Brockhill	14	—	9	—	1	—	24	—
Cardiff	1	—	1	—	—	—	2	—
Chelmsford	—	—	1	—	—	—	1	—
Dorchester	1	—	—	—	1	—	2	—
Exeter	7	—	—	—	—	—	7	—
Glen Parva	7	—	3	—	4	—	14	—
Hull	14	—	6	—	11	—	31	—
Latchmere House	30	—	5	—	7	—	42	—

Establishment	Untried		Convicted unsentenced		Sentenced		Total
	Males	Females	Males	Females	Males	Females	Males	Females
Low Newton	16	—	2	—	13	1	31	1
Manchester	11	—	—	—	—	—	11	—
Norwich	3	—	—	—	2	—	5	—
Pucklechurch	2	—	1	—	—	—	3	—
Risley	8	—	3	—	1	—	12	—
Swansea	1	—	—	—	—	—	1	—
Winchester	2	—	—	—	1	—	3	—
Local prisons	3	—	1	—	20	—	24	—
All remand centres and local prisons	122	—	32	—	61	1	215	1

[1] Figures held centrally are approximate; checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

Iranian Nationals

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice or representations he has received from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in connection with the return to Iran of Iranian nationals in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Following the meetings held by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and myself with the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. Hocke, on 28 October, I have received a letter from UNHCR's representative in London, Mr. Volfing, taking up the question of Iranian asylum seekers in this country to which I shall be replying shortly.

The Government are continuing to respond generously to Iranians who have reason to fear return to Iran. However, we do not accept and have never accepted that all Iranians should be allowed to remain here regardless of their circumstances. Liability to conscription is not recognised under the United Nations convention on refugees as a basis for refugee status and we do not regard it as grounds for the grant of exceptional leave. Nevertheless, we are willing to look at individual cases together with any evidence that Iranians returning from abroad are being treated more harshly than other conscripts.

Mr. Stephen Beaufoy

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 14 November concerning Mr. Stephen Beaufoy of Coventry.

Mr. Waddington: A reply was sent on 12 December.

Court Escort Scrutiny

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take on the recommendation in the report of the court escort scrutiny for changes in the statutory provisions governing remand in custody pending summary trial or committal.

Mr. Hurd: A consultation document is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Vote Office and in the Library. The document describes the existing statutory arrangements and the proposals made in the report of the court escort scrutiny, and invites comments by 31 January 1987 on possible changes in the statutory provisions.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Mr. William McCrae (Death)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland which police forces other than the Northern Constabulary were involved in the investigations into the death of Mr. William McCrae in April 1985; at what stage they became involved; and at whose invitation.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The investigation into the death of Mr. William McCrae was carried out by officers of Northern Constabulary. No other police forces were involved in the investigation of the death except insofar as to assist in obtaining statements of witnesses residing outwith the Northern Constabulary area.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland at what stage and at whose invitation the special branch was involved in the investigation into the death of Mr. William McCrae in April 1985.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Special Branch was not involved in the investigation into the death of Mr. William McCrae.

PRIME MINISTER

Security Service (Superannuation)

56. Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the superannuation arrangements of retired members of the security service.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 4 December at column 728.

Financial Management Initiative

Sir Philip Holland asked the Prime Minister whether the financial management initiative, in respect of non-departmental public bodies which was set out in the report published by the Cabinet Office in collaboration with the Treasury financial management unit in November 1984, remains on course for the main programme to be completed by all Departments in the life of the present Parliament and not later than April 1987; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Following the financial management unit's report, I announced in November 1984 a programme of work aimed at producing progressive value for money improvements in non-departmental public bodies. By April 1986 departments had completed reviews of financial management in approximately half of all executive bodies and we are on course to complete the main programme of work by April 1987.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if a copy of the Solicitor-General's letter of 6 January to the then Secretary of State for Defence was shown to her chief press secretary before officials from the Department of Trade and Industry contacted her Office about bringing the letter into the public domain.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 17 November at cols. 49 and 50.

Libya

Mr. O'Neill asked the Prime Minister what arrangements exist between the Department of Trade and Industry and the Ministry of Defence for the screening of contracts for Libya with possible military applications.

The Prime Minister: The Department of Trade and Industry seeks the advice of the Ministry of Defence on all export licence applications for military equipment as specified in group I of part II of schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985 as amended; and on all applications for licences to export other controlled goods to a military end user.

State Security

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 27 November, Official Report, columns 299 and 300, why she will not refer to the Security Commission the matters published in the magazine Lobster by Robin Ramsey and Stephen Dorrell in respect of action taken by the security services against Her Majesty's Government from 1974 to 1976; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing furher to add to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 27 November 1986, at cols. 299 and 300, or to the points made by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 3 December 1986, at col. 941.

GCSE (Devon)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister whether she will now update the information given in her letter of 22 July to the hon. Member for Tiverton as to central Government finance for books, equipment and other costs incurred in introducing the general certificate of secondary education in the county of Devon, to be paid before the end of the present financial year, and broken down as between payments by the Department of Education and the Manpower Services Commission, and similar information for the following financial year.

The Prime Minister: In my letter of 22 July I set out the expenditure ceiling, £277,500, for the GCSE for which education support grant (ESG) is available in this financial year to Devon local authority. That figure remains unchanged. Devon's allocation of grant from the MSC, for scientific and technological equipment, is £95,100 in this financial year.

My letter of 22 July also set out the expenditure ceiling, £197,000, for which ESG is available to Devon in the financial year 1987-88. That figure too remains unchanged. There are no plans to repeat the MSC grant scheme. However, for that financial year the Government's plans for local authority expenditure provide for specific expenditure onGCSE non-teaching costs of about £100 million, including the further phase of ESG, within total planned expenditure of £12,850 million, an increase of 18·8 per cent. in cash on plans for the current year. This should enable all authorities, including Devon, to ensure that their schools are able to meet the demands of the new examination courses.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Attorney-General if he will update the list of those prosecuted under sections 1 and 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 in the same format as in the answer given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 9 February 1985, Official Report, column 350, and to list any cases that have been prosecuted under other Official Secrets legislation.

The Attorney-General: Details of proceedings undertaken under sections 1 and 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 since 28 January 1985 set out in the manner of appendix II of the Franks report are as follows:

Section 2

(a) A civilian police employee offered confidential information from the PNC to a burglar alarm company. He was tried summarily and convicted. On appeal the Crown court upheld the conviction and a further appeal to Divisional court by way of case stated was dismissed in May 1986.

(b) A civil servant employed by the Ministry of Defence was charged with unauthorised disclosure to a Member of Parliament of certain documents in his possession. He was tried at the Central Criminal court and acquitted.

(c) A civil servant employed by the Home Office was charged with authorised disclosure of a document in his possession in his capacity as part of a team investigating alleged corruption in relation to commercial contracts. No evidence offered at trial.

Cases (b) and (c) above were listed as pending at the time of my answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 28 January 1985 at column 38.

(d) A solicitor alleged to have offered money to a police officer to disclose criminal intelligence information in relation to a client was charged with corruption and offences under section 2. Tried and acquitted after a retrial.

(e) A clerk employed in a local DHSS office imparted personal information about claims made by the husband of a local councillor to an agent of a rival political party. Pleaded guilty at Crown court. Sentenced to three months imprisonment suspended for 12 months.

(f) Four persons were prosecuted for having been concerned with the obtaining and copying of classified technical manuals to facilitate the identification of marine components. Their alleged purpose was to trade in such components with the Argentine navy. Three of the defendants were convicted and fined £400, sentenced to six months imprisonment and conditionally discharged respectively.

There are five prosecutions under section 2 of the 1911 Act presently pending before the court:

(i) Proceedings have now been instituted against the individual alleged to have procured the offence mentioned at (e) above.

(ii) Proceedings have been instituted against a former member of the Royal Military Police alleged to have retained classified documents and disclosed them to an unauthorised person.

(iii) Proceedings have been instituted against two police officers alleged to have obtained information about criminal records for unauthorised supply to a security consultant.

(iv) Proceedings have been instituted against a journalist alleged to have obtained a copy of police intelligence records relating to a known criminal.

(v) Proceedings have been instituted against two police officers alleged to have made unauthorised supply of information obtained from the police national computer about vehicle registration and criminal records.

Other Provisions

The proceedings under section 1 of the Official Secrets Acts 1911 referred to in my written answer of 28 January 1985, against eight servicemen stationed in Cyprus resulted in the acquittal of all defendants.

Two foreign agents were convicted of offences contrary to section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 at the Central Criminal court on 10 July 1986.

One person was charged with an offence contrary to section 7 of the 1920 Act but proceedings were withdrawn after I had declined to grant my fiat.

SCOTLAND

Whisky Industry

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost in the whisky industry in Scotland in each of the past seven years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figures by location.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not available, but the estimated changes in the number employed in each of the years 1978 to 1984 from each previous year, in the spirit distilling and compounding industry in Scotland are 0, −700, −2,000, −1,900, −2,100 and −1,100 respectively. Estimates of numbers employed in each year are based on the annual census of production. Estimates for 1985 and 1986 are not available.

Greenock and Port Glasgow (Unemployment)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average number of people unemployed annually in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 31 October 1986 at columns 196-7.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest unemployment figures for Greenock and Port Glasgow in the Official Report by district council ward boundary.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was as shown in the table. This information is available in the Library.

Greenock and Port Glasgow Parliamentary Constituency

Ward Name	Number of Unemployed Claimants
Belville	516
Blairmore	436
Bow	567
Broomhill	319
Clune Brae	669
Gateside	310
Gibshill	815
Greenock East Central	664
Greenock South	528
Greenock West Central	345
Greenock West End	227
Larkfield	573
Port Glasgow East	835
Port Glasgow South	664
Port Glasgow West	397
Upper Larkfield	709
Total	8,574

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish figures showing unemployment by age group in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants by age group in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was as shown in the table. This information is available in the Library.

Age Group	Number of Unemployed Claimants
under 17	177
17	377
18	391
19	374
20-24	1,675
25-29	1,145
30-34	864
35-39	802
40-44	709
45-49	689
50-54	590
55-59	669
60 and over	112
Total	8,574

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the average length of time a person spends on the unemployment register in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The table relates to unemployed claimants who had completed a period of unemployment in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency in October each year from 1983. This information is available in the Library.

Year (October)	Median Length of Unemployment (weeks)
1983	12·8
1984	13·5
1985	9·1
1986	11·5

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school leavers under the age of 18 years have never had a job since leaving school in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of school leavers under the age of 18 years, who had never had a job since leaving school, in the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency, totalled 434. This information is available in the Library.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local authority (a) the rate support grant at settlement spending assumption for 1987-88, (b) in 1986 prices the actual rate support grant aid paid in 1978-79, (c) the absolute difference between the two figures and (d) the percentage difference between the two figures for each authority.

Mr. Ancram: The figures show for each local authority the needs element of rate support grant proposed for 1987-88, the needs element paid in 1978-79 at 1986 prices, the absolute difference between the two figures and the percentage difference between the two figures for each authority. The GDP deflator is used to convert the figures for 1978-79 from cash to constant prices. The figures for 1987-88 are proposals which have still to be discussed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. Local authorities will also receive resource element to compensate for differences in rateable resources and domestic element to provide domestic rate relief.

	(1) Needs element proposed for 1987-88	(2) Needs element 1978-79 in 1986 prices	(3) Difference column (1)-(2)	(4) Percentage change Per cent.
REGIONS
Borders	31·496152	27·607927	3·888225	14·1
Central	67·632605	69·313193	−1·680588	−2·4
Dumfries	43·281554	36·371754	6·9098	19·0
Fife	89·18089	84·448342	4·732548	5·6
Grampian	134·273126	116·376434	17·896692	15·4
Highland	79·365402	70·076481	9·288921	13·3
Lothian	168·980574	191·105748	−22·125174	−11·6
Strathclyde	701·098354	738·243778	−37·145424	−5·0
Tayside	102·760163	99·843205	2·916958	2·9
ISLANDS
Orkney	9·101088	7·682173	1·418915	18·5
Shetland	10·7472	9·143642	1·603558	17·5
Western Isles	22·411306	16·555499	5·855807	35·4
DISTRICTS
Berwick	0·213835	0·311359	−0·097524	−31·3
Ettrick	0·383018	0·56636	−0·183342	−32·4
Roxburgh	0·887561	0·618276	0·269285	43·6
Tweeddale	0·166888	0·263142	−0·096254	−36·6
Clackmannan	0·549295	1·072759	−0·523464	−48·8
Falkirk	1·650467	3·211921	−1·561454	−48·6
Stirling	0·933493	1·418053	−0·48456	−34·2
Annandale	0·413507	·533122	−0·119615	−22·4
Nithsdale	0·657168	1·068997	−0·411829	−38·5
Stewarty	0·265232	0·411124	−0·145892	−35·5
Wigtown	0·34971	0·500655	0·150945	−30·1
Dunfermlin	1·485223	2·722175	−1·236952	−45·4
Kirkcaldy	1·953516	3·254813	−1·301297	−40·0
North East Fife	0·75901	1·146439	−0·387429	−33·8
Aberdeen	4·18052	5·307477	−1·126957	−21·2
Banff	0·958713	1·302544	−0·343831	−26·4
Gordon	0·80697	0·920944	−0·113974	−12·4
Kincardine	0·537904	0·748435	−0·210531	−28·1
Moray	0·977378	1·354433	−0·377055	−27·8
Badenoch	0·120125	0·17849	−0·058365	−32·7
Caithness	0·478375	0·409665	0·06871	16·8
Inverness	0·676472	0·925813	−0·249341	−26·9
Lochaber	0·284064	0·440581	−0·156517	−35·5
Nairn	0·117071	0·123999	−0·006928	−5·6
Ross and Cromarty	1·028758	0·811752	0·217006	26·7
Skye and Lewis	0·237359	0·184375	0·052984	28·7
Sutherland	0·405867	0·251016	0·154851	61·7
East Lothian	0·944896	1·078209	−0·133313	−12·4
Edinburgh	12·513104	11·179539	1·333565	11·9
Midlothian	0·936546	1·447104	−0·510558	−35·3
West Lothian	1·63173	2·177522	−0·545792	−25·1
Argyll and Bute	2·630941	1·406628	1·224313	87·0
Bearsden	0·55918	0·884824	−0·325644	−36·8
Clydebank	3·073173	1·545087	1·528086	98·9
Clydesdale	0·669933	0·853253	−0·18332	−21·5

	(1) Needs element proposed for 1987-88	(2) Needs element 1978-79 in 1986 prices	(3) Difference column (1)-(2)	(4) Percentage change Per cent.
Cumbernauld	0·724204	1·336109	−0·611905	−45·0
Cumnock	0·912041	0·750671	0·16137	21·5
Cunninghame	1·932617	2·605019	−0·672402	−25·8
Dumbarton	1·006527	1·555735	−0·549208	−35·3
East Kilbride	0·94209	1·636653	−0·694563	−42·4
Eastwood	0·638522	0·97835	−0·339828	−34·7
Glasgow	42·497882	24·259475	18·238407	75·2
Hamilton	1·237428	2·489937	−1·252509	−50·3
Inverclyde	2·453304	2·471883	−0·018579	−0·8
Kilmarnock	1·012858	1·588	−0·575142	−36·2
Kyle and Carrick	1·374805	2·182713	−0·807908	−37·0
Monklands	2·466506	2·609833	−0·143327	−5·5
Motherwell	2·354567	3·61693	−1·262363	−34·9
Renfrew	4·396435	4·886487	−0·490052	−10·0
South Kelvin	1·111105	1·591734	−0·480629	−30·2
Angus	1·084667	1·806724	−0·722057	−40·0
Dundee	5·741682	4·71791	1·023772	21·7
Perth and Kinross	1·407344	1·917441	−0·510097	−26·6
Total	1578·060000	1580·400665	−2·340665	−0·1

Urban Aid (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report all the urban aid projects in the GEAR area of Glasgow which terminate in the 1986-87 financial year, the numbers of people employed in each project, and the total value of each project.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

Project	Staff employed		Estimated value of total expenditure approved up to 1986-87
	Full time	Part time	Capital £	Current £
GEAR Home Visiting Project	2	1	650	116,250
GEAR Alcohol Information Centre	2	1	43,000	108,960
GEAR Unit for Mentally and Physically Handicapped	4	—	25,000	162,200
Daycare for the Elderly Parkhead	5	3	84,980	274,200
Trident GEAR	2	—	1,000	156,520
Boys Leader, St. Francis in the East, Youth Centre	1	—	—	62,860
Home Support/Day Care GEAR (part project)	[1]2	[1]1	—	389,400
	18	6	154,630	1,270,390

[1] Plus sessional staff.

Urban Aid Applications

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by individual local authority, the number of urban aid applications (a) approved, (b) refused and (c) still outstanding for the current year; and what percentage of each authority's total applications these figures represent.

Mr. Ancram: The information for 1986-87 is as follows:

Authority	Total	Approved		Refused		Withdrawn		Under consideration in SDD		Awaiting further information from LA
		No.	%	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%
Central RC	21	6	28	14	67	1	5	—	—	—	—
Dumfries and Galloway RC	1	—	—	1	100	—	—	—	—	—	—
Fife RC	9	4	44	5	55	—	—	—	—	—	—
Grampian RC	7	3	43	4	57	—	—	—	—	—	—
Highland RC	2	—	—	2	100	—	—	—	—	—	—
Lothian RC	9	5	55	4	44	—	—	—	—	—	—
Strathclyde RC	392	283	72	49	13	12	3	9	2	39	10
Tayside RC	21	6	26	14	67	1	5	—	—	—	—
Aberdeen DC	6	—	—	4	67	—	—	—	—	2	33
Angus DC	1	1	100	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Clydebank DC	11	3	27	8	73	—	—	—	—	—	—
Cunninghame DC	5	2	40	3	60	—	—	—	—	—	—

Authority	Total	Approved		Refused		Withdrawn		Under consideration in SDD		Awaiting further information from LA
		No.	%	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%
Dumbarton DC	10	1	10	9	90	—	—	—	—	—	—
Dundee DC	7	5	71	2	29	—	—	—	—	—	—
Falkirk DC	1	—	—	—	—	1	100	—	—	—	—
Glasgow DC	49	35	71	13	27	1	2	—	—	—	—
Hamilton DC	2	1	50	1	50	—	—	—	—	—	—
Inverclyde DC	13	3	23	10	77	—	—	—	—	—	—
Inverness DC	1	1	100	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Kilmarnock and Loudoun DC	2	2	100	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Kyle and Carrick DC	1	—	—	1	100	—	—	—	—	—	—
Monklands DC	26	7	27	19	73	—	—	—	—	—	—
Motherwell DC	2	—	—	2	100	—	—	—	—	—	—
Nithsdale DC	1	—	—	1	100	—	—	—	—	—	—
Renfrew DC	10	5	50	5	50	—	—	—	—	—	—
Stirling DC	8	3	38	5	62	—	—	—	—	—	—
West Lothian DC	5	2	40	3	60	—	—	—	—	—	—
	623	378	61	179	29	16	2	9	1	41	7

RC = Regional Council.
DC = District Council.

Chief Executive Officials

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the gross annual salary paid to the chief executive official in each of the Scottish local authorities.

Mr. Ancram: Such information is not held centrally and would best be obtained from the local authorities concerned.

Private Education

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members of the permanent secretariat of the Scottish Office have been educated privately, what percentage of the secretariat this comprises; and what are the corresponding figures for 1981.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 5 December 1986, c. 831-2]: My Department does not maintain central statistics on the schools attended by staff and the collation of information on its administration group staff from individual records could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

WALES

"Paying for Local Government"

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has considered the responses which he has received to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am placing in the Library a summary of the 118 responses received in Wales to "Paying for Local Government". It is clear that there is widespread dissatisfaction with the present domestic rating system and that a fundamental reform is needed. More than twice as many private individuals were in favour of the proposed community charge as opposed it, and no other possible alternative to rates received substantial support. Although both the Welsh Counties Committee and the Committee of Welsh District Councils have rejected the proposals, they too have acknowledged the need for change but have expressed preferences for two totally different and incompatible alternatives, neither of which would properly and fully meet the Government's objective of achieving greater accountability. Most business respondents, including the CBI (Wales), were in favour of the proposal for a unified non-domestic rate poundage. There was also considerable support for a simplification of the present grant system.

The Government plan to introduce legislation as soon as practicable to implement in Wales and England the main proposals in the Green Paper, with the intention that the new system should start in 1990.

I am grateful to all those who took the trouble to respond to the Green Paper. Many of them were concerned about the practical problems of operating the community charge. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I have today produced a document with detailed proposals for implementing the charge and a copy is being placed in the Library.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each local authority (a) the rate support grant at settlement spending assumption for 1987-88, (b) in 1986 prices the actual rate support grant paid in 1978-79, (c) the absolute difference between the two figures and (d) the percentage difference between the two figures for each authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Rate support grant figures for 1987-88 are not yet available, but we shall inform the House of our intentions for the forthcoming financial year in the near future. Details of the rate support grants paid to local authorities in 1978-79, expressed in real terms at 1986-87 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator, are given in the following table.

No valid comparisons for individual authorities can be made between the two years as different arrangements for paying grants to each class of authority apply to each year.

Rate support grants paid to Welsh local authorities

£ thousand

	1978–79
Local authority	Domestic element	Needs element	Resources element
Counties
Clwyd		56,862	—
Dyfed		59,391	—
Gwent		72,466	—
Gwynedd		42,161	—
Mid Glamorgan		92,164	—
Powys		32,567	—
South Glamorgan		67,450	—
West Glamorgan		55,346	—
Districts
Alyn & Deeside	2,675	—	6,967
Colwyn	2,283	—	6,506
Delyn	2,436	—	10,518
Glyndŵr	1,308	—	6,720
Rhuddlan	2,184	—	6,565
Wrexham Maelor	3,612	—	17,615
Carmarthen	1,350	—	8,830
Ceredigion	1,770	—	10,021
Dinefwr	832	—	6,874
Llanelli	2,057	—	12,104
Preseli	1,844	—	7,511
South Pembrokeshire	1,249	—	484
Blaenau Gwent	1,964	—	18,247
Islwyn	1,675	—	14,272
Monmouth	2,415	—	10,901
Newport	4,970	—	9,473
Torfaen	2,800	—	17,077
Aberconwy	2,052	—	7,095
Arfon	1,428	—	9,508
Dwyfor	892	—	4,082
Meirionnydd	1,146	—	3,004
Ynys Môn	2,120	—	8,939
Cynon Valley	1,393	—	15,461
Merthyr Tydfil	1,352	—	13,951
Ogwr	3,656	—	23,698
Rhondda	1,376	—	21,375
Rhymney Valley	2,594	—	23,222
Taff Ely	2,444	—	16,022
Brecknock	1,135	—	5,141
Montgomeryshire	1,346	—	6,574
Radnor	622	—	2,228
Cardiff	11,826	—	25,210
Vale of Glamorgan	4,152	—	12,566
Port Talbot	1,498	—	4,725
Lliw Valley	1,480	—	11,255
Neath	1,824	—	9,848
Swansea	6,337	—	33,465

Ambulance Personnel (Paramedical Training)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many ambulance personnel with extended paramedical training are employed by each area health authority in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This information is not held centrally.

Council Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of dwellings owned by local housing authorities in Wales; and if he will give corresponding figures for each of the last seven years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is as follows:

Estimated number of local housing authority[1] dwellings relating to December in each year

Year	Dwellings '000
1979	308
1980	306
1981	293
1982	278
1983	271
1984	267
1985	262

[1]Including new town corporations.

Note: Dwelling stock figures for 1981 to 1985 are based on the 1981 Census of Population adjusted to take account of new buildings, demolitions and changes in tenure. Figures for 1979 and 1980 are similarly based on the 1971 Census.

Public Bodies (Nominees)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of persons whom he nominates to various public bodies and authorities in Wales; and how many of these posts are currently filled by women.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On 30 June 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales had, either solely or jointly with other Ministers, responsibility for a total of 1,288 appointments to various public bodies and authorities in Wales, of which 222 were filled by women.

Ambulance Service, Gwynedd

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the outcome of the discussions between his staff and Gwynedd health authority in relation to the problems facing that authority in maintaining the ambulance service; and whether he will make funds available to the authority for this purpose.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A number of suggestions were made to officials of Gwynedd health authority about the effective operation of their ambulance service and the authority's management is taking these suggestions into account in considering the future of the service.

Responses to the consultative document on regional services for north Wales, including those on the provision of fast comfortable ambulance transport, are currently under consideration and an announcement will be made in due course.

A487 (Talyllyn)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what date a decision was taken to make major structural improvements on the A487 trunk road near Talyllyn in Gwynedd; on what date works were commenced on this scheme; what was the original target date for completion of the work; and when he now expects the work to be completed.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A decision to undertake the current series of major structural improvements to the A487 was taken in 1982 when consulting engineers were appointed to carry out soil surveys and prepare three separate carriageway strengthening and stabilisation schemes. Work on the first contract started in July 1984 and, provided that adverse weather conditions do not interfere with the works, completion of the final contract is expected to be on time, before the end of this year.

HMI (Statistics)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Wales do not possess a specific degree or diploma in education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 15 April 1986, at column 350. The position remains the same with two of Her Majesty's inspectors not possessing a specific degree or diploma in education.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools are currently employed in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Fifty-six.

Hospital Beds (Costs)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Eccles, on 8 December, now make it his policy to collect central information on the annual costs of acute, chronic and geriatric beds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is not proposed to collect information in the form suggested. However, changes in the information about hospital services including financial data will start to be introduced in Wales from 1987-88. These changes broadly accord with the recommendations of the steering group on health service information and will include information on the direct costs of patient treatment services in more than 20 different specialties or specialty groupings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Shellfish and Crabs

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has conducted or commissioned to determine the concentration of poly-chlorinated dibenzodioxins (PCDD) and dibenzofurans (PCDF) in commercially caught shellfish and in crabs.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has begun a programme of research to enable it to carry out sensitive and rapid detection of these substances in the environment and in the food chain.

Tilgate Forest, Sussex

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria have been involved in the decision of the Forestry Commission to make land at Tilgate forest, Weald Forest district, Crawley, Sussex available for disposal; what account will be taken of the proposed use of the land by any prospective purchaser; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In reaching its decision to dispose of land at Tilgate Forest, Crawley, the Forestry Commission had regard to the main purpose of its sales programme, namely the rationalisation of the forest estate in the interests of improving efficiency. The Commission also took account of the guidelines issued by Forestry Ministers in 1981, which were reproduced at appendix V of the Commission's 1981-82 annual report. Whether the proposed change of use is appropriate in planning terms is entirely a matter for the local planning authority.

Horticulture Grants

Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number and value of horticulural grants for England and Wales made under the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund in 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following is the latest information available. Farm capital grants to horticultural enterprises in England and Wales under Schemes qualifying for partial EAGGF reimbursement were:

	Number of payments	Value (£ million)
1984	1,275	3·4
1985	1,054	3·7

The EAGGF reimburses up to 25 per cent. of the total grant paid. The following grant payments were also made direct from the EAGGF for horticultural processing and marketing schemes:

	Number of payments	Value (£ million)
1985	8	0·322
1986	4	0·183

Launching aids paid to horticultural co-operatives with a maximum EAGGF reimbursement of 50 per cent. were:

	Number of payments	Value (£ million)
1985	24	0·987
1986[1]	23	1·190

[1] Estimate.

Dairies (Inspection Visits)

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will review the need for dairy inspection visits by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: My official need to visit farms to check compliance with the Milk and Dairies Regulations. Milk Marketing Board test results are not a reliable indicator of compliance, and dependence on these would, in any event, be inconsistent with the line we have taken in discussion of the heat treated milk directive. More generally, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 4 December at column 1061.

Pesticide Control Regulations

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the policy of his Department towards informing farmers of the new pesticide control regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 and the consents made under them came into effect on 6 October. Considerable publicity was given to the new controls through press briefing, a press release, the wide distribution of our free leaflet "Pesticides: Guide to the New Controls", and the publication of "Pesticides 1986" by HMSO (reference book 500). Advice on the new controls is also available from ADAS advisors. A code of practice, at present under discussion with interested organisations, will provide practical guidance to farmers on how to comply with their new legal obligations. It will be laid before the House before it is issued in its final form.

Research and Development Fund

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the wording of the questions in the agricultural census used to levy funds for the research and development fund.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have received no such representations.

Intervention Storage

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out the number of United Kingdom firms with whom leasing arrangements have been made for intervention storage during the last 12 months, together with square footage space in each case.

Mr. Gummer: In the 12 months ending 30 November 1986 leasing arrangements for intervention storage have been made with 58 firms in the United Kingdom. Information on square footage is not available.

Milk Quota

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (a) the per capita consumption of cow's milk and (b) the milk quota for the United Kingdom and France in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: The milk quotas for the United Kingdom and France for each of the last three years are as follows:

	United Kingdom[1] '000 tonnes	France '000 tonnes
1984-85	15,885	26,768
1985-86	15,725	26,508
1986-87	15,725	26,508

[1] Excludes allocation from Community Reserve.

Milk is consumed as a range of products in which the butterfat and solids-not-fat proportion are different from those in whole milk and it is not meaningful to produce a single figure of the consumption of milk. However pages 95 to 103 of the fourth quarter of 1985 edition of the Eurostat publication "Animal Production" give the consumption per head of drinking milk and the major milk products for 1981 to 1984.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what formula is used to determine national milk quotas under the Common Agriculture Policy: what account is taken of population size; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Allocation of national milk quotas was in general based on deliveries to dairies in each member state during 1981 increased by 1 per cent. An additional 1 per cent. was allowed for the first year of operation to facilitate transition to the quota system. Exceptionally, national quotas for Italy and Ireland were based on deliveries during 1983, with no extra 1 per cent. for the first quota year, and 1983 was also later used to fix the level of quota for Spain. Population size was not a contributory factor, as it is clearly irrelevant. I believe quota has been determined fairly but that continuing surpluses require further cuts to be made. These should be applied equally between all member states.

EMPLOYMENT

EC Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Hayward asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Brussels on 11 December, including the agreed action programme on employment growth.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I presided at this Council. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee), represented the United Kingdom. The Council adopted an action programme for employment growth based on a text put forward by the United Kingdom, Italy and the Republic of Ireland. The programme sets the four priorities for the Labour and Social Affairs Council's future work as being the promotion of new business and employment growth, more efficient labour markets, better training for young people and adults, and more help for long-term unemployed people. First proposals under the programme are to be brought forward before the next Labour and Social Affairs Council. The European Commission will in addition be making six monthly reports to the Council and the European Parliament on progress made in the Programmes implementation.

The agreement to an action programme on employment growth is a major step forward in ensuring that the European Community makes a more effective contribution to reducing the current level of unemployment in the Community, which stands at some 16 million. Within its four priorities, the action programme sets out some 40 specific proposals for action to be taken either by the European Community or by member states, ranging from the provision of better support services for small firms to the promotion of training, counselling and guidance for the long-term unemployed.

For example, it calls for a reduction in burdens on enterprise including a review of current EC legislation in order to remove obstacles to self-employment. It includes measures aimed at improving the employment prospects of women and those of disabled people and residents of inner city areas. It endorses the need for up to two years vocational education and training for school leavers leading to recognised vocational qualifications. It also calls amongst other measures for the removal of obstacles to the further growth of part-time and temporary work and for Community-level support for efforts to establish and expand co-operatives.

The Council invited the European Commission to put forward the first of its specific proposals particularly on training and long-term unemployment before the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council under the forthcoming Belgian Presidency. The Belgian and Danish

Ministers undertook to carry forward the programme during their respective presidencies in the coming year. It will remain our aim to ensure that the action programme is translated as quickly as possible into specific measures to be taken by the Community and member states. I am placing in the Library a copy of the resolution containing the action programme.

The Council was unable to reach agreement on the draft directive prescribing four named carcinogens, due to the inability of one country to subscribe to a text supported by the other 11 member states, or on the draft directive on benzene due both to the absence of an opinion from the European Parliament and to the inability of two countries to accept proposed figures for an action level. The Council was also unable to reach agreement on the draft decision of the EEC/Yugoslavia co-operation agreement.

The Council reached agreement on the allocation of extra resources to the Council's actions to combat poverty following the accession to the Community of Spain and Portugal.

Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

55. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to review the resources and staffing available to Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The resources and staffing of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate are the responsibility of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive subject to the limits set by the Government on their total manpower and running costs. A recruitment competition for up to 20 nuclear installations inspectors is at present under way.

Skillcentre (Deptford)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Paymaster General (1) what courses are currently offered at the Deptford skillcentre; how many places are available on each; and how many of these places are currently filled;

(2) how many places for (a) bricklayers and (b) carpenters and joiners have been available at the Deptford skillcentre in each year of its operation;

(3) what is the total capacity of the Deptford skillcentre; and how much of it is currently in use.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Polyurethane

Mr. Hardy asked the Paymaster General if he will list the circumstances in which the use of polyurethane is permitted in underground mining operations; and what representations he has received seeking approval for the use of this material underground.

Mr. Trippier: The use of polyurethane as a sealant in mines operated by British Coal is prohibited by NCB production instruction 1968/3. Its use in other circumstances is subject to the approval of a working group set up for this purpose by NCB producation instruction 1976/1. The working group has approved the use of polyurethane in personal protective equipment and as a filling for pneumatic tyres.

Her Majesty's mines inspectors advise against the use of polyurethane at other mines, and this advice is accepted.

Unemployment (Monklands, West)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Paymaster General if he will give in percentage terms the latest available figures for unemployment in the Monklands, West constituency; if he will break these figures down between male and female unemployed and long-term unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested because percentage unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Monklands, West constituency as at 9 October 1986. This information is also in the Library.

	Male	Female
Unemployed for over one year	1,658	461
Total unemployed	3,498	1,521

Jobstart Scheme

Mr. Boyes asked the Paymaster General how many males and females have been offered jobs as part of the jobstart programme by region; how many males and females have left the jobstart scheme; and how many leaving have immediately become unemployed.

Mr. Trippier: Jobstart offers long-term unemployed people a financial incentive to take jobs they might not otherwise consider. Applicants normally obtain a job and then apply for the jobstart allowance. The numbers of people successfully applying for jobstart since the scheme started on 1 July until 5 December are listed in table 1:

Region	Male	Female	Total
East Midlands and Eastern	162	73	235
London	47	20	67
North West	439	202	641
Northern	167	45	212
Scotland	155	123	278
South East	102	53	155
South West	104	39	143
Wales	150	74	224
West Midlands	238	82	320
Yorkshire and Humberside	223	70	293
National Totals	1,787	781	2,568

The numbers of people who left the jobstart scheme during the same period are listed in table 2:

Region	Male	Female	Total
East Midlands and Eastern	1	0	1
London	0	0	0
North West	3	2	5
Northern	3	0	3
Scotland	0	1	1
South East	2	0	2
South West	2	0	2
Wales	1	2	3
West Midlands	0	1	1
Yorkshire and Humberside	3	1	4
	15	7	22

Information about what happens to people who leave the jobstart scheme is not currently available.

Pay Increases

Mr. Meacher asked the Paymaster-General what has been the pay increase in each year since 1979 of (a) manual workers, (b) non-manual workers below executive grades, and (c) executives, including bonuses where appropriate.

Mr. Trippier: The available information is from the new earnings survey and is shown in the table:

Percentage increase in gross weekly earnings of full-time adult[1] [2] employees—Great Britain

April	(a) Manual workers	(b) Non-manual workers excluding occupation groups I, II and VI[3]	(c) Non-manual workers occupation groups I, II and VI[3]
1979-80	+20·2	+24·5	+26·7
1980-81	+ 9·5	+17·2	+11·8
1981-82	+ 9·3	+ 8·0	+10·8
1982-83	+ 7·5	+ 9·2	+ 9·9
1983-84	+ 7·8	+ 7·3	+10·3
1984-85	+ 7·0	+ 6·7	+ 7·9
1985-86	+ 6·7	+ 7·9	+10·0

[1] Whose earnings are not affected by absence.
[2] Females aged 18 and over and males aged 21 and over from 1979-1983 males and females on adult rates 1983 onwards.
[3] The occupation classification used in the New Earnings Survey does not separately identify executive grades; occupation groups I, II, and VI cover Professional and related supporting Management and Managerial (excluding General Management).

Work Permits

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General whether a decision has yet been made to continue after the current year the special annual quota of work permits for workers from the dependent territories whose level of skill is below that required by the general work permit scheme.

Mr. Lee: Yes. It has been decided that the quota for 1987 will be 200—the same as this year. Within the figure of 200, no more than 150 permits will be allowed for any one territory.

DEFENCE

Sultan of Oman

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of Exercise Swift Sword carried out in November jointly with the Sultan of Oman's armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Exercise Saif Sareea (Swift Sword), a combined United Kingdom-Omani exercise took place in Oman between 15 November and 8 December and was most successful. The exercise, involving nearly 5,000 British service men, achieved its aim of demonstrating our capability for rapid strategic deployment outside the NATO area. It also enabled the three services to practice combined operations with a host nation in accordance with operational concepts evolved from the lessons of the Falklands campaign. Further work will continue on drawing together the many detailed lessons of the exercise. The success of the exercise owed much to the excellent co-operation from, and generous facilities provided by, our Omani partners, for which Her Majesty's Government and our armed forces are most grateful.

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will consider inviting the Sultan of Oman's armed forces to participate in a joint exercise in the United Kingdom during 1988 or 1989.

Mr. Stanley: We always give careful consideration to the possibility of combined exercises with our friends where there are mutual benefits to be gained and we would be happy to consider detailed proposals from Oman.

Royal Army Veterinary Corps

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the visit by his hon. Friend the Member for Kettering, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces, to the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, Melton Mowbray, on 11 December.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that because of pressure from parliamentary commitments, I was in fact unable to visit the RAVC Melton Mowbray on 11 December.

Gurkha Field Force

Sir Antony Buck asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there have been any recent developments concerning the Gurkha field force in Hong Kong.

Mr. Stanley: I am glad to announce today, on the 10th anniversary of the disbanding of the 48 Gurkha Infantry Brigade, that the Gurkha field force in Hong Kong is to be renamed the 48 Gurkha Infantry Brigade. The renaming will restore the distinguished designation of 48 Gurkha Infantry Brigade to the Army's order of battle.

Libya

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1 January his Department has been consulted by the Department of Trade and Industry regarding orders for British companies to supply Libya with equipment with possible military applications.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Consultation by meetings, phone calls and letters take place between my Department and the Department of Trade and Industry at many levels. It would not be possible to calculate the number of such consultations on any particular subject over a specific time scale.

HOTOL

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement with regard to the British Aerospace/Rolls-Royce horizontal take-off and landing project, with particular reference to any discussions within the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation concerning its nuclear weapon delivery potential.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I know of no formal discussions within NATO regarding the military potential of HOTOL, including that for nuclear weapon delivery, although those nations which are also members of the European Space Agency are undoubtedly familiar with the HOTOL concept. There is currently no United Kingdom military requirement for such a vehicle.

Radar Equipment (Iran)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts for radar equipment for sale to Iran have been signed by British companies in the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has been the consistent policy of this and previous Administrations not to give details of specific defence exports.

I can, however, confirm that no contracts have been signed for defence equipment which breach the Government's guidelines as set out in the answer given on 29 October 1985 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in reply to a question by the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel).

Rapier

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the further development of the Rapier air defence system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 13 November 1986, c. 6]: I am pleased to be able to say that we have recently placed an order with Shorts of Belfast for the supply of a new high velocity missile system, Starstreak, which will provide a further enhancement of our air defence capability into the 21st century. Rapier will provide the wide area defence umbrella under which combat units can manoeuvre. The new system will provide complementary close air defence protection, in conjunction with the Javelin system, guaranteeing the protection of important units and installations.

The Starstreak weapon system represents an evolutionary advance on the successful Blowpipe and Javelin shoulder-launched weapons systems deployed by the British armed forces and will provide an important enhancement to our capability in the face of increasingly hostile air threats foreseen through the 1990s and beyond.

This contract, worth approximately £225 million, represents the largest awarded to the company by the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence and will provide major employment opportunities to Shorts and its subcontractors throughout the United Kingdom, mainly in regions outside the south-east of England, including a number of development areas. It will provide continuing employment at Shorts well into the 1990s together with work for up to 5,000 throughout the United Kingdom with a further 5,000 jobs being maintained or created indirectly.

This contract will enable the United Kingdom to remain at the very forefront of close air defence technology and confirms Shorts as one of the foremost missile manufacturers in the world.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the book "Their Trade is Treachery" was referred to the D-notice Committee for consideration by all its members.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 310]: The satisfactory working of the D-notice system, which is voluntary, is dependent on authors and publishers knowing that their discussions with the Defence, Press and Broadcasting Committee are regarded by the Committee as taking place in confidence. For this reason, it is not our practice to state which books have or have not been brought to the notice of the Committee.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish quarterly statistics on the operation of the provision of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978.

Mr. Tom King: Statistics on the operation of the emergency provisions currently contained in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 are held by a number of different Departments. Those statistics which are readily available are set out in the following tables. The tables show that the first year in which statistics were collected in the format set out varies. These tables will now form the base line for these statistics and will be updated at quarterly intervals.

Table 1
High Court bail applications made in 1985 in respect of persons charged with scheduled offences

	Number
Number of applications	1,299
Number granted	801
Number refused	476
Other outcomes[1]	22

[1] This figure includes withdrawals and adjournments.

Table 2
Percentage of persons on bail at time of trial

	Persons charged with Scheduled offences	Non-scheduled offences
	per cent.	per cent.
1978	39	75
1979	44	78
1980	38	81
1981	40	87
1982	52	86
1983	48	89
1984	58	85
1985	57	84

Table 3: Number of persons tried for indictable scheduled offences by judge sitting without a jury, and outcome

Year	Persons proceeded against	Pleaded guilty	Pleaded not guilty	Found guilty	Found not guilty
1980	585	472	113	550	35
1981	598	490	108	562	36
1982	793	640	153	744	49
1983	638	464	174	577	61
1984	507	426	81	464	43
1985	698	552	146	625	73

Percentage pleading not-guilty found not-guilty

	Percentage
1980	31
1981	33
1982	32

	Percentage
1983	35
1984	53
1985	50

Table 4: Outcome of appeals lodged in 1985 following convictions for scheduled offences

	Number
Total number of appeals lodged	65
Total number of those appeals dealt with by June 1986	49
Appeals dismissed	19
Convictions quashed	2
Sentence varied	28
Sentence upheld	0
Appeals outstanding at June 1986	16

Table 5: Number of persons arrested by members of the armed forces under section 14 and by members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary under sections 11 and 13 and number subsequently charged

	Section 14	Section 11	Section 13	Number charged
1975	4,141
1976	8,321
1977	5,878
1978	3,692	1,186	—	384
1979	2,572	2,035	—	588
1980	1,629	1,719	—	435
1981	1,993	2,555	—	780
1982	1,288	1,901	—	361
1983	476	1,222	—	197
1984	241	1,326	—	223
1985	142	986	2	202
1986[1]	58	784	4	148

[1] To 31 October.

Notes:

Figures on sections 11 and 13 are only available from 1 June 1978.

Some of those arrested by members of the armed forces would be recorded in the RUC figures if they were subsequently handed over to the police.

Table 6: Number of occasions on which premises were searched by members of the RUC and armed forces under section 15

	Army			[2] RUC
	Occupied	Unoccupied/ Derelict	Total
1973	14,429	60,127	74,556	—
1974	19,576	52,338	71,914	—
1975	3,907	26,185	30,092	—
1976	10,749	24,190	34,939	—
1977	9,264	11,460	20,724	—
1978	6,309	9,153	15,462	—
1979	4,740	1,712	6,452	—
1980	2,960	1,146	4,106	—
1981	2,420	1,684	4,104	—
1982	2,979	1,066	4,045	—
1983	693	800	1,493	—
1984	769	513	1,282	—
1985	446	366	812	—
				11,852
1986 [1]	564	506	1,070	—
			271,051

[1] To the end of October.

[2] To end of 1985.

Table 7: Compensation payments under section 28

Financial year	Amount £
1973-74 [1]	34,156
1974-75	27,848
1975-76	122,529
1976-77	133,797
1977-78	108,890
1978-79	82,845
1979-80	148,571
1980-81	157,073
1981-82	115,375
1982-83	143,619
1983-84	174,240
1984-85	235,384
1985-86 [2]	157,893

[1] Includes payments under the Civil Authorities (Special Powers) Act 1922.

[2] To the end of September 1986.

Table 8: Persons charged with offences under the Emergency Provisions Act after having been initially detained under the Act

	Membership of proscribed organisation (s. 21)	Unlawful collecting of information (s. 22)	Training in make/use of firearms/ explosives (s. 23)	Dressing/behaving like member of proscribed organisation (s, 25)	Wearing of hoods (s. 26)
1978[1]	127	1	0	0	0
1979	134	4	2	4	0
1980	43	1	1	8	0
1981	25	2	0	0	5
1982	45	1	0	0	0
1983	21	2	0	0	0
1984	13	1	0	0	0
1985	2	0	0	0	0
1986[2]	2	2	0	2	5

[1] From 1 June.

[2] To 31 October.

Table 9: Number of requisition orders and derequisition orders under section 19

Year	Requisition Orders	Derequisition Orders
1973	0	—
1974	2	—
1975	1	—
1976	13	—
1977	5	—
1978	1	—
1979	9	—
1980	1	1
1981	5	3
1982	1	1
1983	4	3
1984	2	0
1985	16	2
1986	2	2

Departmental Land, Sprucefield

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland at what date his Department sold its land at Sprucefield; to whom it sold it: and what was the total amount realised on the sale.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland has not sold any land at Sprucefield.

ENERGY

British Coal

4. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next meet the chairman of the National Coal Board to discuss future capacity in the industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

11. Mr. McGuire asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the National Coal Board to discuss the introduction of new technology.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss a variety of issues concerning the coal industry.

17. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Energy what subjects he expects to discuss at his next meeting with the chairman of the National Coal Board.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

37. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last discussed with the chairman of British Coal the level of imports of coal into Great Britain.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal during which we discuss a number of issues.

Home Insulation grants

7. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will consider extending home insulation grants to meet the costs of basic draught-proofing around windows and doors of older homes.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend is considering with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment a number of possible changes in the coverage of the homes insulation scheme.

Nuclear Accidents

12. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for energy if completed work by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate on the post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans for nuclear accidents has been made available to Sir Frank Layfield for his consideration; how much of this work on emergency plans remains incomplete at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: It would not be proper for me to comment on Sir Frank Layfield's report until I have completed my consideration of it.

A thorough review of emergency plans continues to be carried out in the light of our experience of the Chernobyl accident, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on 24 November.

26. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for Energy if completed work by his Department on the post-Chernobyl review of emergency plans for nuclear accidents has been made available to Sir Frank Layfield for his consideration; how much of this work on emergency plans remains incomplete at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I have given the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) today.

Coal Conversion Scheme

16. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the future of the coal conversion scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department has received two formal requests to reconsider the future of the coal firing scheme. The scheme will close to new applications made after 30 June 1987.

Alternative Energy Sources

19. Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had in the Council of Energy Ministers regarding alternative sources of energy.

Mr. David Hunt: The Council of Ministers under my right hon. Friend's Presidency agreed a major new initiative for a Community approach to the development of new and renewable sources of energy on the 26 November. This will look at ways in which European collaboration can improve Europe's performance in an area which is vital to the European economies during the next century.

Acid Rain

20. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss acid rain.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board on various aspects of electricity production.

Coal Mine Accidents

21. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the fatalities in coal mine accidents in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The health and safety of its employees is a first priority of British Coal. The general trend in the number of fatalities continues to decline: there have been 10 fatalities so far this year, compared with 20 for the corresponding period in 1985-86. Fatalities in the last 10 years were as follows:

	Fatalities
1976-77	38
1977-78	48
1978-79	72
1979-80	31
1980-81	39
1981-82	34
1982-83	44
1983-84	[1]22
1984-85	[1]12
1985-86	27

Source: NCB Report and Accounts.
[1]Affected by industrial action.

Coal Industry (Employment)

22. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many persons are presently employed in the coal industry; what was the comparable figure for 1979; and what forecasts he has made for the coming year.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of men on colliery books at 22 November was 121,173 compared to 232,947 in the same week in 1979. Their future manpower requirement is a matter for British Coal; I have made no forecasts for the coming year. The chairman has, however, made clear that the task of major restructuring within the industry is nearly complete.

Voluntary Insulation Groups

25. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many voluntary insulation groups have started so far in 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: Since the beginning of Energy Efficiency Year 1986, the number of community insulation projects has risen by over 75 per cent., from 190 at the end of 1985 to 336 at the most recent count. Two hundred and thirty thousand homes have already been insulated.

Mersey Barrage

27. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress the feasibility study into the Mersey barrage is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The feasibility study work-programme was contracted in August and is now underway with the main sub-contracts placed. The first phase of the work-programme which includes identification of the preferred barrage line and an examination of possible impediments is due for completion in late 1987.

Coal Conversion Scheme

28. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received to extend the coal conversion scheme beyond June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for York (Mr. Gregory).

Coal and Electricity Supply Industries

29. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he plans to widen ownership of the coal and electricity supply industries.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government have no present plans to do so.

Offshore Oilfield

30. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many applications for the development of new offshore oilfields he has (a) received and (b) approved in the last 12 months.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: So far this year I have approved development plans for three new offshore oilfields. One further new offshore oilfield development is currently under discussion.

Nuclear Power Stations

31. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of Great Britain's electricity is generated by nuclear power stations; and what is the corresponding figure for France.

Mr. Goodlad: The proportions were 20 per cent. in the United Kingdom and 65 per cent. in France during 1985, the latest full year for which figures are available.

Sizewell B

32. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department has carried out into the financial viability of the Sizewell B nuclear power station.

Mr. Goodlad: The inspector took wide-ranging evidence at the inquiry on the economics of Sizewell B. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy will consider the report fully.

North Sea (Rigs and Platforms)

33. Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from the companies involved in the construction of offshore rigs and platforms about current and future orders in the North sea.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular touch with the companies involved in the construction of offshore rigs and platforms about current and future orders in the North sea.

Offshore Oil and Gas Industry

34. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual estimated expenditure on research and development for the offshore oil and gas industry; how much is provided by public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The estimated annual expenditure on research and development related to the recovery of oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom continental shelf is £100 million to £120 million, of which £25 million to £30 million is spent by Government on field delineation, safety, and support for the research and development of United Kingdom suppliers of goods and services. Innovative and cost redundancy technology is crucial to the full exploration and exploitation of the UKCS.

British Gas

35. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the recent flotation of British Gas.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost).

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will now provide information, in the same form as the answer of 24 May 1985 in relation to British Telecom, about all fees and commissions so far paid, or to be paid, to primary underwriters, sub-underwriters, financial advisers, legal advisers, auditors and stockbrokers in connection with the flotation of British Gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The organisations directly involved in the British Gas sale were listed in the prospectus, a copy of which has been in the Library of the House since 21 November. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Maples) on 12 December for estimates of the costs of the sale.

Solway Barrage

36. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had on the question of the Solway barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: None.

Cross-Channel Electricity Link

38. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the latest amount and value of the electricity transmitted via the cross-Channel link with France.

Mr. Goodlad: I would refer the hon. Member to the September 1986 edition of "Overseas Trade Statistics of the UK". This shows that for the period January-September 1986 1·3 terawatt hours were imported via the link at a value of £23 million.

Passive Solar Housing Technology

39. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Energy what design guidance and requirements his Department is issuing to local authorities and housing associations for new housing and housing renovation work to encourage them to use passive solar housing techniques and technology.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is supporting a comprehensive research and development programme aimed at providing detailed advice on passive solar design for both domestic and non-domestic buildings in the United Kingdom. In the next three years over 20 design handbooks, housing layout guides, books and technical reports will be published as part of our programme. In addition we are examining a number of techniques to improve technical transfer and demonstrate that passive solar design is economically attractive now.

Expenditure on passive solar this year is expected to reach £1 million, an increase of over £0·4 million from 1985-86 and grow to over £2·5 million a year by 1988-89.

Home Heating Insulation

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to help people on low incomes or on state pensions towards the cost of home heating insulation.

Mr. David Hunt: In addition to the Monergy campaign of information and advice on energy efficiency to all householders, my right hon. Friend continues to support the expansion of the voluntary sector insulation projects, which have already provided a free or low cost insulation service to over 230,000 households of elderly and other people on low incomes.

Redundant Mineworkers (Tredegar)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy if employees of the National Coal Board Tredegar engineering works have been entitled to redundancy payments from the redundant mineworkers payments scheme at any time since the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: The Tredomen Engineering Ltd. establishment is not of the type, providing services ancillary to collieries, for which the redundant mineworkers payments scheme was designed.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy why employees of the National Coal Board made redundant from the National Coal Board Tredegar workshops were entitled to redundant mineworkers payment scheme payments calculated to include their length of service at Tredomen engineering works as eligible service.

Mr. David Hunt: Entitlement to benefits under the redundant mineworkers payment scheme is governed by the terms of the relevant statutory instrument — currently SI 1986, No. 625. Eligible service is determined on the basis of total coal industry employment having regard to the requirements of article 2 of that order.

SBK Consortium

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Rochford, (Dr. Clark) Official Report, 24 November column 161, whether the Central Electricity Generating Board has increased its holding in the SBK consortium following the reduction in the holding by the Dutch consortia partner SEP.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB advise me that it has not increased its shareholding in the SBK consortium.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what volume of (a) low-level nuclear waste and (b) intermediate level nuclear waste has arisen from the reprocessing of (i) spent Magnox nuclear fuel imported from the Latina nuclear station in Italy and (ii) spent Magnox nuclear fuel imported from the Tokai Mura nuclear station in Japan;

(2) where the nuclear waste arising from the reprocessing of spent Magnox nuclear fuel from (a) Japan and (b) Italy is currently stored; and what specific plans there are to return (i) low-, (ii) intermediate- and (iii) high-level waste to the respective countries of origin.

Mr. Goodlad: The quantities of low-level radioactive waste attributable to the reprocessing of spent fuel from these reactors was given in my reply of 27 November to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) at column 302. The corresponding volumes of intermediate level waste are as follows:

	cubic metres
Italy	1,100
Japan	550

Wastes arising from the reprocessing of spent fuel are stored at Sellafield. The Government's policy with regard to the disposal of waste from the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel was given in my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 2 May 1986 at column 502.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies have been made into the technical feasibility and cost of retro fitting dry-storage facilities for spent nuclear fuel and the radioactive waste containment at each Magnox and advanced gas cooled reactor site in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB and SSEB have agreed to analyse the technical and economic aspects of backfitting dry-stores to Magnox stations following a recommendation that they should do so in the Environment Committee's report on radioactive waste. As far as the advanced gas cooled reactor stations are concerned, at the time of signing the new THORP contracts in April the CEGB and SSEB indicated their interest in building a dry buffer store for AGR spent fuel. Further studies by the boards are in hand.

Plutonium

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government regarding the uses to which plutonium produced in the Central Electricity Generating Board reactors may be put both abroad and in the United Kingdom; and if there has been any change in this policy since the reply given by the right hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Moore) on 4 February 1985, Official Report, column 206.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) on 4 February 1985, and to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 15 April 1986. The policy of this Administration on the use of CEGB plutonium has not changed since they came to office.

Departmental Publicity

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 10 December, if he will specify what message the theatre groups sought to convey about nuclear power; and to what extent his Department vets in advance the contents of the material purveyed.

Mr. Peter Walker: The message conveyed by the theatre groups sponsored by my Department is the importance of using energy efficiently by avoiding waste in the home and at school. Nuclear power is mentioned as one of the fuels used to generate electricity. My Department vets the material and provides energy efficiency project material.

Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a full set of readings and maps produced by the Meteorological Office and the National Radiological Protection Board showing the detailed path of the radioactive cloud stemming from the Chernobyl disaster over Europe during the period 26 April to 8 May; and if he will make a statement as to whether these new details have modified the Government's understanding of the effects of this disaster on the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

Copies of the readings and maps have been placed in the Library.

The assessment of the effect of the Chernobyl accident on the United Kingdom (and decisions consequently taken regarding protection of public health) were based on extensive monitoring data (and particularly on milk, vegetables and meat) from all parts of the country. The further information has not significantly modified the Government's understanding of the effects of the accident on the United Kingdom.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Brent Council Education Department

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if Her Majesty's inspectorate has any plans to inquire into personnel management in the education department of Brent council; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has asked Her Majesty's inspectorate to advise him on the quality of education received by pupils and students in establishments maintained by the Brent LEA. A series of inspections of schools in Brent is being undertaken. There will be published Her Majesty's inspectorate reports on each of the schools inspected in the normal way. The findings will then, together with evidence from other recent inspections and discussions with a range of interested parties, be pulled together into a single overall report on aspects of education in Brent.

Her Majesty's inspectorate is focussing on the actual provision of education in schools and classrooms in Brent. It is not its function directly to inspect the personnel management procedures in local education authorities, or other aspects of their internal administration. However, should evidence from the schools raise issues which, in the judgment of Her Majesty's inspectorate, appear to reflect on the ways in which the Brent LEA conducts its business, then reference to these will be made in its report. When he receives the report, my right hon. Friend will consider it carefully and, as appropriate, follow up with the LEA any issues arising.

City Technology College

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what will be the recommended composition of the governing body of a city technology college; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend will be discussing the composition of the governing bodies of city technology colleges with those who are sponsoring them financially. The sponsors will have the controlling interest.

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983 in advanced education.

Mr. Walden: A Green Paper on "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9524) was published in May 1985.

Since 1983, the number of home students in higher education has increased by 49,000 (24,000 full-time and 25,000 part-time), including an increase in the proportion studying science and engineering. This reflects continuing growth in higher education participation rates: since 1979 the proportion of 18 to 19-year-olds entering higher education has increased by an eighth and the number of mature entrants by more than 15 per cent. At the same time measures to preserve and enhance quality and to increase the cost-effectiveness of the system and its responsiveness to the needs of the economy have been pursued. Specific measures to link higher education and industry in collaborative projects have been encouraged including the appointment of more industrialists to educational bodies.

The University Grants Committee and the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals have agreed a programme of action for the energetic pursuit of necessary reforms in Britain's universities including better management, improved standards of teaching, greater selectivity in research funding, rationalisation of small departments and a review of tenure for academic staff.

The engineering and technology programme was launched in 1985 at a cost of £65 million over its first four years. It attracted donations of equipment and services from industry worth more than £24 million and by the end of the decade will provide about 5,000 extra high-quality places on courses in engineering and related disciplines.

The Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education has been set up to review and evaluate initial teacher training courses for which criteria have been set down.

The educational counselling and credit transfer information service (ECCTIS) has been established; and support given to the development of a computer-aided careers guidance system for graduates.

Academic validation procedures in the public sector of higher education were reviewed by a committee under Sir Norman Lindop and the Government's position was set out in a statement on 17 March 1986.

Resources were provided for "new blood" in universities, for the enhancement of equipment in selected centres of high quality research, and for support of programmes of efficiency studies in universities and in public sector higher education.

Through the IT in HE programme, providing an additional 5,000 places at higher diploma, first degree and postgraduate level, in electronic engineering and computer science. Launching, in collaboration with other Departments, the engineering and technology programme which, by 1990, will provide a further 5,000 places on high quality degree courses.

At the Open university the number of undergraduate students increased in 1983 from 63,000 to 66,500; a level which has been sustained since. An additional £4·8 million has recently been made available to the university over the next three years, which will enable it to increase its annual intake from 20,500 to 22,000 in 1987 and 24,000 in each of the years 1988 and 1989. Roughly two thirds of all new students will take mathematics, science and technology courses. One and a half million pounds of this new money will enable the university to develop courses and materials to help improve mathematics, physics and technology teaching in schools. The Open university also plays an important role in meeting national needs through its continuing education programme. The number of courses within this programme has increased from 69 in 1983 to 152 in 1986.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983 in primary education.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's principal policies and achievements in respect to primary and other schools were set out in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) published on 26 March 1985. Primary schools have benefited from education support grant programme activities such as those concerning the teaching of science in primary education, and pilot projects to enrich the curriculum provided in primary schools in rural areas. The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 promotes the effective management of maintained primary schools and teaching quality within them.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983 in secondary education.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's policies and achievements in respect of secondary schools were set out in the White Paper "Better Schools" (Cmnd. 9469) published on 26 March 1985, in particular, the definition with greater clarity of the objectives and range of the curriculum, financial support for a pilot initiative to promote technical and vocational education for 14 to 18-year-olds in schools and colleges and the support of a pilot programme for improving the education of lower attaining pupils.

Developments since then have taken further the introduction of a new system of examinations at 16 (the general certificate of secondary education) based on national criteria; the AS level examination to broaden A-level studies; the development through specially financed pilot projects of records of achievement for all school leavers.

The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 promotes the more effective management of maintained schools and teaching quality within them.

The setting up of city technology colleges will be a further significant development.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal achievements of his Department since 1983 in further education.

Mrs. Rumbold: Many of the Government's achievements in further education have been set out in the White Papers "Training for Jobs" (Cmnd 9135), "Education and Training for Young People" (Cmnd 9482) and "Working Together – Education and Training" (Cmnd 9823), and in the Green Paper "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s". Principal among them are:

(i) the introducion of the certificate of pre-vocational education, which provides an attractive new option for young people who are not taking A-levels or specifically vocational courses;

(ii) the formation of the Business and Technician Education council with an important role in the preparation of skilled manpower;

(iii) the establishment, with the Department of Employment, of the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to improve the structure of vocational qualficiations;

(iv) the encouragement of employers to make better use of colleges, and of colleges to be more responsive to the needs of employment, through, for example, the College-Employer Links Project and the involvement of the MSC in the planning of work-related non-advanced further education (NAFE);

(v) the establishment, with the local authority associations, of a joint study to improve efficiency in NAFE. Related to this, the Department is encouraging, with education support grant, the introduction of computerised management information systems in colleges;

(vi) the establishement of a scheme of in-service training grants for further education lecturers;

(vii) the provision of education support grant to further the use of information technology in NAFE.

The implementation of the PICKUP programme to promote vocational education and training to update or broaden the skills of those in mid-career; the programme has brought about an increase in updating education of about 10 per cent. a year, especially in the areas of technology and business studies and has targets for much larger increases in the future.

The establishment of some 350 local collaborative projects in which educational institutions and firms work in partnership to offer adult training and updating—a joint venture between PICKUP and the MSC within the Government's adult training campaign.

The initiation of REPLAN for meeting more effectively the education needs of unemployed adults.

The promotion of the establishment of a national unit for the development of continuing education.

Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the actions taken by his Department since the publication of the COMA report, designed to assist in the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Mr. Dunn: The aim of all health education in schools is to encourage pupils to adopt healthy lifestyles and to avoid behaviour which may lead to ill health, including coronary heart disease. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he considers health education an essential aspect of schools' work. The detailed content of the curriculum is for local determination. Schools already teach pupils about the need for a healthy diet, the avoidance of obesity and the importance of exercise, as advocated in the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA). Recent discussion papers by Her Majesty's inspectorate on "Home Economics from 5 to 16" and "Health Education from 5 to 16", have emphasised the messages of the COMA report. The Department has also drawn the report to the attention of the school examining boards and asked that they take its recommendations into account in their home economics syllabuses.

Schools Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in England (a) have had no experience of teaching in schools, (b) have had experience of teaching in primary schools and (c) do not possess a specific degree or diploma in education.

Mrs. Rumbold: The overwhelming majority of Her Majesty's inspectors are appointed on the basis of a sound academic background and proven success as teachers in schools or establishments of further and higher education. As Her Majesty's inspectors are appointed in mid-career, many have taught successfully in a number of different phases of the education service. In exceptional cases, Her Majesty's inspectors with a non-teaching background may be appointed on the basis of experience in other aspects of education which the inspectorate considers necessary to have within its numbers. The Department does not maintain in readily accessible form records of all the previous education and employment of Her Majesty's inspectors. The detailed information requested could thus only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Higher Education

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the number of students in public sector higher education, divided into men and women, in each of the last five years for which information is available;

(2) what is the number of students currently enrolled on access courses to higher education in public sector higher education institutions;

(3) what is the number of public sector higher education students divided into men and women in each of the different modes of full-time study, sandwich study, and part-time evening and part-time day study, in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: Figures for each of the last five years for the number of public sector higher education students in England divided into men and women in each of the different modes of study are shown in the table. No data are available on enrolments on access courses to higher education.

Enrolments in Public Sector Higher Education: England

Thousands

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Men
Full-time	74·8	79·2	83·8	86·1	88·0
Sandwich	39·7	41·1	42·2	42·2	46·9
Part-time Day	93·9	92·9	93·9	92·8	94·2

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985
Evening Only	28·4	28·2	28·9	28·2	29·5
Total	236·9	241·3	248·9	249·4	252·7
Women
Full-time	76·2	83·0	88·4	92·4	94·9
Sandwich	13·1	14·6	16·2	17·4	18·2
Part-time Day	28·5	30·3	33·8	36·7	44·0
Evening Only	13·7	15·1	15·3	14·2	18·0
Total	131·5	142·9	153·7	160·6	175·2
Men and Women
Full-time	151·0	162·2	172·2	178·5	183·0
Sandwich	52·8	55·6	58·5	59·6	59·2
Part-time Day	122·4	123·2	127·7	129·5	138·3
Evening Only	42·1	43·2	44·2	42·4	47·5
Total	368·4	384·2	402·6	410·0	427·9

Note: Owing to rounding totals may not agree with the sum of component figures.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the number of students in public sector higher education in England and Wales for each of the last five years for which figures are available, divided into the 19 different programmes utilised by the national advisory body; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the percentages and full-time equivalent numbers of public sector higher education students in (a) full-time study, (b) sandwich study, (c) part-time evening and (d) part-time day, in the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) what the numbers of students in public sector higher education have been in the past five years for which figures are available, in each of the subject programmes 01, 12, 13, 14, 16, and 17, as used by the national advisory body; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what are the numbers and percentages of public sector higher education students studying (a) in polytechnics and (b) in other colleges in each of the last five years for which figures are available in each of the subject programmes utilised by the national advisory body;

(5) what the percentage change in the number of first-year students on public sector higher education courses in the three areas of art, design and performing arts has been in the last five years for which fugures are availble; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what is the number and percentage of students aged 21 years and over who have been in public sector higher education in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(7) what is the number of students in higher education studying fine art in each of the last five years for which figures are available, divided into the university and public sector of higher education; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what is the number and percentage of mature students aged 25 years and over who have been in public sector higher education in each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(9) what is the number of higher education students in (a) Great Britain as a whole and (b) England and Wales in the academic years 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85, together with the best estimates for 1985-86, and divided into the figures for universities and public sector, the latter split into the figures for polytechnics and other colleges;

(10) what is the number of first year students in public sector higher education in England and Wales for each of the last five years for which figures are available, as compared to the number of first year students in the universities over the same period, and divided into the subject classification utilised by the University Grants Committee and national advisory body, respectively;

Mr. Walden: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Institute of Terrestrial Ecology

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if will publish in the Official Report the levels of Government funding for the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology in 1984-85, 1985-86 and the estimated totals for 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will give a breakdown of funding in those years to the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology research stations in Scotland.

Mr. Walden: The funding of ITE as a whole and for the ITE research stations in Scotland is as follows:

£ million

	1984-85	1985-86	[1]1986-87	[1]1987-88
ITE funding from all sources (Includes non-Government fundings)	5·9	5·8	6·0	[2]5·6
the funding for the ITE stations in Scotland included in the above total (of which major capital building).	(0·3)	(0·5)	(0·7)	(0·6)
	1·8	1·5	1·5	[2]1·5
	(0·4)

[1] Estimated.
[2] These lines represent the aggregates of grant-in-aid from the Science Budget of the Department through the Natural Environment Research Council, and income from other Departments for commissioned research and from other non-Government sources.

ENVIRONMENT

Hampton Court (Fire)

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he has taken in the light of his statement on 3 July about the fire at Hampton Court palace on 31 March; and if he will make another statement.

Mr. Ridley: The damaged part of the building has been made safe and weatherproof. The Property Services Agency has been working in close co-operation with English Heritage and other experts to rescue as much as possible from the debris, and to protect or remove all artifacts which can be saved and restored, including nearly all the Grinling Gibbons carvings which will be repaired separately. Work is progressing on the detailed plans for re-building and restoration. Tenders for the main contract will be sought towards the end of 1987. Meanwhile, work on the restoration of stonework damaged in the fire has already started. The palace is open to the public, who can visit the great majority of the public rooms.

Work has been proceeding as speedily as practicable to ensure that the lessons learned with regard to automatic fire detection systems are put to good effect in protecting the palace, and other historic buildings, against the possibility of further such accidents.

Sir John Garlick, in his report which was the subject of my statement on 3 July, recommended a number of technical improvements to the existing automatic fire detection system which he considered would achieve the most immediate improvement in security against fire. All the control panels have now been modified in accordance with these recommendations so that switches cannot be left in the 'reset' condition; lockable covers have been installed; and a memory facility has been incorporated. Work is either completed or in hand on all other recommended improvements.

I have received further detailed advice from my officials on the design, installation, and commissioning of the automatic fire detection system at Hampton Court palace.

This has confirmed that the design specification was consistent with the relevant British standards at the time. It is now evident that the problems of handing over a system of this size and novel technical development were under-estimated and the procedures were not sufficiently clear. The lessons we have learned will be applied at Hampton Court and at other buildings for which my Department is responsible.

Sir John Garlick also recommended that there should be more effective fire drills involving the fire brigade and the staff responsible for the supervision and maintenance of the palace. Following further discussions with the fire brigade, this recommendation has been fully implemented. Improved fire drills have already taken place and arrangements have been made for more effective training, including the provision of more comprehensive advice on the efficient operation of the automatic fire detection system.

Sir John Garlick's recommendation that there should be an operational audit to check technical systems of this kind in operation after installation is of more general relevance. The Property Services Agency is currently undertaking such checks of the automatic fire detection systems installed in other buildings on the Government's estate, and considering whether such systems should be installed in buildings which have none at present.

Copies of Sir John Garlick's report have also been sent to other interested bodies, including English Heritage, the Historic Houses Association and the National Trust, so that they can consider its relevance to them.

In addition to his more technical recommendations, Sir John Garlick made a number of recommendations for improving management arrangements within Hampton Court palace, and suggested that consideration should be given to merging the custody guards and warders who are presently employed by the Property Services Agency and by DOE (Central) respectively. As a first step, the operational instructions to the custody staff and other staff are being thoroughly revised.

I have also studied the conclusions and recommendations in the Garlick report relating to wider issues of responsibility and accountability, and I am considering further the scope for closer co-operation between those concerned with the management of the palace.

"Paying for Local Government"

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a further statement about the outcome of consultations on the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government.

Mr. Ridley: There were 1,217 responses to the Green Paper in England. Though opinions varied more than twice as many people wanted to abolish domestic rates as wanted to keep them. The community charge received considerably greater support than any other replacement for the rates. I have placed in the Library a summary of the responses received.

The rating system has been under review for too long. The time has come to decide, and to embark on reform. I therefore confirm the Government's intention to introduce legislation as soon as practicable and no later than the first session of the next Parliament: to abolish domestic rates and introduce the community charge; to move to a uniform national non-domestic rate poundage; to simplify the system of Government grants to local authorities.

Many of those who responded to the Green Paper expressed concern about practical problems associated with the community charge. I believe that these worries are either overstated or can be overcome. I have therefore also placed in the Library a document which sets out how the community charge will work. The document deals with many of the practical questions that have been raised, and takes account of discussions with interested organisations held during the consultation period. There will be the opportunity for further discussion about the detailed arrangements before legislation is introduced.

Water (Nitrate)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report on nitrate in water will be published; and what action the Government plans to take following the report.

Mr. Ridley: The report of the nitrate co-ordination group is being published today. It gives a comprehensive picture of the present situation on nitrate in water and a valuable assessment of the many options which have been suggested for stabilising or reducing nitrate levels. I have placed copies in the Library.

The Government are considering the report and its recommendations. Ministers will be examining the potential consequences of the various approaches which the report considers. This will include exploring the practicality of protection policies aimed at limiting the nitrate reaching water resources in vulnerable areas, as well as assessing the merits of further treatment of blending water supplies.

Byker District Heating Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's involvement in the Byker district heating experiment.

Mr. Tracey: The Department currently has no direct involvement in the Byker district heating scheme.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the efficiency of the Byker district heating system; and what comparative information he has relating to other district heating schemes and to individual (a) gas, (b) oil and (c) electric central heating systems.

Mr. Tracey: The Department has no information concerning the efficiency of this scheme. General information on the efficiencies of such schemes is available from a BRE paper, CP34/78, "The Performance of 15 District Heating Schemes". General information on the performance of individual gas, oil and electric heating schemes is available from a BRE report, "An Economic Assessment of Energy Conservation Measures in Housing" (1984) and from the Department of Energy's Energy Efficiency Office publications on "Cutting Home Energy Costs".

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the installation cost of the Byker district heating scheme pipe network, the cost of maintaining the network and the cost of renewing and replacing the network; and what are the existing and forecast costs of keeping the pipe network operational.

Mr. Tracey: These are matters for the local authority. We have no reliable information available.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the costs of insuring the Byker district heating system;

(2) what information he has about the quality of workmanship on (a) the original Byker district heating system pipe network and (b) the replacement of the network;

(3) what information he has regarding (a) the present fuel cost to tenants on the Byker district heating scheme and (b) the comparable cost of individual central heating systems;

(4) what assessment he has made of the medium-term financial implications of the costs of the Byker district heating scheme for (a) the tenants, (b) Newcastle city council and (c) his Department; and what figures he has showing the cost implications involved in conversion to other heating systems.

Mr. Tracey: None. These are matters for the local authority.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proportion of the costs of the Byker district heating system are met by (a) his Department, (b) the Newcastle city council, (c) the tenants of Byker and (d) others;

(2) what information he has relating to the operation of the boiler plant at Walbrook terrace, Newcastle; and how much of the costs of operating the boiler so far have been met by (a) his Department, (b) the local authority, (c) the tenants and (d) others.

Mr. Tracey: The Department does not contribute directly to the running costs of the Byker district heating scheme. There is an allowance for management and maintenance expenditure in the calculation of entitlement to housing subsidy. The local authority has discretion to fix heating charges as with other services.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, what evaluation or studies he has of the Byker refuse derived fuel pellets project; and what conclusions he has drawn from the experiment.

Mr. Tracey: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the true cost of producing refuse derived fuel pellets at the Byker plant; what is the market value of the pellets; and how much is being charged to Byker district heating system for them;

(2) since commissioning for how many days the Walbrook terrace, Newcastle boiler plant has been operational; and for how many days it has been out of service.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the local authority.

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made to Newcastle city council regarding the privatisation of the Walbrook terrace district heating boiler plant.

Mr. Tracey: I am always interested to see proposals from local authorities for contracting out services, but the Department has made no specific approach to Newcastle city council about the Walbrook terrace plant.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to visit and inspect any of the ancient monuments in the care of his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: The majority of ancient monuments for which my right hon. Friend is responsible are managed on his behalf by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission (English Heritage). My colleagues and I at present have no specific plans for visiting these monuments during the coming months, but opportunities to do so arise regularly. For instance, I recently visited Stonehenge to discuss plans for its future development with the chairman of English Heritage. The royal palaces are managed directly by my Department. I plan to visit the Tower of London in the New Year.

Compulsory Purchase (Unfit Property)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for seeking to amend legislation to enable owners of unfit property to receive market value compensation in case of compulsory purchase.

Mr. Tracey: The Green Paper "Home Improvement —A New Approach" (Cmnd. 9513) published last year proposed that market value compensation should be available as of right to the owners of unfit dwellings subject to compulsory purchase. This remains our intention, but the necessary amendments to existing primary legislation must await a suitable opportunity.

Lead (Petrol)

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the preliminary indications from his monitoring of the incidence of airborne emissions of lead of the changes resulting from recent EEC directives reducing the lead content of petrol.

Mr. Waldegrave: Air lead levels in the first quarter of 1986 have dropped to an average of 0·29/ug/m³ compared with an average 0·563/ug/m³ during the same period in 1985. This is a direct consequence of the Government's decision to reduce the maximum permitted lead content of petrol by 60 per cent. from 0·4 to 0·15 gm/l, with effect from 31 December last year.

Housing Repair Grants

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the age of a property for which a tenant can apply for a housing repair grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Green Paper, "Home Improvement — A New Approach" outlined proposals to make discretionary assistance for both repairs and improvements available to properties built before 1940, as part of a wider reform of the home improvement grant system. We are giving further consideration to this and other possible changes to the system in the light of the Green Paper and responses to it.

Parish, Town and Community Councils

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by district the names of new parish, town and community councils which have been created since local government reorganisation in 1974.

Mr. Chope: I am sending the hon. Member lists of changes in local government areas and status since 1974, which include the information requested on the creation of parish councils. Parish councils are not required to notify my Department when they adopt the status of a town for their parish. The creation of new community councils in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, and in Scotland for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Home Owners (Southwark)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures available for the number of home owners in the borough of Southwark; how this compares with the years 1979 and 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The latest available figures for Southwark are from the 1981 Census which counted 13,111 households who were owner-occupiers, representing 15·8 per cent. of all the households present on census night.

Since 1979 there has been an unparalleled growth in owner-occupation in Britain, as a result of the measures introduced to enable tenants to buy council housing. From April 1979 to March 1983, 688 council houses and flats in Southwark were sold; the latest figures received show 752 were sold from April 1983 to March 1986.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to make financial resources available to objectors participating in the public inquiry into the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive plans for a low-level nuclear waste repository at (a) Bradwell, (b) Elstow, (c) Fulbeck and (d) Killingholme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. It is not Government policy to give financial aid to objectors at public inquiries of this nature.

Deprivation in Rural England

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the full and unedited report commissioned by his Department, "Deprivation in Rural England" by Brian McLaughlin.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. I am arranging for a copy of the final agreed report to be placed in the Library.

Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds have been made available in each of the last five years to the Devon branch of the council for small industries in rural areas; and if he will make a statement about the proposed funding for the next financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: COSIRA's budget is managed on a national basis and is not broken down by county. The level of funds used by COSIRA in Devon is therefore not available.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds have been made available in each of the last five years to the council for small industries in rural areas; and if he will make a statement about the proposed funding for the next financial year.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas is financed by grant aid from the Development Commission. The grants provided in each of the last five years are shown in the table:

£ 000

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	[1]1986-87
Operational Expenditure	4,750	5,269	5,458	5,907	6,357
Loan Fund Replenishment[2]	—	1,500	—	450	650
Redundant Building Grant Scheme[3]	10	500	1,192	1,770	1,300

[1] Approved Estimate.
[2] Loan Fund replenishment is made available to finance loans that cannot be financed from capital repayments.
[3] The administration of a scheme of grants for the conversion of redundant buildings for approved purposes is undertaken by CoSIRA on behalf of the Development Commission.

Note
CoSIRA's Grant aid for the financial year 1987-88 is currently under consideration.

Peak Park

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent over the last four years by the Peak district national park; and from what sources this funding has come.

Mr. Waldegrave: Details of the Peak Park joint planning board's expenditure is set out in the board's annual reports for the years in question. Gross expenditure is as follows:

	£
1982-83	2,645,061
1983-84	2,980,752
1984-85	3,126,642
1985-86	3,293,513

The board derives its income mainly from precepts on Derbyshire Staffordshire and Cheshire county councils, and (from 1 April 1986) Sheffield, Barnsley, Kirklees and Oldham metropolitan borough councils. These councils in turn receive national park supplementary grant from central Government. In additional the board receives some income from charges for services and grants from the Countryside Commission.

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people serve on the Peak park planning board; how many of these were appointed by him; how many were appointed by outside bodies; if, in each case, he will state how many live in the area covered by the board; and if he will give similar figures for each of the 10 years since the formation of the Peak park planning board.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information for the current year is as follows:

Appointing Authority	Number of members	Number living within National park
Secretary of State	11	7
Derbyshire County Council	8	1
Cheshire County Council	2	—
Staffordshire County Council	2	1
Sheffield City Council	2	—
Barnsley Borough Council	1	—
Kirklees Borough Council	2	—
Oldham Borough Council	1	—
West Derbyshire District Council	2	2
High Peak District Council	1	—
Staffordshire Moorlands District Council	[1] 2	—
Macclesfield District Council		—
North East Derbyshire District Council		—
	34	11

[1] on rota basis

Comparative figures in respect of the 11 appointments by the Secretary of State in previous years are as follows:

	Number
1974-75	3
1975-76	3
1976-77	3
1977-78	2
1978-79	3
1979-80	2
1980-81	3
1981-82	4
1982-83	7
1983-84	6
1984-85	7
1985-86	6

Records of the addresses of local authority members in previous years are not held centrally.

Planning Authorities

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to increase the powers of local planning authorities (a) to specify whether land should be developed with single storey, two storey or multi-storey accommodation and (b) to control the density of development, its height and external appearance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. I am satisfied that adequate powers already exist for these purposes.

Water Authorities

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what directions he has given to the 10 water authorities in England and Wales in respect of sales of (a) operational and (b) non-operational land; and what instructions he has given to water authorities on land sales procedures to be adopted so as to safeguard the future of land of scientific interest or amenity value.

Mr. John Patten: Operational land is not sold. It is an objective of the water industry, agreed in 1982, that they should dispose of land which is surplus to their operational requirements. Water authorities were last reminded of this objective in April 1985 in a letter setting out Government policy. At that time my Department and the Welsh Office also commended to authorities the adoption of guidelines for notification to interested bodies, particularly in relation to national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table, by water authority, of the specified rate of return on value of net assets for each year from 1979 to the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table, by water authority, showing the annual percentage increase in water rates charged to consumers for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 23 October at column 930.

Lindane

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ban the use of lindane for the treatment of timber in buildings.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am aware that there is concern that the use of lindane for the treatment of timber in buildings may be hazardous to bats which roost in roof spaces. Bats are already protected under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and the Nature Conservancy Council is required under the Act to advise on proposed actions which may be hazardous to bats. I understand the NCC intends, in the near future, to present a review paper on lindane and bats to the expert committees that advise Ministers on pesticides. In the light of advice, my colleagues and I will consider whether it is necessary to impose further restrictions on the use of lindane.

Residential Development (Planning Conditions)

Mr. Heddle: asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to prevent local planning authorities having granted outline consent for residential development, imposing onerous conditions in association with their approval of reserved matters.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 278]: We gave comprehensive guidance to local planning authorities on the use of conditions in circular 1/85. Conditions should only be imposed where they are necessary, relevant to planning, relevant to the development to be permitted, enforceable, precise and reasonable in all other respects.

We have introduced in the Housing and Planning Act 1986 a provision which will enable a developer who considers any condition to be onerous to apply to the planning authority to have it removed. He can also if necessary appeal to the Secretary of State.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make it his policy in future to announce the final rate support grant settlement for England earlier in the financial year than December; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that there will be three full months between his announcement of the final rate support grant settlement for England for 1987-88, and the date by which councils have to set a rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 12 December 1986, c. 283]: It is my policy to announce the rate support grant settlement for a year as soon as possible to do so, in the light of all the circumstances.

Plutonium

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which organs of Cumbrians were found to have higher than average levels of plutonium in the recent survey by Mr. Don Popplewell of the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

Plutonium tissue concentrations were generally higher in Cumbrians than in subjects from other areas of the country, levels being significantly higher in the femur, lung and liver.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Initiatives (Women)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those initiatives of his Department which have been of benefit to women, since 1979, the cost or estimated cost of these initiatives, and the proportion of the total budget of his Department this represents.

Mr. Moore: There has long been a policy of equal opportunities for women in my Department. In addition, there have since 1979 been a number of initiatives benefiting women, managed jointly with the Department of the Environment (including the PSA). These include:

- measures to reduce the risk of discrimination in recruitment and promotion procedures;
- management and special skills training courses for women;
- provision for part-time working and job-sharing;
- more favourable reinstatement provision for those who have resigned;
- special leave arrangements for maternity, domestic and other reasons;
- progressive introduction of flexible working hours;
- establishing an equal opportunities unit.

The costs of these and other relevant initiatives are not centrally recorded.

Police National Computer

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to reduce the time lag between the registration of a new car and the recording in the police national computer of the details of its ownership.

Mr. Moore: The Police have not brought to my Department's attention any concerns about the time taken to provide the police national computer with information about the registered keepers of new vehicles. Technological developments should allow for a faster service in the future.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what resources in staff and money are currently engaged in work towards the development of heavy goods vehicle front underrun guards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the current financial year about 1·5 man-years of TRRL research staff effort will be used in the development of heavy goods vehicle front underrun bumpers, at an estimated cost (including contract and support services) of about £70,000.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce a mandatory specification for the fitting of energy absorbing front underrun protection to heavy goods vehicles to reduce the severity of injury to car and light van occupants in heavy goods vehicle/car accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport and road research laboratory is carrying out research into a practical specification for effective energy absorbing front underrun guards. When this work is completed we shall decide whether these devices should be required on all new lorries.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many car and light van occupants were injured in the current year in accidents involving the fronts of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures for 1986 are not yet available. The data for 1985 are as follows:

Occupants of cars and light vans injured in accidents involving the fronts of heavy goods vehicles: by severity: Great Britain: 1985

	Number
Fatal	294
Serious	1,216
Slight	3,927
Total	5,437

Barking-Gospel Oak Railway Line

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what effect he estimates the proposed reduction in the public service obligation grant for suburban rail services will have on the Barking-Gospel Oak railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: PSO grant is not paid for any specific service. The chairman of British Rail has assured me that the agreed levels of quality of service to the customer can be achieved within the new grant targets.

M40 (Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to widen the two-lane section of the M40 in Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Buckinghamshire county council, at the Department's request, has undertaken a preliminary study of the need and scope for widening the dual two-lane section of M40 between junctions 4 (Handy Cross, High Wycombe) and 5 (Stokenchurch). We are studying the county council's report. We will announce our conclusions in due course.

Road-Related Expenditure

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the underspend by his Department on road-related projects in the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We intend to spend the full provision of £894 million. We shall spend significantly more this year than last when expenditure was about 18 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1978-79.

Dover Harbour

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he and his Department have had, within the past six months, with Dover harbour board concerning the renewal of the rail operating agreement with Dover harbour; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he and his Department have had with British Rail, within the last six months, concerning the renewal of its operating agreement with Dover harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions. Negotiations over the rail operating agreement at Dover are entirely a matter for the harbour board, British Rail, and the ferry operators concerned.

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he and his Department have had with Sealink, within the past six months, concerning the maintenance of a rail operating agreement with Dover harbour; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Negotiations between Sealink and Dover harbour board are entirely a matter for them.

Road Schemes (Grant)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to modify the criteria for schemes eligible for transport supplementary grant to include small schemes on local roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant provides assistance from central Government funds for schemes on local roads of more than local importance, that is, which are used regularly by drivers from outside the area. The criteria apply equally to major projects and to works costing less than £1 million. In the current year 11·5 per cent. of expenditure accepted for grant (£41·3 million) was for such minor works.

Roadside Environmental Improvement Initiative

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to announce his roadside environmental improvement initiative.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am today announcing, in association with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, a national initiative aimed at improving the appearance of roads and providing better amenities for motorists. It will tackle roadside eyesores by a package of improvements, including landscaping, tree planting, the creation of picnic areas and measures to deal with fly tips and litter. The work will be undertaken by community programme teams supervised by highway authorities; for safety reasons it is particularly important that the operators involved should be carefully supervised. The work will be over and above the normal programme of the Department and local authorities. This initiative will form part of the United Kingdom 2000 national initiative and will complement the environmental improvement projects promoted by voluntary organisations.

The Department is today writing to local authorities in England encouraging them to promote suitable community programme projects under this initiative, both on their own roads and on the trunk roads and motorways for which they act as the Department's agents.

Tyre Tread Depths

Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what criteria were used in fixing the current minimum United Kingdom tyre tread depth; and what account was taken of the relevant provisions in other European countries;

(2) what evidence led the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), to conclude that increasing the United Kingdom's minimum tyre tread depth would not be of any significant benefit to road safety;

(3) if he will give figures on which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley), based the statement that a substantial cost to road users would result from a change in the tyre tread regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current minimum tyre tread depth requirement in the United Kingdom as in most European countries is 1 mm. Our regulations do allow less tread than this on the outer edge of the tyre which often gets worn at a slightly faster rate than the tread in the middle. Recent work by the transport and road research laboratory has confirmed that such tyres within the legal limits provide as much adhesion as tyres with 1mm tread over the whole width. The research findings were discussed with trade and motoring organisations in February. Tyre replacement is a significant part of motoring costs. Additional wear permitted may prolong the useful life of tyres for several thousand miles.

We do not encourage the use of tyres up to the limits of legality.

Blackwall Tunnels

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken of the Blackwall tunnels as part of the trunk road network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 4 December.

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any requests from the London Docklands Development Corporation for improvements to be made to the Blackwall tunnels to cater for traffic arising from developments or planned developments by the corporation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on Thursday 11 December.

East London Road Assessment Study

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will visit the Archway road, Holloway road, St. Paul's road and Balls Pond road areas of London, following the publication of the east London road assessment study.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to do so.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, North of 3 December, Official Report, column 587, concerning the east London road assessment study, if he will state the exact date of publication, and the cover price.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 12 December with a cover price of £60.

Leaflets setting out the main findings are free of charge. Copies of the full reports on east London are also being made available for those who wish to consult them in the four town halls and 42 public libraries throughout the area.

M25

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for Transport if pursuant to his answer on 9 December, Official Report, column 325, he will publish the M25 traffic flow figures during peak hours between junctions 4 to 8 and junctions 24 to 30; and if he will make a statement concerning his Department's assessment that certain sections of the M25 do not justify three lanes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The lastest available figures are set out in the table. They are for the sections between junctions. No figures are available for the flows through the junctions. This information is derived from automatic counting loops which are progressively being installed in all sections of the M25 and appropriate slip roads.

Junctions 4—8

Peak hour flows in October 1986:
Junction 4—5 5,255 vehicles per hour.
Junction 5—6 6,960 vehicles per hour.
Junction 6—7 7,944 vehicles per hour.
Junction 7—8 counting loops not yet installed.

Junctions 24—30

Peak hour flows, for 3-7 November 1986.
Junction 24—25 counting loops not yet installed.
Junction 25—26 7,647 vehicles per hour.
Junction 26—27 7,403 vehicles per hour.
Junction 27—30 counting loops not yet installed.

The M25 reduces to dual two-lanes only at those junctions specified in my reply of 9 December at columns 133-34. When they were designed it was expected that a substantial proportion of the traffic on adjacent sections would leave or join the motorway there, reducing the flow through the junction itself. Between the junction slip roads two lanes in each direction were considered sufficient. Integrating the nearside lane with the exit or entry slip road in such cases can enable traffic to flow more smoothly. There is no indication that inadequate provision has been made at these junctions.

Nevertheless, traffic is being closely monitored and, as I announced on 28 August, further studies will be undertaken as necessary.

Drink-Driving

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation stipulating a legal alcoholic limit of 20 mg/100 ml for all drivers under 20 years old; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Road Safety

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what material is made available on road safety issues to children of pre-school age; if he will consider the development of pre-school traffic clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has for several years issued road safety advice to parents of pre-school children, rather than to the children themselves, on the basis that our advice is that these young people should not go out on the roads unaccompanied. It is general rather than detailed advice.

We have developed a range of more detailed materials suitable for pre-school traffic club members. It would encourage and assist parents and very young children to work together on acquiring and developing road safety skills for life.

We are now intent on determining whether it is viable to establish an independent traffic club scheme to deploy such items on a national basis, and will be considering various proposals put to the Department by potential organisers.

Motor Cycle Accidents

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the number of motor cycle accidents in which skidding in adverse conditions is a contributory factor; if he will introduce a requirement for the mandatory fitting of anti-lock braking systems to motor cycles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1985 58,000 motor cycles, scooters and mopeds were involved in accidents. Of these, 10,000 skidded; 3,700 of these did so in wet, snow or ice conditions.

Trials of anti-lock braking devices are taking place. When their reliability is proven, we will consider mandatory requirements.

Motor Cycles (Crash-worthiness Performance Standards)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation prescribing motor cycle crash-worthiness performance standards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Research at the transport and road research laboratory has identified a number of measures to improve the crash-worthiness of motor cycles. We are giving priority to the development of a performance standard for effective leg-guards which could then be prescribed in regulations.

Child Pedestrian Casualties

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to reduce the continuing upward trend of child pedestrian casualties in the 10 to 14 year age group.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: One of the priority tasks for the Government's road safety review, now virtually complete, has been to identify effective means of reducing casualties among pedestrians generally. Almost all pedestrian casualties occur on local roads. The most significant impact in the foreseeable future is likely to come from the vigorous application of engineering and traffic management measures which create a safer local environment for all pedestrians. I have just sent to all highway authorities a major revision of the accident investigation and prevention manual which gives them up-to-date advice.

The Department is planning research from 1987 on new methods of training 10 to 14-year-old pedestrians in safe crossing behaviour.

A40 (Congestion)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce traffic congestion on the A40 between the M40 and A40(M).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has given high priority to a series of schemes to improve this route. Draft orders have been published for three of the four surface level junctions that have still to be tackled. I am writing to my hon. Friend with details.

CIVIL SERVICE

Management Reform

54. Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement on the response by the Civil Service to management reform.

Mr. Luce: An enormous change is taking place in management methods in the Civil Service, through the financial management initiative, the personnel work reforms, and specific improvements in value for money. I am greatly impressed by the way that the Civil Service itself has accepted the need for these changes and is making them work.

THE ARTS

National Museums and Galleries (Lending)

41. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Minister for the Arts if he will encourage wider lending of exhibits from the national museums and galleries to local museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: I am anxious to encourage greater public access to museum and gallery collections, and was delighted to announce last week that the Museums and Galleries Commission intends in 1987 to introduce a new scheme to encourage touring exhibitions. I also welcome the co-operation between the national museums, the MGC and the area museum councils to enable objects to be lent between collections. Such loans are greatly facilitated by the Government's indemnity scheme.

Film Appreciation

42. Mr. Dormand asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he intends to take to increase the appreciation of film as an art form.

Mr. Luce: I have been able to increase the funding of the British Film Institute to £10·03 million for 1987-88. The institute's appointed tasks include the encouragement of the development of the art of film in Great Britain.

European Cultural Policies

45. Mr. Alexander asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the development of European cultural policies under his presidency.

Mr. Luce: Four resolutions aimed at increasing co-operation between member states were adopted by Ministers responsible for cultural affairs when they met in November. These concerned European Cinema and Television year (1988), the protection of architectural heritage, the encouragement of business sponsorship and the conservation of works of art. Glasgow was nominated European City of Culture for 1990. Work also continues on other cultural matters — for example, encouraging translations of literary works and a programme of discussions initiated by the European Commission aimed at identifying areas for Community co-operation in the audio-visual field.

Marketing

46. Mr. Stevens asked the Minister for the Arts what resources he plans to make available to encourage better marketing of the arts.

Mr. Luce: I have made available £250,000 in the next financial year for an arts marketing scheme to encourage better marketing among arts organisations. Full details will be announced on 17 December.

Arts Centres

47. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the number of arts centres in (a) 1979 and (b) the latest available date.

Mr. Luce: The information requested is as follows:

	Number of Arts Centres in Great Britain
1979	172
1986	312

For additional information I refer my hon. Friend to the Arts Council's directory of arts centres in Great Britain, copies of which I have placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

Scottish Arts Council

49. Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I have had three useful exchanges with the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council during 1986 and look forward to seeing him in the future.

News International

50. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts what reply he has received from the Audit Commission to his letter concerning the ban imposed by certain councils in public libraries on News International Publications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Audit Commission has informed me that the district auditors are alert to the situation and will be considering whether there is any action they need to take.

Arts Council Budget

51. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received following his announcement of the 1987-88 budget allocation for the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) earlier today.

Expenditure

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of total consumer expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: In 1984, the last year for which figures are available, consumer expenditure on the arts was estimated, on the basis of figures collected by the Central Statistical Office, to be in the region of £1·5 billion.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Authorities (Membership)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what specific steps he intends to take to ensure (i) that more women are nominated and appointed to membership of health authorities and (ii) that the membership of health authorities reflects the communities they serve;

(2) which specific interested bodies he will invite to submit nominations for membership of health authorities;

(3) on what basis he intends to invite hon. and right hon. Members to submit nominations for membership of health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: We would propose to make a parliamentary announcement, as on previous occasions, inviting right hon. and hon. Members to submit nominations for membership of regional health authorities. We will also consult, in accordance with schedule 5 of the National Health Service Act 1977, the relevant local authorities, universities, representatives of the main health professions, federations of workers organisations and the regional health authorities themselves. In seeking nominations we will be asking specifically for more women. In making appointments we will continue to ensure that the membership of regional health authorities reflects a reasonable balance of factors relevant to the communities served including geographical coverage and social and ethnic mix. Similar procedures will be adopted in making appointments to the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

Members of district health authorities are appointed by the regional health authority.

Health Education Council

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the annual budget of the special health authority proposed to replace the Health Education Council.

Mr. Newton: In view of the intention that the proposed authority should in due course assume responsibility for a continuing programme of public education on AIDS, its budget is likely to be substantially larger than that of the present council. My right hon. Friend has promised an announcement about the new authority shortly.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to make any staffing changes, including the position of director, as part of the proposed replacement of the Health Education Council by a special health authority.

Mr. Newton: Generally it is intended that Health Education Council staff should be offered employment by the special health authority; but it will be for the authority to determine the most senior appointments.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the provision for the continuation of the Health Education Council's current programmes when it is incorporated into the National Health Service as a special health authority.

Mr. Newton: In announcing the new special health authority, my right hon. Friend's stated intention was that there should be no loss of momentum in the work of the Health Education Council. Officers of the council have been asked to assume that all current commitments and programmes will be taken over by the new body.

AIDS

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what provision he will make for hospice facilities for acquired immune deficiency syndrome victims;

(2) whether disused hospital and health facilities will be made available to voluntary organisations for use as hospices for acquired immune deficiency syndrome victims.

Mr. Newton: Hospices provide a tranquil environment in which terminally ill people can end their days with dignity, and they provide an invaluable service. But they do not provide the only form of care needed by terminally ill people since many of these, whether AIDS sufferers or not, will not wish to receive this form of care, or may need types of acute care that hospices may not be able to provide. We shall expect health authorities to have regard to the need for terminal care services as part of a broad range of facilities which they will need to make available to meet the differing needs and wishes of AIDS patients.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of (a) the number of hospital beds and (b) other National Health Service resources, that will be required over the next 10 years in (i) London and (ii) the rest of England and Wales to deal with persons suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Newton: Beds and other health care resources do not have to be dedicated specifically for this purpose. The wide spectrum of illnesses associated with the infection will be treated in district general hospital in-patient and out-patient facilities and by the family practitioner and community health services. The need for resources for services for AIDS sufferers will be taken into account when allocations to health authorities for the coming year are decided, but it is not possible to take a sensible view at this stage of requirements in 10 years time. These will depend on our success in containing the spread of the infection.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much additional money he has made available to each of the metropolitan regional health authorities; and for what purposes.

Mr. Newton: Total funds available to the hospital and community health services in England will increase by £626 million in 1987-88. This is a 6 per cent. increase in cash, representing 2·2 per cent. more in real terms. My right hon. Friend hopes to announce details of allocations to individual regional health authorities shortly.

NHS (Resources)

